Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand, the Senator is favoring the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. VANDENBERG. On the contrary, I said I did not think it was possible at this time to change the system at all. We are not free agents in voting at the moment for this appropriation. I shall vote for the appropriation. I shall not vote for amendments at the present time. I am not free to vote for amendments, because the responsibility for administering the system has been transferred by the Congress to the President. He must have the funds and the instrumentalities necessary to administer it. All I am saying is that when we come to the time, a few months hence, when we have a chance again as free agents to pass upon the kind of system under which relief shall be administered, I hope we shall not come to it quite as devoid of effectual preparatory information as we have heretofore, but, on the contrary, that we shall approach it with some degree of conclusive study on the part of Congress as to what the correct answer ought to be.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is familiar with the fact that his party favored that exact method in its platform?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I decline to discuss this problem on the basis of parties, and I think I ought to be entitled to discuss it not on the basis of parties.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that the Senator very greatly regrets that he ever mentioned anything that had, directly, indirectly, or remotely, a political basis.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I will be very happy to talk politics with the Senator at any time——

Mr. BLACK. But the Senator——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have the floor. I will be very glad to talk politics with the Senator any time politics ought to be talked.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Not at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan declines to yield further.

Mr. VANDENBERG. When America confronts the type of situation which the Senator from North Carolina has described, when we confront the probability that next year's relief appropriations have got to continue to be in the $3,000,000,000 class unless we change the system under which appropriations are made, and when it follows from that fact that a continuingly unbalanced Budget will continue to flood this country with debt-backed paper money, which, in turn, means that we are proceeding squarely into an inflationary movement that can crucify the people of this country worse than any natural disaster ever did, I think I am entitled to present the subject not on the basis of any political consideration whatever but on the basis of what I believe to be the unescapable challenge of the hour.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will yield to either of the Senators. Let them shake the dice for the opportunity, if they desire.

Mr. BLACK. I am afraid the Senator would consider that to be political.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a very friendly inquiry?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sure the Senator from Alabama is entirely friendly; I cannot let that intimation pass.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not correct that, in view of the remarks he has made, the conclusion he would have us reach is that this body should adopt the resolution submitted by the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], which is now before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, calling for the appointment of a committee of this body to investigate completely the question of unemployment, the causes therefor, and the methods of solution?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would cordially concur, and I should hope, Mr. President, that by the time we reach the moment when we must decide upon the system which is to be operated next year we may have the authentic and dependable development of information which will at least give us an opportunity to choose the method on the basis of whether or not an earnest, effective effort to pay as we go may be made.

I happen to have the conviction that it is entirely possible for us to be more liberal to the legitimate victims of distress at less expense in net result if we abandon the duplicating, wasteful, often experimental, concentrated Federal control over relief and return to the basis of State authority. I think that if we could eliminate the element of experimentalism, which has been personified in the debates of the last 3 days—and everyone knows what I am talking about—if we would eliminate the element of duplication of management which is inevitable so long as the paralleling systems exist, if we would eliminate waste, if we would eliminate exploitation, if we would eliminate the elements that have no bearing whatsoever on the money or the relief that finally reaches the poor victim of disaster, I have the conviction that we would be infinitely further along toward that point to which we must soon come, as the Senator from

North Carolina has clearly demonstrated—the point where we cease to run a permanent national deficit which we pay off with bond-backed money, which inevitably accumulates itself in dangerous reserves, which, in turn, threaten an inflation that would be worse than any flood that ever heretofore has engulfed this country.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure, knowing the Senator from Michigan as I do, that he would not want to make an assertion here unless he could support it with facts and evidence. But the Senator has just stated that under the present method of distribution for the relief of distress there is widespread waste and exploitation. We heard these matters discussed so frequently during the campaign that surely both the Senator and I have tired of them, but I think he ought to substantiate the serious charges he now makes by presenting facts as to exploitation and waste in his own State and in other States. The Senator will remember that Mr. Knox in his campaign speeches—the Senator from Michigan reminded me of those speeches when he was predicting the dire results that are coming within a year or so if our present policies shall be pursued—Mr. Knox predicted that the moment Mr. Roosevelt should be elected the country would collapse. The Senator from Michigan has generously put off the collapse for a year or two, but we have no evidence and no facts before us. I will support the Senator in changing the system if the charges of exploitation and waste, which he so eloquently made a moment ago, are well-founded.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator quarrel with the President of the United States for asking his advisers to answer the three fundamental questions which I read regarding the existing situation?

Mr. WAGNER. No; I say inquiry should be made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly; and that is all I am asking.

Mr. WAGNER. But the Senator has stated here that there has been waste——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course there has been.

Mr. WAGNER. And that there has been widespread exploitation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Everybody who has two eyes knows there has been.

Mr. WAGNER. Such assertions were made by the Senator and his party throughout the last campaign. I listened with attention to the addresses made, but not in one instance was there given a specific case of such waste and exploitation. The people know more than some of us think they do about what is going on in this country; they know how the distribution of relief funds has been made in their localities; and therefore the only result of the appeal of the Senator and his party was that the President was overwhelmingly reelected, because the people set aside or disregarded these generalities which had no basis of fact.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So what?

Mr. WAGNER. So sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am glad the Senator is going to follow his own advice. [Laughter.] I suppose he is entitled to feel when he has illuminated a subject that the debate is over and that when he has pontificated there is nothing further to be said. I have such a high regard for him that I can almost understand why he would have that opinion of his own conclusions. But, Mr. President, the fact still remains that although there was a campaign, which I have no interest in the world in recalling [laughter], there remains something that transcends campaigns, and there ought to remain an opportunity for a Senator of the United States, regardless of his party, to rise to his feet when he is filled with the conviction that, as the Senator from North Carolina himself has demonstrated today, there is a problem knocking at the door of the American conscience and knocking at the door of the responsibility and judgment and obligation of the Congress of the United States. As the able junior Senator from Washington has indicated, if there is a committee which can bring here the type of sustained information for which the Senator from New York asks—and that is what we ought to have, sustained information—let us, by all means, have it not only mobilized but let us have some conclusive recommendations that will offer some relief for the difficult problem that we confront. That is all I rose to say.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of the merits of the resolution referred to by the Senator from Washington and approved by the Senator from Michigan, with which I am in sympathy, does the Senator think there can be any accurate information as to the number and location of unemployed persons in the United States obtained by any congressional committee or by any other means except it be obtained where the unemployment actually exists?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I urge the necessity of a complete census, and I think it ought to be taken in such manner that it shall be constantly kept up to date.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the amendments which were debated yesterday proposing to increase the amount of relief funds to be appropriated in the pending bill.

There being no objection, the amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. WHEELER, Mr. BULOW, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. BONE, Mr. POPE, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. LUNDEEN, Mr. SCHWARTZ, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. FRAZIER, Mr. NYE, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, viz:

On page 5, line 6, after "thereof", insert the following: "and to provide for the relief of flood sufferers."

On page 5, line 6, strike out "$790,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200,000,000."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reference has been made to a resolution introduced by me at the present session of the Congress seeking the appointment of a special committee to study and survey the entire problem of unemployment and all the issues connected therewith. I think the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] will have opportunity to vote for that resolution. It is now pending before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, having been reported today, I believe, from the Committee on Education and Labor and then referred to the other committee.

However, if for any reason that privilege is denied to those Senators who have so favorably expressed themselves today, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and I propose, before the day is over, to introduce a joint resolution calling for the appointment of an unemployment and relief commission. It is the purpose of some of us at least that the entire subject of unemployment and relief shall be thoroughly studied by the Congress of the United States in the hope that the Congress itself will lay down its own policies and its own plan for dealing with this most tragic and perplexing problem.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] may be agreed to by the Senate. I am firmly persuaded that it presents a nonpartisan issue notwithstanding the very interesting debate which has just preceded my rising.

I think if credit could be taken by the Republican Party for the amendment it would benefit the party politically. So far as I am concerned, as a member of that party, I should like very much to claim here that the amendment embodies Republican doctrine and to see it carried through by what I regard as one of the finest bodies of men in the world.

However, I can hardly claim for it that merit. On the contrary, a study of the platforms of the two major political parties, I believe, will persuade any fair-minded man that the amendment involves a nonpartisan matter. Really the broad general objective back of the introduction of the amendment, as stated by the learned Senator from North Carolina, ought to establish that fact beyond peradventure; but, in order to refresh our memories, I am going to take time to invite attention to both platforms in the year 1936 covering the subject matter, because I think that in principle the amendment carries out the purpose of both platforms.

The Republican platform and its plank on relief has already been referred to by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], but I read it again:

The necessities of life must be provided for the needy, and hope must be restored pending recovery. The administration of relief is a major failure of the New Deal. It has been faithless to those who most deserve our sympathy. To end confusion, partisanship, waste, and incompetence, we pledge—

1. The return of responsibility for relief administration to nonpolitical local agencies familiar with community problems.

2. Federal grants-in-aid to the States and Territories while the need exists upon compliance with these conditions: (a) A fair proportion of the total relief burden to be provided from the revenues of State and local governments; (b) all engaged in relief administration to be selected on the basis of merit and fitness; (c) adequate provision to be made for the encouragement of those persons who are trying to become self-supporting.

3. Undertaking of Federal public works only on their merits and separate from the administration of relief.

4. A prompt determination of the facts concerning relief and unemployment.

Turning now to the plank of the Democratic platform of the same year, I read:

UNEMPLOYMENT

We believe that unemployment is a national problem and that it is an inescapable obligation of our Government to meet it in a national way. Due to our stimulation of private business, more than 5,000,000 people have been reemployed, and we shall continue to maintain that the first objective of a program of economic security is maximum employment in private industry at adequate wages. Where business fails to supply such employment, we believe that work at prevailing wages should be provided in cooperation with State and local governments on useful public projects, to the end that the national wealth may be increased, the skill and energy of the worker may be utilized, his morale maintained, and the unemployed assured the opportunity to earn the necessities of life.

Turning back to the platforms of 1932 to ascertain the attitude of the two parties at that time, I find that the nearest reference in the Democratic platform to unemployment is this:

We advocate * * * the removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest.

The Republican Party declared, on the subject of unemployment and relief, as follows:

True to American traditions and principles of government the administration has regarded the relief problem as one of State and local responsibility. The work of local agencies, public and private, have been coordinated and enlarged on a Nation-wide scale under the leadership of the President. Sudden and unforeseen emergencies such as the drought have been met by the Red Cross and the Government. The United States Public Health Service has been of inestimable benefit to stricken areas.

There has been magnificent response and action to relieve distress by citizens, organizations, and agencies, public and private, throughout the country.

To provide against the possible failure of local and State agencies, the President has urged the Congress to create an emergency relief fund to be loaned temporarily to any State on a showing of actual need and temporary failure of its financial resources.

The Republican Party indorses this record and policy and is opposed to the Federal Government entering directly into the field of private charity and direct relief to the individual.

A significant thing about this matter is that the plank of the platform which I have last read was adopted by a great concourse of people in a Republican convention on June 14, 1932; and the relief measure which has been referred to here as a Democratic measure, and which I believe is known as the Wagner Act—the act for the relief of destitution—became a law on July 21, 1932, a little more than 30 days after that declaration by the Republican Party.

The upshot of it all is, and the only use I make of these platform expressions is to indicate that this amendment is in line with the declarations and actions of both great parties, both being responsible for what they said and for what they did. So it seems possible for the Senate to deal with the question free from partisanship, viewing it with the grand objective in mind which the author of the amendment has continually and repeatedly mentioned during the course of his remarks in support of the amendment.

I could not sit here and listen to that inspiring oration dealing with fundamental things, dealing with one of the most important and essential traditions of the people of the State, which I in part represent, and remain entirely silent. I think no person whose State fought for 27 years for the recognition by Congress of the independence of its statehood, no person whose State financed itself entirely throughout the American Revolution, when it contributed much to the common cause of liberty, could listen to what has taken place here today without reaction, without expressing himself and undertaking to add as much power as he might be able to add to the arm of the author of the thought embodied in the pending amendment.

Mr. President, we of Vermont believe that a State which insists upon its independence ought always to be willing to carry the responsibility of independence; and it is but a commonplace expression of that fundamental principle to come in here and vote for an amendment to this appropriation bill which requires every State which calls upon the Federal Government for aid to be willing to give a certificate that it is temporarily embarrassed, that it is in actual need, and that for the time being it cannot find the funds wherewith to carry on the functions which independence places on its shoulders as a responsibility.

As the amendment has already been modified, it now reads:

Provided, That no part of the sum of money hereby appropriated or authorized to be appropriated for relief shall be allocated, paid, or expended for any State, city, or county project or a project of any other governmental subdivision or agency unless and until such State, city, county, governmental subdivision, or agency shall have filed with the President of the United States a certificate of necessity, showing that such State, city, county, governmental subdivision, or agency is unable to provide for the employment of its unemployed; such showing to set out the tax rate, the income, the indebtedness, the budget of such State, county, city, governmental subdivision, or agency, and the number of unemployed therein; and thereupon a finding by such authority as the President shall designate that such State, county, city, governmental subdivision, or agency is in actual need of the aid of the Federal Government to provide for its unemployed.

To my mind, that is a type of amendment to which Senators from all the States of the Union ought to be glad to subscribe. It calls upon them to do nothing more than to carry their own burden, to bear their own responsibility, and maintain their own dignity and their own independence.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is always very entertaining. He paid the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] a great compliment, and expressed entire agreement with the Senator's amendment in philosophy and in practice, and had about convinced me that I ought to vote for it; and yet, when interrogated as to whether he was going to support the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, he said no; he was not going to vote for it.

The Senator from Michigan then absolutely blasted by his argument the existing method of Federal relief from the very beginning. He showed how it was all wrong, how it was based upon the wrong principle, how it had been filled with waste and graft and exploitation; and yet, when pressed, he says he is going to vote for its continuance as carried in the bill.

The Senator from Michigan observed that he thought it was proper for a Senator to rise when filled with a conviction. I took down his words—"filled with a conviction." If the Senator from Michigan will tell me what that conviction is, I shall try to follow it. He is first filled with the conviction that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina should be adopted. It is right and sound. It is on the right principle. Then the Senator from Michigan stabs the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, perhaps not with the dagger of Brutus—because he has not been heretofore a follower of the Senator from North Carolina—but he stabs it to the death, because I assume he will control all the votes on the Republican side. He has killed the amendment by his speech, because he is going to vote against it. He then indicts the whole system of Federal relief from the beginning. According to him, it is filled with exploitation, and he is "filled with a conviction", but nobody seems to know what the conviction is.

Mr. President, I now desire to make a few dry and desultory observations about the general subject of relief.

I grant you that if we could put into the hands of local authorities not alone the administration but part of the burden, we should have an ideal condition, because when local people found "chiselers" on the rolls there would always be a lot of local busybodies who would go around and tell the board, "You ought to cut off Bill Smith," and thus they would eliminate a great many of the "chiselers." The chief motive would be, however, that the local people would be paying part of the relief and costs, and I think the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is striking directly at the vitals of this problem when he seeks to set up a commission or a body to make an inquiry into a long-time permanent plan whereby there would be put into the system the idea of local contribution, because so long as the relief authorities are spending the other fellow's money they do not have much obligation of being careful about whether or not Bill Jones is entitled to some of it. If Bill Jones should be registered in Michigan and belonged to the organization, I am afraid the Senator from Michigan would not insist on his being cut off the rolls.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I concur in the remark of the Senator from Texas that whatever plan is adopted surely should include some sort of local contribution.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest, however, that it is not fair to require all the expense to be borne by the local authorities.

Mr. President, we have gone a long way in America since 1776. We have proceeded far in the industrial development of America. We have not now the same agricultural civilization that Mr. Jefferson helped to found, and whose independence General Washington with his sword achieved at the Battle of Yorktown. Senators talk about local contributions. Chicago and New York and Philadelphia are rolling in their wealth and their income. It does not come out of the ground of New York and Chicago and Philadelphia. The wealth which is gathered there is contributed by all the little precincts and sections throughout the United States; and when we have a national collapse in America it is just and fair that those who, during times of prosperity, during good times, have been receiving rich revenues from the "provinces", shall contribute something of their accumulations to the relief of those who, during the years, have been sending their earnings to those great centers to increase their importance and their wealth.

The Senator from Michigan is quartered yonder in Detroit, a city of great wealth because of the automobile industry; but does Michigan make the automobile industry? Every little fellow out in the hills of Montana and in the hills of California and in the parched deserts of some of the Western States, who has a little automobile that has a flat tire, who perhaps is down now in the dirt and sand jacking it up and trying to fix it, has helped to make Detroit the great center that it is. When he is in trouble should not Detroit send back a small portion of that automobile money he has been sending to Detroit all these years in order to relieve the hunger and distress of that man and his family?

I repudiate the doctrine that all these funds have to come out of the local communities. There may be a little county over in the woods, already impoverished, its industries gone, its hillsides washed away, and its population suffering a period of distress and suffering and want, and we are asked to go down there and say, "You are already starving to death, you are already destitute, and if you get any relief you have to get it from the local authority." I do not subscribe to that doctrine at all.

I hope very much that some system like that proposed by the Senator from New Mexico may be worked out. I know, as everyone else knows, that in the administration of the vast sums which have been appropriated for relief necessarily there has been waste, because the funds have been handled by human beings, and we did not have anyone else into whose hands we could put the handling of the funds. The Senator from Michigan was not in power, and we could not turn the job over to him [laughter], so we had to put it in human hands, and when we are administering funds in that way and there are such things as influence, "pull", and "drag", and lies and deceit, someone will get on the rolls who ought not to be on the rolls, and I am sure there have been such on the rolls. On the other hand, I doubt not there are many who did not get on the rolls, either because of pride or because of the regulations, who should have been on the rolls.

The organization was a new organization; it was hastily set up. No doubt the officials have had many men and women in the organization who were dreamers, who probably are professional welfare people who could not make a living to save themselves if turned into private industry, and I am sure they have "put over" much "dream stuff" which should not have been allowed; but in spite of it all, in spite of the waste and in spite of the chiseling, who is there who can now say that, confronted as we were with an emergency requiring haste, we could have done better than we have done?

I know that the Senator from Michigan, after emerging from his study and from his lecture tours and from his conferences with the press, can devise a great scheme, but he has not now any scheme. He says the present system is all wrong, and someone inquires, "Have you any proposition to submit?" He replies, "No; I have not any, but I am going to think up one."

He has been thinking up around here for about 4 years, and if his timing gear is in good order, it seems to me, he ought to get a plan and get it pretty quickly.

The Senator from Michigan is one of the most wonderful rhetoricians I have ever heard. He can fill the circumambient ether with more adjectives and more ponderous, prolix pronouncements, and more profound generalities than almost any other Senator on the floor. But he does not "pint" out. He is like the colored preacher I once heard of. There was a vacant pulpit and colored ministers were being tried out for it. So a lot of them came around and preached sample sermons. One colored preacher, with a long Prince Albert coat and a celluloid collar, had worked himself up into a perfect frenzy physically, mentally, and spiritually, and when he concluded, the deacons were consulting as to how they liked it. One colored deacon said, "Yas, sah; he is a mighty good preacher all right, I reckon; he sure do talk loud, and I like that fine loud talk."

Another deacon said, "Yas, I know he talks loud, but the trouble with him is he don't 'pint' out." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is the difficulty with the Senator from Michigan; he does not "pint" out. He does not tell us what to do. I should like to vote for a definite, clear-cut, well-thought-out plan, and when I saw the Senator from Michigan rise in his place with a serious look on his face and a statesmanlike twist to his general attitude, I though that we would have a solution of the problem.

Of course, the immediate question is the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

"Are you for it?"

"No; I am against it."

"Are you against the bill?"

"No; I am for it."

Well, what is there to discuss? He is following the leader here, the chairman of the committee. He is following Mr. Hopkins. He is applauding Hopkins every time Hopkins makes a ruling; yet he rises here and delivers himself of a broadside on the whole philosophy of Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. President, my own view is that this problem is national in its scope. If we could work out a plan, however, under which we would put a part of the burden on the local authorities, it probably would be a good plan; I am not prepared to say what the proportion should be, but some of the burden; it is not important really how much. If we put on the local authority the obligation to pay 10 cents, they will not wish to spend that 10 cents any more than they would wish to spend a quarter. If we put some of the burden on the local authorities and make them contribute out of their own funds by laying the taxes on the backs of their own constituents back home, we will very largely solve the question of administration, as to who shall be on and who shall not be on the rolls.

Then the Federal Government must recognize that in the intricate and complex civilization in which we now live, in which industrially and commercially State lines have largely vanished, there is no State that can wrap itself around with its own boundaries and say, "I am going to live unto myself. I will not contribute anything to that hungry man just across the boundary line a hundred yards from my State, although he is my customer, he buys from me, perhaps, and he makes my factory wheels turn. He feeds the men who are employed by me by the contribution of his patronage."

We cannot do that. The Federal Government must contribute a large amount to any plan we develop. I would not have the Federal Government turn over these funds to the local authorities and say they can spend them any way they desire. Our responsibility to the people of the United States requires that when we make a contribution of Federal funds we must lay down rules and regulations by which those funds shall be expended, and we cannot divest ourselves of the responsibility. There should always be an accounting to the Federal authority by whatever local agency handles the fund, in order to show that the regulations have been met.

I very much regret that the Senator from Michigan has not seen fit to honor me with his presence. I remained in the Chamber and listened to him for a considerable time, and I advised him before I began that I desired to submit some remarks in which I should take the liberty, probably incidentally, of mentioning the speech of the Senator from Michigan. But he, no doubt, finds the enjoyment of the cloakroom, or a conference with a newspaper man over the great speech which he delivered, more congenial and more pleasing to his taste than to sit in the Senate, where he is paid to sit, or is supposed to sit, and listen to the remarks which I have undertaken to make in respect to the Senator's suggestion.

I commend to the Senator the idea of giving attention to transactions in the Senate. I have always found that there are two sides to questions. We usually have one side ourselves, and someone else has another, and if the Senator would occasionally open up the windows of his soul and the windows of his mind to the thoughts and suggestions and arguments of another I am sure that some contribution would be made to the solution of the great problem with which he is now struggling, and has been struggling, no doubt, for 4 years, and with which he will continue to struggle without any apparent progress, either from a practical standpoint or from a philosophical standpoint.

Mr. President, these are some of the views which the Senator from Texas entertains with reference to the subject before the Senate.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, at this late hour in the afternoon I am hesitant to delay the Members of the Senate very long. I should like to feel that I was better prepared on this, almost the first occasion I have addressed the Senate since becoming a Member of it, but I cannot allow the opportunity to pass without making a few brief remarks upon the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

I am glad the Senator has again displayed his courage by bringing to the Senate at this time this very important matter. He points out the direction in which I believe most of us feel we would like to go. I thought for a little while during the discussion that there might be a contest over the amendment; but, as I listened to the debate as it proceeded on the part of the able Senators who participated, I came to the conclusion that the amendment itself is probably intended only to focus attention on a problem, and that it will not be taken seriously at this time.

I am intensely opposed to the amendment. Before the debate shall come to a close this afternoon I hope the Senator from North Carolina will make an effort to secure a record vote on the amendment in order that we may know for ourselves how Senators feel about it, and that we may give to those outside some idea of the feeling we entertain on the subject of relief.

I have found myself sometimes voting favorably upon proposals to enlarge appropriations for relief, but such occasions have been rare. I said a moment ago that I felt I wanted to go in the direction pointed out by the amendment, but I agree at least with that portion of the address of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in which he suggested that this is not the time nor is this the way to do so.

I thought that as conservative men sat in the afterglow of the last campaign and national election, probably there might be a little change of opinion on their part. I thought they might come to a realization that persons beyond the confines of Washington in all the States of the Union were concerned with what was to be done about relief and the other problems of government. As the distinguished and able and courageous Senator from North Carolina read a part of the Democratic platform, I remembered that I sat with him on the committee on resolutions in Philadelphia, and I remembered some provisions of the platform that must linger in the minds of all those who were there. I desire to read just one sentence from that platform which has been read heretofore this afternoon. It was read by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who favors the pending amendment.

> We believe that unemployment is a national problem and that it is an inescapable obligation of our Government to meet it in a national way.

It seems to me that language answers the point pretty well. Like the Senator from North Carolina, I endeavor to keep in mind the fact that I am a Senator of the United States from the State of Connecticut. I endeavor to keep that fact in mind all the time. I do not wish to forget, when problems like the one now before us arise, that they might require a little different treatment than ordinary problems receive. In my local campaigns and in the campaign just concluded I pointed out to the people of the State of Connecticut, who are a little better off than are the people of some other States, that the relief problem was our problem, as it was the problem of the other States. Those who took the contrary view maintained that Connecticut was paying $2 for every dollar it received; that our contributions to the total amount of moneys paid into the Federal Government were far in excess of what we could ever hope to receive in return.

What was said by those who took a view contrary to mine was true. I hope that God, in His goodness, will ever keep matters that way; that Connecticut will always pay out more than she takes back. I hope also, however, that the people of Connecticut will continue to believe, as I think they do, that their favorable situation gives them a greater burden of responsibility, and that they owe something to the people of the less fortunate States. I know that we in Connecticut pay in more than we receive because we have the other 47 States of the Union as a market place. The same thing is true of North Carolina, which contributes so much money to the Federal income. Some of the money we pay in comes from people in other places—not from Connecticut or from North Carolina.

I had not intended to speak so long, Mr. President, and I have drifted somewhat away from that which is uppermost in my mind as I read the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. Theoretically, I presume the proposal contained in the amendment is sound. The amendment is difficult to attack. But in one sentence of the proposal is the suggestion that we should not give help to States or to municipalities or to subdivisions thereof until they submit to the President a certificate of necessity, showing that they have exhausted their resources to provide for the employment of their unemployed. That is the part of the amendment about which I feel concerned.

Connecticut, as I have said, is better off than many other States. We could meet the requirements of the proposal contained in the amendment better than could some other States. However, I am sufficiently informed as to municipal government to ask myself, Where is the dividing line? Almost every municipality of any size can, after a fashion, and by tightening the strings and the reins and applying the whip, obtain money for relief for a time. It involves a continuing increase in local taxation, for that is the only means by which the local government can get money.

The burden falls principally on the man who owns a small home. We can go in that direction, and we can get the money there. We can insist that those who are now feeling some of the advantages of the better times that have been referred to, those who are enjoying a part of the prosperity which the Senator from North Carolina claimed we boasted about in 1936, shall pay. However, because of the fact that in the last analysis the only source of local income is the real estate of the communities, what can we do when those owning real estate are without funds? What can we do next after that? The amendment does not attack the problem at the right place. The amendment points out what is wrong; that there is prosperity in some parts of the country and distress in other parts of the country.

Mr. President, in the debate yesterday the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] most eloquently and sympathetically showed what conditions are on many farms. He told us of the misery there existing. Surely there is no prosperity there. A similar situation prevails in industrial and urban centers. People are crying for aid there also. Those are the people whom this relief bill is intended to help.

Then there are their neighbors who have partially emerged from the distress generally prevailing, or who have not been pressed down so far as to know distress at its worst. Are we going to burden the backs of those people by laying at their doors this thing which a little while ago we called a national problem?

Mr. President, this amendment simply points out the trouble. Its adoption would not effect a cure but would intensify the trouble. If adopted, it would break the people back home who, because of the wisdom and the courage of this administration, have come up from the depths of despair and now see the light. The result of adopting the amendment would be again to drive them back to where they were. There is another way to accomplish what we wish to do.

The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absolutely right in his contention that Congress should give consideration to an alternative proposal, to a new system, in an effort to find the way out. It is not going to be found in the curtailment of relief moneys so long as some of our citizens are hungry and cold and many are without jobs. In spite of what some of us may have said in the campaign, it is still admitted that many persons in this country are suffering through lack of employment. If there exists a sincere desire to find a way toward balancing the Budget, to find a way toward a correction of the system of applying relief, that way can perhaps be found by a study of the several proposals now pending in committees or before the Congress dealing with those subjects.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the proposal of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] provides the way. I do not know whether or not the proposal of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] for a 30-hour week is the way out. I share in some degree the opinion that the adoption of both those suggestions may in large part bring about a solution of the problem. I cannot put my little stamp of approval on all that is suggested by the proposals put forward by those Senators. I do not know that the 30-hour week is the proper point at which to stop. However, I believe that in a little while the Congress, heeding the admonition and the warning of the Senator from Michigan, will come to a realization that it must do something about minimum wages and maximum hours.

Those who felt a new comfort after the election, who have consoled themselves in one fashion or another, had better stop wondering which way the President of the United States is going to go; whether he is going to adopt a conservative attitude or whether he is going to lean to the left. It makes no difference which way he leans. The people of the country are concerned about another matter. Too many of our citizens for too long a time have been denied their fair share of the annual income of the country. They have not asked for much. I have often wondered at what great patience the people have, and how willing they are to do with so little for so long.

Mr. President, I hope what I have said does not sound at all demagogic, because I like to believe I am not inclined that way. I should like to say now, in order to offset any such impression I might make upon the Senate, that I do not believe in the procedure which has been adopted in Detroit. I do not believe the "sit down" strike is the right way to accomplish what is sought. I do not believe in coercion. I should like, however, to balance that statement to some extent by pointing out that those engaged in the "sit down" strike are interested in the operation of the plants. Their blood and their energy are in those plants. The question at issue is not a matter affecting the stockholders alone.

Mr. President, I apologize for taking up so much time. I was somewhat unprepared to indulge in a discussion of this important subject at this time. However, I repeat, for whatever it may be worth by way of provoking thought on the outside, that men should cease to wonder and to worry about the direction toward which the Chief Executive leans. The problem at this time is not so much that of the Congress as it is of the employers of labor. There is little desire here to force them in any direction. If they have the will they have the way, and if they will heed the warnings of the times and be not so much disturbed about relief expenditures, the country in a short while can emerge from its present difficulties.

I rose purposely to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. While appreciative of its purpose and sharing the opinion of the Senator as to the desirability of promptly balancing the Budget, I am intensely opposed to his amendment, because I do not think it proposes a proper method of meeting the situation. If he believes it does, as I am sure he must, and if he thinks that a more adequate expression of sentiment can thereby be obtained, I hope he will press for a yea-and-nay vote on his amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish in a very few words to discuss the pending amendment which I hope will not be adopted. I realize how easy it is for men of critical disposition to find fault with any administration or any bureau or any department of any administration; I realize how easy it would be for any of us to take an itemized statement of all the expenditures of the War Department and the Navy Department and the Department of Justice and say that they had been extravagant, that they had expended too much money for messages in communicating with their agents scattered all over the United States, but I do not think such criticism has any real bearing upon the amendment which is now pending before the Senate.

I do not know whether $2,000,000 a year is more money than the Resettlement Administration or any other administration ought to expend for telephone and telegraphic communication. I imagine when we get an itemized statement of the expenses of the War Department or the Works Progress Administration during the last 2 or 3 weeks in attempting, during all hours of the night, with 24-hour shifts, to ascertain the facts with respect to the greatest disaster that ever has overcome this country, that we may find some instance where a telephone message might have been foregone or where a letter might have been written instead of a telegram sent, although a human being might have lost his life as a result of such economy. We might find it possible to pick out some items of expense that could be criticized. So I am not going to attempt to discuss that phase of the subject, because it has no real bearing on the merits of the amendment.

What the pending amendment seeks to do, in the form in which it was submitted, is to make it impossible for any State or county or city or school district to get one dime of the $790,000,000 proposed to be appropriated without coming to Washington and making a pauper's oath and then having a committee go down to see whether they have misrepresented the situation before relief may be granted in the form of work or the adoption of projects or in any other form.

Even as changed according to the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, to exempt from its provisions all projects that have already been begun, it would work unfair discrimination against projects not already begun; and, in view of the flood disaster which has driven a million people out of their homes in the Mississippi and Ohio River Valleys and in the valleys of their tributaries, and despite the fact that the Director of the W. P. A. is now in the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers as the chairman of the President's commission to ascertain the extent of the damage and need for restoration and rehabilitation, the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina would make it impossible in such a great emergency for any State, county, or city, or any school district to obtain the money to repair its streets or its sidewalks or its highways or its schools or its waterworks or its sewer systems, upon which might depend the health and life of thousands of people in the affected areas, until there had been inaugurated and completed the process of finding out whether some State, or some isolated county here or there, or some city here or yonder might be able to repair its damage without Federal assistance.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator speaks of discrimination. Would not the net effect of this amendment, if adopted, be to discriminate against those cities or counties or municipalities that have been careful of their money and that have saved their funds, and in favor of those counties, States, and municipalities that have been profligate of their funds?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is undoubtedly true; and not only that, but it would discriminate against those States, counties, and cities that delayed as long as they could delay coming to Washington for assistance and were not among those who rushed in at the beginning and got their projects under way. They would, under this amendment, be barred from consideration.

Mr. President, it is unthinkable to me that the Senate would adopt, in the midst of the consideration of a great relief measure such as that now before us, the amendment suggested by the Senator from North Carolina.

I am, I presume, as provincial, if I may use that term, as any other Member of the Senate. I realize that each of us comes here commissioned by a single State and that, I presume, in a sense, we ought to be loyal, first, to our families, then to our neighbors, then to our county, then to our State, and last to the Nation. It may be that that is the proper philosophy for a Member of the United States Senate to assume in regard to problems that are national—and this is a national problem. I do not wish to inject partisanship into this debate, because I care nothing about that phase of it, but, inasmuch as the Senator from North Carolina read a portion of the platform on which he states he was reelected, I think it is not entirely out of place to emphasize that portion of the platform to which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] so eloquently called attention to awhile ago, that the question of unemployment, the question of relief, the question of rehabilitation, the question of restoring not only the economic ability but the economic independence of our people not only are national but the question of restoring their morale and their faith in the Government of the United States also is national, that it cannot be bound by any artificial or other boundaries that would set one State off against another or one county off against another or one city off against another.

What difference does it make if my State paid into the Treasury of the United States last year more than $80,000,000 through the collection of tobacco taxes and liquor taxes, which are indirectly ultimately passed on to those who consume those products? What difference does it make if North Carolina, according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, paid $282,000,000 in taxes through the tax on cigarettes because the great manufacturers of cigarettes happen to be located in that State? What difference does it make if the city of New York or the State of New York paid into the Treasury $782,000,000 of the $3,500,000,000 of internal revenue collected in the United States during the last fiscal year? The sum of $782,000,000 is four-elevenths of $3,500,000,000. If it is true that New York collected from the W. P. A. 17 percent of all the money that organization expended, is it not fair also in looking upon the proposition, not from the standpoint of a county or a city or a State, to consider that that great State contributed about the same proportion to the Treasury of the United States? In looking upon it also can we decide whether one State contributed more and got less or another one contributed less and got more, in view of the fact that this is a national problem and our effort has been to place the money where it was needed?

I can very well imagine that in the crowded sections of Manhattan, where people from all over the United States have gone, where people have come from all over the world, where they have been huddled in tenements in many sections as though they were animals, there must of necessity be much unemployment and much need for relief. Is it any wonder that the proportion of unemployed, the proportion of needy, the proportion of those who are unable to work out their own destiny without help, is greater in that vast metropolis than in the rural sections of Georgia or North Carolina or Tennessee or Kentucky? Is that any criterion by which the authorities should be governed in administering relief to the people?

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment. I agree with all those who have discussed the subject that we ought at the very earliest moment try to devise a permanent long-range plan for dealing with relief and unemployment. I agree with those who have said we ought to take a scientific and exact census of unemployment in the country and find out the reason for it, the location of the unemployment, the sort of permanent need, whether by Nation or State or county or city, that must be devised to minister to the lack of employment and of security. But certainly this measure is not the vehicle upon which to attempt to do that thing. Therefore, without further remarks, I express again the hope that we may proceed to the consideration of the amendment, and that we may speedily pass the bill without embodying the amendment in it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am not going to delay very long a vote on the pending amendment. I have not risen to discuss the particular amendment at any length.

Charges have been made on the floor of the Senate today to the effect that there have been extravagance and waste in the administration of this particular character of legislation. I have no doubt there has been extravagance, and I have no doubt there has been waste. I should be extremely surprised if there had not been some extravagance and waste in the administration of relief funds in the United States. But I have yet to hear anybody charge on the floor of the Senate that under the Democratic administration of the relief funds there has been any corruption or crookedness.

I recall that the first relief bill which was presented to the Congress was not presented on behalf of the farmers of the country nor was it presented on behalf of the workers, but it was presented on behalf of the bankers. They were the first ones to come to the Congress and ask for relief. They were the first ones that got relief. It was the conservative Republicans and Democrats in this body who voted to give them that relief. The bankers came to the Congress and said, "Unless you give us relief, unless you let us reach our hands into the coffers of the United States, our banks are going to close and our railroads are going into the hands of receivers." Immediately and hurriedly we passed bills permitting them to get money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Then, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] said, we denied for some time relief to the farmers and drought-stricken districts and also to the workers of the country. Those of us who asked for the relief for the workers and the farmers were at first ridiculed, and it was stated repeatedly that each locality ought to take care of its own people. We were told about the prosperity that was "just around the corner." Gradually the depression got deeper and deeper until finally, as I said, the great city of New York and the great city of Chicago came here on bended knee and said, "You will have to lend us money to take care of our schools, to keep our schools open." Right in the heart of the great financial centers of the United States arose a cry for relief to keep their schools open.

Is it any wonder that the workers and the farmers of the country are asking for relief after we have poured out millions and millions to the bankers and the railroads?

We talk about extravagance. Let me call attention to some testimony given when Mr. Jesse Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, was before our committee. We brought out the fact that some of the banks and railroads had presented false statements. He was asked whether or not, if he had known that had been done, he would have loaned the money, and he said he might have done so. He might have done so, he said, because it was so necessary to lend money to the banks of the country and to the railroads in order to save them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, he did not say he knew they were false statements when the loans were made?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no.

Mr. CONNALLY. He said had he known they were false he might have made the loans anyway?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. He said he presumed if he had known the statements were false he might have made the loans anyway because of the necessity for saving the institutions applying for the loans.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a decision which has just been handed down in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia. I first call the attention of my Republican friends to some of the things that took place in their administration. I want to go back a few years to the time when I started an investigation, because the subject of investigation has been before the Senate recently. I think there are Members of this body and of the body at the other end of the Capitol, and many outside of the Congress, who feel that we should not expend any money whatsoever on investigations. I have always had a deep conviction that the investigating power of the United States Senate is one of the most important powers ever conferred upon the body, and that if that power were taken away, much of the effectiveness of the Senate would be lost. In my judgment very few investigations have ever been started that have not saved to the Government of the United States much more than they have cost.

I invite attention to a decision by Justice O'Donoghue, of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia in reference to the Société Suisse case. It was a case I investigated when I was chairman of a committee back in 1923 investigating the Department of Justice. We uncovered evidence showing that the Department of Justice had been guilty of corruption and subsequently, by reason of that investigation and the facts which were brought out, the then Attorney General of the United States was indicted in the courts of New York and was acquitted, I am reliably informed, or there was a "hung" jury, which stood 11 to 1. There was a repercussion, and the latest development is the decision of Justice O'Donoghue of the court of the District of Columbia, in which he said:

The court is going to deliver its opinion and state its conclusions of law and findings of fact, now, at the conclusion of the argument of the case.

I will state the conclusions of law first.

The court concludes that while the defendants in this case are the Attorney General of the United States and the Treasurer of the United States, that in reality the United States itself is in the position of defendant in this case.

The court concludes that the United States, as the defendant in this case, through its proper officials, cannot be estopped, cannot be held guilty of laches, and cannot be bound by any unlawful actions of any of its officers.

The case made out by the bill is answered by the answer of the defendants in their amended answer and by set-off, or counterclaim, annexed to that answer.

The real issue made by the bill and the answer to the bill is whether the plaintiff in this case was the owner of the stock of the American company.

The real issue made by the counter claim of the defendant is that the plaintiff is not the owner of the American company's stock, and that the plaintiff company obtained the proceeds from the sale of the American company's stock after this stock had been seized and sold by the Alien Property Custodian by fraud on the United States Government or its proper officials.

This court cannot be swayed by the ultimate action that the United States, through Congress, may do in disposing of property that has been seized that belonged to alien enemies. The issue really left for this court to decide is that of fraud charged by the counterclaim against the plaintiff, because that charge of fraud embraces in it the ownership of the stock of the American company.

It is undisputed that before the year 1910 the stock of the American company was owned by the two German companies. It is claimed that in 1910 the two German companies sold some of their own stock to the Swiss company, and that that transaction was evidenced by writing, by delivery of the stock, and that at the same time there was an oral warranty or oral guarantee of the value of the German stock that was sold to the Swiss company, not only as to the principal of the stock of the German company sold to the Swiss company, but also as to the dividends to be paid by that stock, and that this oral guarantee had as security for it the stock of the American company owned by the two German companies.

That appears to this court as a very unusual or improbable understanding or agreement, for companies dealing in large affairs of international importance to leave a warranty or a guarantee of such importance to a mere verbal or oral understanding.

Next we have in 1916, but especially in March of 1917, the claim made that the two German companies orally agreed with the Swiss company that "We hereby give you the stock in the American company that has been regarded as security for our guarantee to you, and from henceforth that stock is yours"; the German companies said to the Swiss company, "The stock in the American company is the property absolutely of the Swiss company, and the Swiss company orally released the two German companies from all liability or responsibility under their oral guarantee."

Now, what have we on the other side of those two improbable and unusual agreements or understandings?

We have the two German companies having nothing in their minutes with regard to any such transactions, and we have the Swiss company having nothing in its minutes, so far as this court has been shown, in regard to those two transactions, and we have the two German companies filing their annual reports of accounts, as required by law, during several years after 1910 and before 1920, there expressly indicating or impliedly indicating that the stock in the American company was still the property of the two German companies.

Next we have the two German companies entering into a formal contract for the sale of the stock of the American company, putting themselves in the position of owners of that stock, and the terms of this contract are known to the Swiss company and some of its officers, and the Swiss company asserts no claim to this stock in the American company and allows the two German companies to act as the owners of that stock in the American company.

That agreement fell through.

That was in 1918.

Next we have in 1919 the two German companies entering into a written assignment transferring or undertaking to transfer at that time the stock in the American company, or the proceeds therefrom, that were held by the Alien Property Custodian in the United States. This assignment does not mention anything about any guaranty in 1910 or 1912. It does not mention that it is a confirmation of a transfer and delivery of the American company to the Swiss company in March 1917, nor that in consideration for this assignment from the German companies to the Swiss company that the German companies were being released from their warranty.

This is the part of the court's opinion to which I wish to call the especial attention of the Senate:

Next we have in 1920 the Swiss company employing counsel located in New York city, in the United States, and informing counsel that the Swiss company became the owner of this American stock, the proceeds from the sale of this American stock, by the assignment of 1919.

There was no mention made of any guaranty in 1910 or 1912, or any transfer of the title or interest in this stock in March 1917.

Weighing all of that evidence, considering all the facts and circumstances of the case, the court concludes from those facts and as a conclusion of fact that the title of the American company's stock did not pass from the German companies to the Swiss company, and that the German companies were the owners of the stock in the American company in 1921, because the attempted assignment in 1919 could not operate on property seized and held by the Alien Property Custodian of the United States that belonged to German companies.

The Swiss company in 1921 came to the United States, through its agent and representative and official Merton—

Merton's name is very familiar to me, because we brought it out repeatedly in the hearings—and did not this time employ a lawyer, which would be the usual and probable course, the course that was followed before, but got in touch with one King—

King at that time was the Republican national committeeman for the State of Connecticut—and took this matter of its claim for the proceeds of the sale of the stock to the American company up with this Mr. King on the basis that he was influential as a Republican and was acquainted with the high officials in the Alien Property Custodian's office and in the Department of Justice, it being then the law that these two departments had the decision in regard to the disposing of funds seized by the Alien Property Custodian.

This court will not detail the events that took place between about April 1921 and October 1921, a period of about 6 months, except to say that the plaintiff in this case paid King over $400,000 for services not of a legal nature, because King was not a lawyer, and for services that involved work only on a few days out of those few months, and only on a few hours out of those few days.

The court cannot lose sight of the fact that this claim was presented to the Alien Property Custodian on September 20, 1921, and then was finally passed upon by the Alien Property Custodian on September 21, 1921, and was, 2 days later, on the 23d of September 1921, finally passed upon and approved by the Attorney General of the United States and orders immediately issued for the payment of the round sum of $7,000,000, or thereabouts.

The court cannot overlook the remarkable thing that the Alien Property Custodian could go to New York and have a dinner with Merton, the representative of the plaintiff, and with King, employed by Merton to represent, and with Jess Smith, the intimate and confidential friend of the Attorney General of the United States. It was a strange place, to say the least, for a public official of the United States Government to undertake to deliver two checks totaling over $6,000,000 to a foreigner whom he had met only casually and only in an official manner.

Some of the claim allowed to the plaintiff, amounting to about $500,000, was paid by delivery of United States Government bonds. From these bonds the plaintiff in the case, through Merton, turned over $391,000 to King, having previously paid him $50,000.

It is again a very strange thing that about $40,000 of these bonds are traced directly or indirectly, but with certainty, to the Attorney General, Harry Daugherty, and to the Alien Property Custodian, Miller.

The court concludes that fraud has been shown in the claim that the plaintiff made before the Alien Property Custodian and that that fraud resulted in the Government of the United States turning over the sum of about $7,000,000, approximately, to the plaintiff, and that accordingly the defendant, the United States Government, through its officials, the defendants in this case, is entitled to recover of the plaintiff the sum of approximately $7,000,000 that was paid over by the United States Government to the plaintiff on or about the 26th of September 1921, with interest of 6 percent thereon from that date.

The court concludes that the bill of the plaintiff should be dismissed.

The court concludes that the defendants have maintained their claim as set up in their counter claim and that the prayers of the counter claim should be granted.

This statement of the court is to be taken as the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court.

Counsel may prepare a decree and submit it to the court.

Mr. President, thus ends one chapter in an investigation which took place back in 1923. I think I should call attention to the fact that at that time we had great difficulty in getting through the Senate the resolution providing for the investigation. We had great difficulty in getting money to carry on the investigation. At the beginning practically every newspaper in the United States was opposed to the investigation and almost constantly criticized those who were conducting it. The Associated Press is one of the great news-gathering agencies of the United States. When the Associated Press sent out its daily account of what took place in the committee room in the course of the investigation, each day it also sent out, at the head of its account, uncorroborated and unsworn statements by the then Attorney General of the United States denying the truth of everything that was alleged before the committee.

In addition to the fact that as a result of the investigation the Government has recovered $7,000,000, it seems to me there is a moral to be learned from this occurrence in regard to national committeemen. King was a national committeeman for the State of Connecticut. When the Republicans came into power, this Republican national committeeman came down here and was the go-between and the "fixer" for some of the departments. When the Democrats came into power, we found a lot of Democratic national committeemen flocking down to this city for various purposes. The practice is one that ought to be stopped. They ought to be forbidden to practice before any of the departments, or to appear before any of the departments in the city of Washington. I do not care whether these national committeemen are Democrats or Republicans; as long as we permit them to practice before the departments we shall have crookedness and corruption and bad government in some of the departments in Washington. I am thankful to say, however, that up to the present time, at least, whatever the Republicans may say about waste and corruption in the administration of relief, no one of them can point to a case where any of the Democratic officials took $40,000 in bonds and put it in his own pocket, and defrauded the Government out of $7,000,000.

I do not recall the figures as to the cost of this investigation of the Department of Justice; but including the men whom I borrowed from the departments—and I did borrow, even from Republican departments, a number of men who were not in sympathy with some of the things that were going on—it probably cost the Government of the United States in the neighborhood of $100,000. As the result of it, however, here is one instance alone where the Government recovered $7,000,000, when probably the transactions which were the subject of the investigation probably never would have come to light had it not been for the inquiry authorized and conducted by the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, although I am not satisfied with the draft of the Bailey amendment, nevertheless I shall support the amendment, because it declares two principles in which I believe, or at least it looks in two directions which I think we should follow.

The amendment, in the first instance, declares the obligation of local contribution to relief. In my opinion, that is good economics and good morals. The amendment as it is drawn in no degree and in no respect limits the obligation of the Federal Government to contribute to relief in those cases where a State government or the local political unit is unable to meet the obligation.

I assume that in every instance where a State or any unit of a State is unable fully to respond to the needs of the political unit then recourse will be had to the Federal Government and that then the Federal Government will meet the general obligation which exists, and because of that recognition of that initial and original obligation I am in favor of the amendment.

I think, too, Mr. President, that the amendment looks in another direction which has my sanction. The amendment, as I understand it, anticipates a larger degree of State and local responsibility in the administration of relief. That principle I approve, and that principle is not new. In the very first relief measure which the Congress passed, according to my understanding, that principle was incorporated, and for some time, at least, it was followed. I desire to have the Government return to that principle.

In the first relief act money was made available to be paid by the Federal Government to the States. The money was to be turned over to a State upon the application of the Governor and upon the certificate of the Governor. This is precisely the principle incorporated in the pending amendment. The language in the act was:

Upon the Governor's certificate that the resources of the State or Territory, including moneys then available and which can be made available by the State or Territory, its political subdivisions, and by private contribution, are inadequate to meet relief needs.

Then the legislation proceeded to provide that when a Governor had made such certification to the Reconstruction

Finance Corporation, the Federal Government was authorized to pay to the Governor the money authorized by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to meet the State's needs. It provided expressly and specifically that "the amounts paid to the Governor shall be administered by the Governor or under his direction and upon his responsibility."

There was a recognition by the Congress of the obligation of the State. There was a recognition of the principle of local responsibility and of local self-government.

It is because I believe the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina looks also in that direction that I shall support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossing of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROGRAMS OF PUBLIC EDUCATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], for himself and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], introduced Senate bill 419, to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education. I desire to address the Senate briefly with reference to that measure.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 20, 1936, our distinguished colleague, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], ably presented his views upon the need of equal opportunity for "all the children of all the people." He vividly presented the richness of opportunity in some States in contrast to the lack of opportunity in others. He reviewed the repeated instances of Federal grants of lands and moneys for the support of educational institutions. He said:

> A large part of the direct money grants to the States has been based on the principle of stimulating the States to undertake new kinds of educational work, as, for example, vocational education. * * * For the purpose of getting new and needed types of education started such policy is good and effective.

These are statements of fact so well accepted that they will probably stand through this present session of Congress without question.

Our colleague then goes on to state:

> What the States need today, however, is not stimulation to further effort but funds to pay for educational opportunities needed and wanted by our people.

For this purpose he thereupon advocated Federal appropriation on a yearly increasing scale until $300,000,000 annually is reached, and proposed that this sum be allotted to the States in proportion to the number of persons 5 to 20 years old in each. It is proposed to expend these moneys for such educational purposes as each State legislature shall direct.

In the depths of the depression financial disaster closed thousands of our schools and threw millions of children back upon the resources of the home for both instruction and physical health care normally provided by the schools. It is a sad fact that these school services have not as yet been restored to the 1930 level, and that there is an imperative need for the extension in time and the improvement in quality of these old, well-established services.

In addition, however, the depression has awakened many of our citizens to the necessity of placing new responsibilities upon our schools. Programs of vocational education appropriate for hundreds of thousands of youth from 14 to 16 must promptly be expanded, improved, and suited to the times to meet the needs of the entire youth population until they reach the minimum age of 18 and perhaps an average age of 20 or 21.

There are those who believe that an even more imperative service must be rendered to pregrade children. Through my years of service as a public-health officer, I became convinced that the greatest return of the efforts in behalf of public health comes from attention to little children. My study of crime has led me to a conclusion about crime prevention which closely parallels these conclusions about public health, namely, that the foundation of mental health, of physical health, of normal emotional living, and of a functioning pattern of good habits is laid in the first 5 years of a child's life. The efforts of those who are promoting parent education, kindergartens, and nursery schools are directed toward laying a firm foundation for character building and citizenship training during these tender years. So long as the parents, themselves often young and immature, are left unaided in their task of training the child, all too many children will enter the later period of formal education permanently handicapped. One or two percent of these grow into adults who, through crime and antisocial acts, threaten our democracy. Our churches well understand the necessity of training little children.

Moved by considerations of this sort, the National Kindergarten Association has proposed a bill to provide Federal aid for pregrade education. This bill has already been introduced in the House, and I shall presently offer it for introduction in the Senate. It is much like the Harrison-Black bill now before the committee.

It is clear to me that the period of investigation, experimentation, and demonstration has only begun in this field of pregrade education. While some general information on physical health maintenance has been generally disseminated, scarcely a beginning has been made in the investigation of emotional and mental health. Accordingly, some such Federal provision as is contemplated by this bill is both an emergency and a long-range necessity.

The value of such investigations and demonstrations in the field of education has been dramatically demonstrated during the last year and a half by the National Youth Administration. Every Member of the Congress has been made aware of the advance in understanding of the problems of stabilization of youth both as to employment and as to general conduct by the Administration's experiments with paid work projects. Previous vocational educational experiments extending over a period of 20 years have resulted in our reaching only a million and a half out of some 20,000,000 youths who should be receiving vocational training continuously.

These are but two illustrations of a long list of items in our national educational program which need specialized investigation, demonstration, and appraisal.

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that there is both an emergency need and a long-range need for financial help from the Federal Government in continuously studying the whole list of educational problems which face the local and State school officials in every division of our Nation. Funds are needed in each State with which to survey the total need, to define that need in practical terms of desired outcomes in the lives of individual boys and girls, to plan balanced programs, both State and local, to appraise scientifically the progress made, and to inform and interpret results to the parents and to the general public.

It is my conviction that a Federal consulting service should be made available to both public and private schools engaged in promising demonstrations leading to scientific surveys, planning, and appraisals of outcomes.

Since there are aspects of problems in every locality which are national, and require national support, there rests upon Congress the responsibility of seeing to it that any funds appropriated for meeting both the special and the general needs recognized by the Federal Government are used for purposes broadly specified by the Congress.

The sole responsibility rests with the State for a final definition of policies, procedures, and program of education within the State. Nevertheless, ways can be found of giving assistance to the States in more effectively training children and youth to meet the changing requirements of local citizenship, State citizenship, and national citizenship without encroachment upon the rights of the States.

Several ways of aiding without encroachment are worthy of consideration: For example, through a Federally sponsored conference of State educational officials, professional procedures and forms could be prepared through which to report to the Congress comparable statements of desired results and comparable summaries of achieved results. A fraction of a percent of the total appropriation could well be used for such a purpose and a fraction for State study, planning, and statistical appraisal. This can be done without hampering any local agency with regulations, and without coloring reports with recommendations or editorial comment from Federal administrative agencies.

The National Youth Administrator, Mr. Aubrey Williams, in spite of difficult emergency conditions, has applied to our local schools and colleges, with growing satisfaction, a policy of decentralization. Here is a going concern in which a practical demonstration may be made of acceptable procedures of Federal aid freed from objectionable forms of Federal control.

I am now introducing a bill "to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public pregrade education", in an earnest effort to insure that the needs of little children may not be neglected. As I do so, I am registering my conviction that adequate education in America is an issue which will continue to demand attention from the Congress down the future, and that our measures of support must provide for a continuing study of the national problems of education. These things must be done in ways which will keep the Congress informed and active in the support of this, the most vital survival necessity of a democracy.

SUMMARY

There are certain factors regarding Federal aid of education that I believe should be considered in connection with any legislation in this direction.

Any bill providing Federal funds for the aid of education is not sound, in my opinion, unless Congress can receive a guaranty that such training will contribute to better citizenship. This is especially important since—

First. Citizenship training is the primary justification for such an expenditure of public funds.

Second. Conservation, or freeing for use, of human values and human resources is justification for such expenditures.

Third. The scope of such training objectives should be broad, since education to develop more effective citizens should provide for all children, starting as early as possible and continuing for all youths as long as help is needed in adjustment to adult activities and responsibilities.

Fourth. At present, essential objectives from a Federal point of view are being neglected by many schools of this country.

For example, (1) the criteria for crime prevention, (2) criteria for individual competency in employment, and (3) criteria for entrepreneur training to expand employment and socially desirable activities.

It seems, therefore, important that certain factors should be insured in any legislation granting Federal financial aid for education:

First. Federal legislation in this direction should state in broad terms the Federal requirements for citizenship training. Such a statement should leave each State free to expand the objectives of education which it will support beyond the minimum proposals emanating from the Federal Government.

The State should be completely free to develop plans and procedures for achieving these expanded objectives, and for devising and utilizing appropriate means of evaluating its progress and success in achieving them.

It should be clearly prohibited that any alternative expansion or other modification of the congressional statement should be made by any administrative personnel of the Federal Government.

Second. The Federal educational contribution to the States should include technical assistance in—

Clarifying the objectives of education in each State in terms responsive to the specialized needs of each State;

Consulting with State or local personnel wherever help is asked in improving expanded statements of objectives, in improving means of achieving these objectives, and in developing evaluating techniques.

Third. The Federal appropriation for education should include allotments for moneys specifically designated as available for use in conducting demonstrations. These should be designed to clarify the pursuit of Federal objectives of education with the State or local educational objectives.

For the purpose of conducting such demonstrations Federal consultants, when furnished, should be expected to give their best professional opinion, and should be in no way restricted in the formulation of that opinion by policies of any administrative officer of the Federal Government.

Fourth. The Office of Education should be empowered to request a report from each State covering—

(1) Objectives pursued for which Federal moneys are expended.

(2) Plans for achieving objectives.

(3) Administrative practices.

(4) Evaluation of the State program.

(5) For purposes of recommending comparability of reports, the Office of Education should be empowered to—

(a) Call a conference of the State superintendents of public instruction.

(b) Secure the recommendation of the conference on procedures of securing comparability in reports.

(c) The Office of Education should transmit to every State superintendent and should otherwise publicize the official record of recommendations of the meeting of the conference of superintendents.

(d) The Office of Education should report to the Congress annually actions taken by the conference of superintendents, including a record of the roll call on each such action; it should report to the Congress the degree to which the separate States comply with the recommendations of the conference of superintendents, and it should report a digest and summary of such reports to the States.

(e) The Office of Education should annually report upon the allocation of funds to the States, and, whenever appropriate, recommend legislative changes in the manner of apportionment of such funds.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill introduced by me today, being Senate bill 1355, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1355) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated and apportioned annually for 5 years to the several States and Territories to be used by them for initiating and promoting pregrade education in their public schools.

SEC. 2. The amounts appropriated under authority of this act, less amounts set aside for administrative purposes under section 7, shall be apportioned among the States and Territories in the proportion which the number of their inhabitants aged 5 bears to the total number of inhabitants aged 5 of all the States and Territories. In the computation of all sums apportioned under this act to the States and Territories for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942, the population figures shall be taken from the Fifteenth Decennial Census of the United States.

SEC. 3. The manner in which the funds apportioned to each State and Territory shall be used for the maintenance of the program of public pregrade education shall be determined by the State department of education thereof. The State or Territorial treasurer shall be designated and appointed as custodian of all funds received by said State or Territory as apportionments under the provisions of this act to receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursement of the same, such disbursement to be made upon requisition of the State department of education and in accordance with the laws of said State or Territory.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Education to compute the amount due each State and Territory and to apportion for the ensuing fiscal years such funds as said State or Territory may be entitled to receive under the provisions of this act, and to certify such apportionment or apportionments to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the treasurer of each State or Territory the apportionment or apportionments so certified. The State superintendent of schools or the State commissioner of education of each State and Territory shall apportion to each school district in the State or Territory presenting a pregrade program approved by the State superintendent of schools or the State commissioner of education its adequate share of the funds provided in section 1 of this act and shall authorize the payment of the sums of money, so apportioned, by the State treasurer, in accordance with the laws of the State or Territory. The treasurer of each State or Territory shall on the 1st day of each July return to the Treasurer of the United States through the United States Commissioner of Education the unused portion in each State or Territory.

SEC. 5. The United States Commissioner of Education is authorized to prescribe plans for keeping accounts of the expenditures of such funds as may be apportioned to the States and Territories under the provisions of this act. The chief educational authority designated to represent a State or Territory receiving any of the apportionments made under the provisions of this act shall cause to be made annually, within 6 months after the close of the fiscal year in such State or Territory, an audit of such accounts by a certified public accountant: Provided, That no two consecutive annual audits of such accounts shall be made by the same certified public accountant. Such chief educational authority shall submit to the United States Commissioner of Education a copy of each annual audit of such accounts within 30 days after the completion of the audit. If the United States Commissioner of Education shall determine that the apportionment made to a State or Territory for the current fiscal year is not being expended for pregrade education he shall give notice of this fact to the chief educational authority and to the Governor of such State or Territory. If, after being so notified, a State or Territory continues in such failure so to expend its apportionment, the United States Commissioner of Education shall report thereon at once to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall transmit said report to the Congress.

SEC. 6. The chief educational authority designated to represent a State or Territory receiving any of the apportionments made under the provisions of this act shall annually submit to the United States Commissioner of Education a report showing the manner of distributing within the State or Territory the funds apportioned under this act and the work and improvements accomplished thereby.

SEC. 7. From the funds appropriated to carry out this act an amount not to exceed $5,000 annually is hereby made available to the United States Office of Education for the administration of this act.

SEC. 8. As used in this act—

(1) The term "State" means the several States and the District of Columbia.

(2) The term "Territory" means Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Canal Zone, American Samoa, and Guam.

SEC. 9. This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the several States and Territories control of the administration of this act within their respective jurisdictions and to preserve State and local initiative in the operation of pregrade classes. No provision of this act shall be construed to delimit the States and Territories in the appropriation of funds for the support of pregrade education received through the benefits of this act; nor to restrict or define the kind of pregrade education to be supported by the respective States and Territories; nor to grant to any officer of the United States, or to any of its agencies, departments, or offices, any power or authority to approve or reject the pregrade education programs in the States and Territories; nor to confer upon any officer of the United States, or of any of its agencies, departments, or offices, any power or authority to supervise or in any way exercise management and control of the pregrade education programs of the States and Territories, it being the purpose of this act to leave all supervision, management, control, and choice of pregrade education means, processes, and programs to State, Territorial, and local governments.

GUARANTY OF DEBENTURES OF FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 38, dealing with debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator whether the joint resolution was reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. BULKLEY. The joint resolution was unanimously reported by the committee. It provides for an extension of time for 2 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator in charge of the joint resolution make a brief explanation of its purpose.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Federal Housing Administrator is authorized to guarantee mortgage loans under certain conditions prescribed in the Federal Housing Act. If a loan is defaulted and a mortgage foreclosed, then, having foreclosed, the mortgagee may turn in the property to the Federal Housing Administrator and receive debentures which are guaranteed by the United States Government. The right to guarantee those debentures extends only to mortgages made and guaranteed before July 1 of this year. It is believed that in the brief period it has been in operation the Federal Housing Administration has not yet had an adequate opportunity to show what it can do, and so it is desired to extend that right for 2 more years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, has any experience developed with respect to loss under this guaranty?

Mr. BULKLEY. It has hardly been in operation long enough to have any experience which means anything. There has been practically no loss so far. In the case of the first mortgage that was foreclosed, the property was sold for more than the amount of the mortgage debt, and the balance was returned to the mortgagor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it the Senator's opinion that under the rather well-protected set-up there is not likely to be substantial loss?

Mr. BULKLEY. There should not be a large percentage of loss. But the whole system is new, and the amount which may be loaned goes up to 80 percent. I do not think we have yet had enough experience to be absolutely confident. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) to extend for a period of 3 years the guarantee by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "thereof", to strike out "July 1, 1940" and to insert in lieu thereof "July 1, 1939", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 204 (b) of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "July 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1939."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to extend for a period of 2 years the guarantee by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator."

SOCIAL INSURANCE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a large number of letters and communications in regard to suggested amendments to the Social Security Act. Most of the communications are in favor of the so-called Clark amendment, which had for its object the continuation, under proper restrictions and provisions, of private pension plans.

A large number of corporations for many years provided pension plans for their employees; and it is contended by many of the employees who have communicated with me that the benefits under the private pension plans were larger than those which would be obtained under the law which is now in force.

At the last session of Congress a committee was appointed consisting of several members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and several members of the Senate Finance Committee for the purpose of studying the so-called Clark amendment and framing a measure that would permit private pension plans to be continued under proper Federal supervision. That committee has not made its final report. As chairman of the committee, it is my hope that within a short time it will be possible to submit a report to the Senate.

As stated, I have received a number of communications from employees of corporations where the private pension plan is in force, urging amendments to the Social Security Act.

I send to the desk and ask to have incorporated in the RECORD without reading a communication which I have received, signed by 44 employees of the Western Paper Products Co., of Salt Lake City, Utah. I shall not ask that the names of the employees be inserted in the RECORD, but ask that the communication addressed to me be printed in the RECORD at this point without reading.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH,
January 18, 1937.

The Honorable WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senator from Utah,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are employed by a company which for some time has carried an old-age retirement plan with a large insurance company. Because of the fact that the regulations of the Social Security Act are compulsory, we find it impractical to continue our private plan.

We feel our private plan is superior to the Social Security Act for the following reasons.

1. It provides an optional retirement age.
2. It provides benefits for service prior to the enactment of the Social Security Act.
3. It provides a larger death benefit.
4. It provides for total disability benefits.
5. It provides for accidental death and dismemberment benefits.
6. It provides a cash withdrawal provision prior to retirement age.
7. It provides optional forms of pensions that will continue an income to our dependents even though our death should occur soon after we commence to receive our retirement income.
8. It provides that the retirement income is not limited as to salary. Those receiving higher salaries may still participate on an equitable basis.
9. It provides larger pension benefits in most cases than the Social Security Act.

In view of these facts we urge your support of legislation that will exempt us from the compulsory participation in the Social Security Act and enable us to keep our present plan.

Respectfully,
EMPLOYEES OF THE WESTERN PAPER PRODUCTS CO.

Signed by 44 persons.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the terms of House Joint Resolution 81, creating a Joint Congressional Committee on Government Organization, approved today, the Chair appoints as members, on the part of the Senate, of the Joint Committee on Government Organization the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON; the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. BYRNES; the Senator from Virginia, Mr. BYRD; the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. O'MAHONEY; the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BARKLEY; the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. HARRISON; the Senator from Oregon, Mr. MCNARY; the Senator from Delaware, Mr. TOWNSEND; and the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. NORRIS.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Fred W. Catlett, of Washington, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, February 5, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Give unto the Lord glory and strength. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto His name; worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: He that keepeth thee will not slumber. Behold He that keepeth Israel will neither slumber nor sleep.

We pray Thee, O Lord, that Thou wilt grant Thy blessing upon us, Thy children and the servants of the Republic. Create within us deep desires to purify ourselves, to walk patiently, and to discharge our duties according to the measure of our knowledge. Be pleased to bless our President and all his advisers; may they be guided through these times, so critical and perilous. Bless every household with light and gladness. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On January 29, 1937:

H. R. 1545. An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1937, and for other purposes.

On February 3, 1937:

H. J. Res. 81. Joint resolution to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Government Organization.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. BERNARD, of Minnesota, against war and fascism at the fourth annual New York City Conference on January 30, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have leave to sit during the sessions of the House while the committee is holding hearings on H. R. 1668.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in two respects, restrictions on present corporation methods, and, second, a federally controlled pan-American broadcasting station.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue for such time as may be occupied by myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] on the bill, and at the conclusion the bill be read under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes. The independent offices appropriation bill provides appropriations for some 32 of the independent establishments of the Government. For the benefit of our new colleagues, I may say that in this appropriation bill we find groups of governmental bureaus and departments that are not directly under some Cabinet officer. They are denominated independent offices and establishments, some 32 of them, covering a variety of activities, and a wide range of governmental functions, and carrying an awful lot of money. The bill this year carries a gross amount of $1,046,000,000.

Before I proceed to discuss the bill I want to express my appreciation to the members of the subcommittee, my Democratic colleagues and my Republican colleagues. The distinguished and able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], the ranking minority member of our committee, very graciously, at considerable inconvenience to his business affairs and to his personal comfort, came down to Washington with me and with my colleague, Mr. FITZPATRICK, of New York, early in December, and we began informal hearings on this bill in order to have it ready as early as possible in the session. I appreciate that, and except for his splendid cooperation and willingness to go ahead informally, we could not have been ready today. Also I pause to pay my respects to the clerks of the Appropriations Committee. I know of no place in the Government service where there is a more efficient, faithful crowd of fellows who are willing to lay aside their own convenience and personal comfort and work day and night to bring information and facts to the subcommittee chairmen and to the chairman of our committee for your information and guidance. Something was said yesterday about working overtime in the Government. Here is a group that is working overtime and is underpaid, and I want to acknowledge at the beginning the services they render and the services of this young gentleman who is sitting on my left, the clerk of my subcommittee.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. How does the total amount of this appropriation bill compare with the one for last year for I suppose practically the same services?

Mr. WOODRUM. There is a gross increase for comparable items of about $60,000,000 in this bill over what it was last year.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Is it not a fact that the figures prepared by the clerks in the Appropriations Committee of the House are practically infallible? On several occasions where different opinions were expressed to me as to costs and expenditures by various departments of the Government, on full investigation the figures furnished by the clerks of your Committee on Appropriations have always been found to be correct.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is absolutely true. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] asked what the increase was this year over last year for the same services. It is because of increased services and new responsibilities created by Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am coming to that, and I should like if I may, to proceed for a few minutes without interruption, and then I shall try to answer any questions which gentlemen care to ask. The gross amount of the bill is $1,046,757,143. Of that gross amount, $60,396,180 is not directly appropriated out of the Treasury, but consists of authorizations to establishments of the Government that finance themselves, like the Federal Housing Administration, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and various other agencies that have the right to raise their own funds and have a revolving fund out of which they pay their own expenses; but this year for the first time we required them to come to Congress for authorization to use their own funds for administrative expenses, and of that billion-and-odd dollars, $60,396,180 is for authorization for these agencies to use that fund for administrative purposes.

The bill is $4,950,000 under the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget. That may seem to be a very small reduction. Some gentleman asked on the floor yesterday, I think the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], why the Appropriations Committee did not cut something from the Budget estimate. It has been my philosophy of the duty of the Committee on Appropriations—and we are just an agency of the House—and the duty of the Congress in respect to appropriations, that that duty is twofold. First, to try to conserve public assets, to try to hold down public expenditures, and yet on the other hand there is a duty no less important and no less pressing to appropriate adequately for proper governmental operations and functioning. Of course we could take a red pencil and shut our eyes and cut millions of dollars from these bills, but we have gone into the matter carefully and painstakingly with the idea in mind of trying to conserve the public assets and yet give funds where needed to carry out the functions of the Government established by Congress. If you are sufficiently interested to read the hearings, you will find that the Bureau of the Budget did a pretty good job with the pruning knife before the bill ever got to the Congress. They cut pretty deep and hard in some places. You may be interested to know that in these estimates of the agencies which come to us this year for the first time for the authority to use their own funds for administrative expenses—for instance, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and several others of similar character—there is a reduction in the administrative expenses in 1938 of $18,898,340 from those incurred in 1937. You will find all through this bill that appropriations are being held down and in many instances reduced. You will ask how we reconcile that with the fact that every year the gross amount of the bill climbs up.

Thereby hangs a tale. The reason for that is that every year this Congress by legislative enactment sets up new bureaus and new departments. Not only that, but it gives additional functions and additional duties to bureaus and departments already set up.

Let us, in a general way, account for this $78,601,558 gross increase in direct appropriations carried in this bill. In the first place, we find we are doubling the Federal Government's contribution to the civil-service retirement fund. We have put in the bill this year $26,342,000 more for the Federal Government's contribution to the retirement fund than we had last year.

We find we have the Rural Electrification Administration this year for a direct appropriation for loans. This is the first time that agency has ever come to Congress for a direct appropriation for loans. It has received its funds for loans out of emergency allotments heretofore. This year we have $30,000,000 for loans for that agency.

We find there was an increase of $66,800,000 in the amounts allotted to the Social Security Board for grants to old-age benefits, insurance, and relief to crippled children.

So I have already accounted for well over $100,000,000 of increases.

As offsets, we find a number of agencies where the appropriations are less than last year. That table is set out on page 3 of the report, if you are sufficiently interested to look at it.

So I say the reason these appropriation bills are more each year is because we create additional functions and additional establishments. Now let us see about that for a moment.

We find in this bill the Social Security Board, set up to administer that great humanitarian purpose of the President and the administration, to look after the needy people of this country. They are just now beginning to come into full operation, January 1, 1937. The committee cut their appropriation for administrative expense $5,000,000 under what the Budget estimated. I am perfectly frank to say to you, and I want to make it a matter of record, that I am afraid we cut them pretty deep; but we hope they will be able to get through on the amount of money we have allowed them, which is $18,377,202 for administrative expenses. I have had the matter up with the Board. They have been to see me since this bill was reported. Of course, they were disturbed that the committee had cut $5,000,000 off of what the Bureau of the Budget allowed them. I went over the thing with them and pointed out that even allowing them $18,000,000, we were giving them twice as much for 1938 as they had in 1937. They splendidly and very graciously said I might state to the Congress that they would do the best they could with the funds we had allotted to them. But, of course, if we find we have cut them too deep, we will still be here to meet whatever needs they may have for appropriations. That is a new activity. The Social Security Board, I believe, is as big and as comprehensive as all the life-insurance companies in America put together. Just think of that. That is the kind of an organization we have set up. Of course, it will cost money. It will be a mounting cost of money, but we must see that there is no dissipation of funds or that there is no more appropriated than is necessary to do the job we have given them; but, having given them the job, we must pay the freight as we go along.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I note an increase of $10,000,000 for the Public Works Administration. Will the gentleman tell the committee what that is for?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is not an increase. This is the first time we have appropriated money for the Public Works Administration for administrative expenses, but the authorization is for $10,000,000 administrative expenses for the remainder of this fiscal year. Last year they had $26,000,000. Of course, their lending powers are gone and they are winding up their program.

Mr. WARREN. No part of that appropriation goes to projects, does it?

Mr. WOODRUM. No part of it goes to projects.

Mr. WARREN. I would like to say to the gentleman, lest by my silence I may give consent, that as far as I am concerned, I never intend to vote for one more dollar for the Public Works Administration. I think it is shot through with gross discriminations and favoritisms, and, as far as North Carolina is concerned, we think we have had about the worst treatment of any State in the Union. As far as I am concerned, I intend never to vote another dollar to them.

Mr. WOODRUM. Now we come to the Securities and Exchange Commission. I doubt if there is an informed Member of the House who would be willing to vote to repeal the law setting up the Securities and Exchange Commission. It costs us nearly $4,000,000 for their administrative expenses, but we have given them very important functions to carry out. Here, again, the Government is stepping into a field of activity never before occupied by the Federal Government, a field of activity to regulate and control and clean up, if you please, the situation existing in the field of the handling, marketing, and control of securities. Undoubtedly, that is going to be a growing, expanding bureau, but rendering, if you please, great service to the American people.

Then we come to the Federal Communications Commission. A few years ago it was the Federal Radio Commission. We have enlarged the functions of this Board, giving them jurisdiction over telephone and telegraph, and set up this agency to reach out and have control of the communications systems in America. I say to you that if you will interest yourself enough to find out a little something about the job we have given those people, touching, as it does, the field of Federal communications, of radio, telephone, and telegraph, communications with vessels at sea, and so forth, you will find that we have given them a herculean job to do.

I know there has been some criticism. My colleagues, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], have expressed themselves critically, but we must take into consideration the magnitude of the job we have given them. They are carried in the bill for $1,604,000 for their administrative expenses, some little reduction over what they had last year.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is it not true that before the formation of the Communications Commission the Interstate Commerce Commission, having whatever authority there was to regulate telegraph and telephone communication, found itself so busy in the exercise of its initial duty, the regulation of carriers in interstate commerce, that they had done practically nothing with reference to this matter? Is it not further a fact that since the Communications Commission has been in existence and since the investigation we authorized a year and a half ago of telegraph and telephone companies that by reason of matters brought to light by this Commission, long-distance telephone rates in the country have been reduced by $22,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM. The American people are paying annually $22,000,000 less for their long-distance telephone calls than they were before the investigation authorized by Congress.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As a general proposition I am very much inclined to cut down governmental expenditures everywhere and to economize as much as I can. I do not know what effect the regulation of the communications system of this country has had in recent months, but I do know that since the occurrence of these disastrous floods, radio has been about the only instrumentality of communication that could be used for days and nights in succession to relieve distress or to handle the flood situation. As a matter of fact, it superseded everything else for about 3 days and nights.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is no question about that; and the members of the Federal Communications Commission were on duty 24 hours a day supervising and looking after radio communications throughout that great disaster.

Now I shall comment on the Civil Service Commission. They are carried in the bill for $2,350,000 for administrative expenses, which is about the appropriation they had for the current fiscal year. In my judgment, when the committee comes to consider reorganization of governmental bureaus, the elimination of useless functions, and try to coordinate governmental departments for greater efficiency, that in the Civil Service Commission they will find a fertile field for consideration.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I have no fault whatever to find with the Civil Service Commission as at present constituted. I think they are doing a good job with the tools we have given them to operate with and under the laws by which they are bound; but I want to reecho what I have said before on the floor of the House; that in my judgment it should be possible by some kind of standardized examination to eliminate hundreds of thousands of these examinations that are held all over the country that mean absolutely nothing to the citizens, that hold out false hopes of employment, and that get us nowhere. The Civil Service Commission now is piled full of these examinations they have held, because they do not have the personnel to grade the papers. Some way should be found to some extent to standardize certain types of examination under which they could have information and registers that would be available for different purposes. As it is now, if the Federal Securities Exchange Commission want lawyers, the Civil Service Commission holds an examination for them; if the Federal Communications Commission want lawyers, the Civil Service Commission holds another examination for them; and so on throughout all the departments and agencies. It seems to me a standard law examination could be given and that the Civil Service Commission could have a card index there showing the lawyer's name and his various fields of endeavor. This would show the department heads whether he fitted in the department or not. Examinations could be held and indexes could be made in the same way on the clerical and stenographic forces. I think this presents a wonderful opportunity for some coordination of effort or elimination of duplication that would save a lot of money and bring about so much more efficiency in the selection of Government employees.

On the floor of the House yesterday my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], said he proposed to move to strike out the phrase "labor-saving devices" wherever the phrase appears in the bill. He added that he had been informed that the Civil Service Commission were experimenting with an electric eye for use in grading certain standard mental tests in order to save time, and that his information was that 130 people would lose their jobs. I told him I could relieve his mind, that we had appropriated sufficient money for the Civil Service Commission to carry the full complement of personnel through 1938 that they had in 1937. Knowing bureaus and departments as I know them and as I think he knows them, I think he can rest assured that if there is no work for a man at this desk the supervisory official will find a desk not far away where the man can work at something else. They need not worry about losing their jobs.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did the gentleman's committee consider giving larger appropriations to the Civil Service Commission this year in order that they could have more personnel for the rating of examinations held to supply personnel to such large new Government agencies as the Social Security Board? I think the Civil Service Commission has found itself very greatly handicapped due to lack of personnel, and this has been very unsatisfactory, I think, to everybody.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, that in this appropriation bill we give the Civil Service Commission $2,350,000. Our committee felt that this amount of money would carry them through. It is not as much as they could use, possibly, but certainly it is a reasonable provision for them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did they ask for more?

Mr. WOODRUM. They always ask for more, but we think we have given them a reasonable amount with which to carry on their activity.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It seems to me only reasonable that we should allow them additional personnel and an increased appropriation.

Mr. WOODRUM. They feel that way about it. So you have the two divergent viewpoints.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I have received numerous complaints which have been made to me by people who have taken the civil-service examination to the effect they have been compelled to wait from 3 to 6 months before they were even notified what their mark or grade was. This is along the line the gentleman has just stated.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the electric eye that has been spoken of, and that we shall probably hear more about, is one of those uncanny mechanical devices that takes a set of papers, flashes them through the machine and puts down the grade which the person makes on the examination. This is done very quickly. The purpose of the contrivance is not to knock people out of jobs, but to avoid the criticisms which we have just heard. There are many of these examinations held and the business has to be expedited in some way, so that these people who are trying to secure employment and trying to get on the eligible list may have an opportunity to get there before they die of old age.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment briefly on the General Accounting Office and the work of the Comptroller General. I am one of the Members of Congress who do not believe we should ever give up the right to have an administrative officer who is answerable to Congress in the control of the appropriations we make. [Applause.] I say that, however, with this qualifying statement: I have upon the floor many times complimented the Comptroller General who left office just a few months ago. I think he did a good job, although not a perfect job. None of us are perfect. But I think he did a good job. It is unfortunate that he dipped his brush in venom and smeared it across the picture of the administrative efforts he made while in office. I am sorry he did that, because then he got down from the pinnacle of an administrative officer who was not hamstrung by politics to the level of some of us who throw the partisan barb occasionally.

The office of the Comptroller General is one of the most important offices in the Government service and ought to be placed on the plane and dignity of a Cabinet position. I am not saying he should be a Cabinet officer, but the office should be on that plane and it should carry that salary, based upon the importance of the duties he has to perform. He should also be given the machinery with which to function. This man gets $10,000 a year. He has upon his shoulders the responsibility of seeing that all of the billions of dollars which Congress appropriates are spent according to law. We pay him $10,000 for that. What would private industry pay a man who had comparable duties and services to perform? We ought to get a man who rates the salary. We should give him the machinery and the equipment not only to audit the claims and supervise the expenditures but to come back to Congress and show us the result of his investigations. He should be able to show us where there are overlapping functions and useless bureaus and departments. He should be answerable to the legislative body and not to the Executive.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. May I compliment the gentleman on what he has said about the Comptroller General's office? I agree with the gentleman's statement. I think when we established that system and set-up, together with the Bureau of the Budget and everything that went with it, it was one of the most progressive steps toward efficiency in Government service that has been taken since I became a Member of this House.

Mr. WOODRUM. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Virginia is always so obliging and courteous and willing to yield. He made the statement at the beginning of his remarks on this bill that be preferred to go ahead and not be interrupted. In line with that request I have made a few memoranda and I would like to propound a few questions. As I understand the phrase "administrative expense" that has reference to cost of administering a particular bureau in all of its activities?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman has stated here that the Rural Electrification Administration has been allowed $30,000,000 in this bill for administrative expenses. Did the committee in the hearings ascertain anything about the extent to which this Administration has been able to advance money in extending rural electrification and whether or not it has spent considerably less than one-third of that much up to the present time, or lent that much?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman will find in the hearings a full and comprehensive statement of the loans, together with a complete statement covering the activities of the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The Rural Electrification Administration had available $24,000,000 during this year for loans, which they received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

We have given them $30,000,000 in here for loans and $1,450,000 for administrative expenses.

Mr. MAY. Pursuing my inquiry a little further, what amount of money, if the gentleman happens to remember from the hearings, has the Rural Electrification Administration been able to lend up to the present time? As I understand it, the bill creating this agency provided an appropriation of $50,000,000 a year for 8 years or a total authorization of $400,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not have the details of those loans right at hand. The gentleman will find them in the hearings.

Mr. MAY. Approximately?

Mr. WOODRUM. We were concerned, of course, with the question of administrative expenses and personnel.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. That money was not been available. This is the first part that has been made available. The bill authorized the Congress to appropriate $50,000,000 for the first year and $40,000,000 for 9 succeeding years. The money that the Rural Electrification Administration has heretofore had was received through an allotment which the President made of $100,000,000. Later he withdrew $90,000,000. So during the term of the Rural Electrification, from the time the act was passed, including new funds, there have been $8,000,000 allotted, if I remember correctly.

Mr. MAY. That was my object in endeavoring to secure the particular information. I may say I am not criticizing at all. I believe in the activities of the Rural Electrification Administration. The point I am trying to make is this: If it has been unable to lend more than $8,000,000 in the whole year it has been at work, the possibility is it will not be able to handle $30,000,000 during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. WOODRUM. The testimony before our committee was that they could handle it and that they needed it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. It must be remembered that during the time the Rural Electrification Administration has been authorized by the President it has been busy setting up an organization throughout the country. They have been engaged with applications, sifting them and finding out whether or not they were justified. They are now about up to the point where they are able to allot money for specific projects, and have been doing this for the last 3 months. This is the reason that during the first year of the existence of Rural Electrification there was not much money paid out. They were simply setting up their administrative force and getting ready to investigate and handle the applications that were made.

Mr. MAY. Then it is entirely probable that during the coming year they will actually put in more rural-electrification activities?

Mr. RAYBURN. I presume the committee in appropriating $30,000,000, when they were authorized to appropriate $50,000,000, thinks, in all probability, $30,000,000 can be reasonably loaned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And, if the gentleman will permit, in many instances they were able to get private corporations to extend their lines and therefore it was not necessary to spend the money allotted. They were getting these companies to extend their lines at very reasonable rates.

Mr. RAYBURN. That has been true in many instances.

Mr. MAY. As I understand, they are merely aiding the private utilities in accommodating the rural communities, and they are advancing the money, as a matter of fact, to do this.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman from Virginia think I am taking too much time on this question? It is a matter in which I am very much interested, because I happen to be joint author of the rural electrification bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Go ahead; I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Here is what often happens. Taking a section like my own, for instance, of small towns and a very thickly populated farming area, rural electrification was practically unknown before the President made this allotment. In many instances, after a survey has been made to determine whether or not a community would take electricity, when 30 or 40 or 50 farmers signed up in a community and made the gesture that they were going to form a cooperative for the purpose of borrowing this money, the power companies have then come in and preempted the field, so there was no use in the cooperatives proceeding.

Mr. WOODRUM. On page 477 the gentleman will find a statement that will be useful in that connection.

Mr. MAY. If the gentleman will permit just one other question on another subject, in regard to the Social Security Board, for which an appropriation is being made here of $18,000,000, I believe the gentleman said this is for administrative expenses. As I understood the law when we enacted it, the levying on industry of a graduated tax that goes up to a certain point was intended not only to take care of the Social Security obligations but also to pay the administrative expenses of the Board?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; that is the unemployment insurance tax. It does not go to the Social Security Board at all. It goes to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MAY. Then this has reference to the old-age pension system?

Mr. WOODRUM. Eighteen million dollars is for the purpose of taking care of the entire administrative expense of the Social Security Board, which administers not only unemployment insurance but old-age benefits, aid to crippled children and to the blind. The tax to which the gentleman is referring is a separate tax levied upon industry and paid into the Federal Treasury, and the Social Security Board has no control over it whatever.

Mr. MAY. How is that handled?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is handled by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know just what agency it is that lends money to individuals to buy electrical appliances, and so forth, but what has been the fact with reference to the actual working out of that proposition?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman refers to the Electric Home and Farm Authority. They do not come under our bill, but I may say to the gentleman that they are in liquidation, and in real liquidation and not theoretical liquidation.

Mr. SNELL. Then that agency is going to stop doing business. Does the gentleman know anything about the results of its operations?

Mr. WOODRUM. According to my information it has not been very successful, and for that reason they are folding up.

I have commented on the new fields of activity which the Federal Government has been going into that cost money. I do not know just how much the Members of the House know about The National Archives. Perhaps you have not been very much interested because you have not received letters from your constituents about it. Perhaps the only communications you have had have been from people who wanted jobs down there, but let me say to you that the building and setting up of this institution is a result, not of this administration, but a number of preceding administrations, going all the way back almost to the foundation of the Government, when recommendations were made pointing out the necessity of having some repository where important Government documents could be perpetuated and made available for public use. We passed then a National Archives bill, and I want to pass amongst you, for a moment, some of the pictures I have here so you may see some of the hundreds of different places where the important documents of our Government were being kept prior to the time The National Archives began taking care of them.

These pictures will show you where the records of these bureaus and departments have been stored. They were stored in garages, in attics; they were eaten by dust and by vermin and were in the most terrible condition that can be imagined. Most of them were in Washington, but some were scattered in other agencies.

It is the duty of The Archives department to take these records and determine, by the particular board set up, how to keep them, to perpetuate them, and to make them available for department students and others.

Now, we have many problems to meet. One is the cleaning of the documents. That is a new field of activity. There is no precedent for it. The engineers have gotten up a way to clean and fumigate these documents. I have a picture here, and they found many of these public records in a terrible state, about ready to go to pieces.

They have discovered a process for cleaning where the document is put under high pressure and something like cellophane, but more durable, is pressed on both sides of it, which not only preserves it but will carry on for succeeding generations.

There is a new field of activity. It is the setting up of a new bureau with some three or four hundred employees to man that agency.

But is there any person who will say that it is not necessary for the Government to keep and perpetuate its records?

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to commend the activities of the Archivist. But may I hope that we who believe in genuine civil service may have the aid of the distinguished gentleman on the floor in an effort to bring about civil service in this highly technical and important department?

The Seventy-third Congress expressly provided that The Archives should be outside of the civil service. May we not hope that we will have the assistance of the gentleman from Virginia to put this activity under the civil service and climinate politics entirely?

Mr. WOODRUM. I quite agree with the gentleman, but I want to call his attention to this fact: We have across the Plaza the Congressional Library, which has never been under civil service, and yet the Congress has withstood the importunities of both major political parties to make that a political football, and I do not think it has ever been made a political football, though sometimes some of my colleagues thought so. I remember a few years ago our distinguished colleague from Oklahoma making a great complaint about the number of the gentleman's own party who were in that organization, but I agree with the gentleman from Michigan, and I should like to see it put under civil service and put on the merit basis.

I want now to comment on two of these emergency organizations that come to us for the first time for administrative expenses, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration. We have made a further cut in the appropriation for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

We cut them $2,000,000, and those gentlemen feel very keenly that perhaps they are going to be pinched pretty tight over that appropriation. However, I say to those of my colleagues who have expressed interest and some apprehension about the cut we made there that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had 22,000 employees when at the peak of its lending operations, and that number was reduced to 15,000. They believe now that during 1938 they will probably have 160,000 foreclosure proceedings going on. That will require a lot of personnel, and under the bill we give them $1,000,000 more for 1938 than for 1937, which will permit the employment of nearly 1,000 additional personnel; and our committee feels that we have given them enough to run them through 1938.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I have been in conference with two or three of the employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the last 10 days on two different occasions, and they are boasting to me that the Government was able to borrow that money at about 3 percent or less, and that they are using it on their bonds, and that they were lending it out at 5 percent, and that the difference between the cost of the money and the amount they were getting for it would be amply sufficient to pay all administrative costs.

Mr. WOODRUM. They pay out their own fund. This money is not appropriated out of the Treasury. We authorize them to use their own funds.

Mr. MAY. In other words, this is an authorization?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is all.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Numerous foreclosures are going on, as I understand it. What is the policy of the Department with reference to taking over this property, and how is this to be conducted after the Government gets the title to it, when it does get title?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is to be conducted just like any private concern would conduct it after taking the property over. It is to take it over under foreclosure. It has to be maintained, it has to be managed, it has to be repaired, and then it will be sold, if it can be sold.

Mr. DOWELL. Does that mean that it will be the policy of the Government to take over all these numerous properties and conduct them as a private individual would?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Government has to take over the property until it can dispose of it. There is nothing else that it can do, but I say to the gentleman that the Government is not taking it over if there is a possible way to get out of taking it over.

Mr. DOWELL. A great many are reported to be now under foreclosure.

Mr. WOODRUM. Undoubtedly, but there again the Government will probably get a lucky break, because so much of this property is appraised and foreclosed when the market is down, and if real estate comes back, as many people think it will, the Government in many instances will have a good, sound investment.

Mr. DOWELL. But would it not be better if we can still retain that in the possession of the owner of the property than to take it over by the Government?

Mr. WOODRUM. Very much better, but, after all, it is a loan and not a gift. If the point comes where it is obvious that the owner of the property cannot handle it or pay for it, we have to take it over.

Mr. DOWELL. I assume that the gentleman has made a careful investigation of this situation. What is the reason for such a great number of foreclosures in this agency in so short a time?

Mr. WOODRUM. The reason is that a great many people borrowed money from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and sat down and said, "The Government has this, and I know that my Congressman or Senator will not let them foreclose the property", and they bought new automobiles or took trips around the world instead of paying for their property. That is not so in every instance; and, of course, there are some cases where adversity has come. We are now meeting new difficulties in the great flood, where people are being wiped out, and they are an unknown quantity, which we are not able to appraise, but in many instances people have not manifested the same desire to meet their obligations that they would manifest if dealing with private individuals.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman know what proportion of the whole amount the Government will have to foreclose?

Mr. WOODRUM. Out of 1,300,000 loans made so far they have 160,000 foreclosures.

Mr. SNELL. Has there been any estimate of what the loss will be on that?

Mr. WOODRUM. They do not estimate that ultimately there will be any loss. Of course, there will be peak losses, and the foreclosures will be very heavy in the first few years, but after persons have paid on their property for a year or two they will have sufficient equity in it, with the market coming back to anywhere like normal, that the Government's liability will be small.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman state what proportion are keeping up their payments?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is in the hearings, but I do not recall just now.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Has the gentleman noticed where a decree of the court has granted injunctions against foreclosure on these properties in one section?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I had not noticed that.

Mr. GIFFORD. It seems interesting that a court should issue an injunction that would not allow them to foreclose. However, the profits derived because of the rate of interest on which money was provided as against the rate of interest paid, is the reason for expecting there will be no loss, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel that I have taken too much time of the Committee. My distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] is going to discuss the bill and then we shall go under the 5-minute rule. I want to thank the Committee for its courtesy and patience. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 25 minutes.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks and to include one or two brief tables, together with information provided on request by the Federal Communications Commission and by the General Accounting Office.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to pay my respects to the majority members of this subcommittee. It has been my privilege to serve on this committee for a number of years with the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. I have long considered him one of the outstanding members of this House. I am sure we all agree that we are very fortunate in having him in the position which he holds at this time.

I want to express to him and to my able and genial friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] and to the other members of this subcommittee my sincere appreciation of their consideration at all times in connection with the preparation of this bill.

It is always a little difficult to compare totals carried from year to year in the independent offices appropriation bill, for the reason that the agencies covered vary considerably from year to year. I insert at this point a table which has been prepared showing a comparison of the totals this year with last year.

	1937	Budget estimate 1938	Bill for 1938	Increase (+), decrease (−) bill compared with 1937	Increase (+), decrease (−) bill compared with Budget for 1938
Regular establishments, annual appropriations	$907,759,405	$991,310,963	$986,360,963	+$78,601,558	−$4,950,000
Emergency agencies authorizations	[1] 79,294,520	61,396,180	60,396,180	−18,898,340	−1,000,000
Total	987,053,925	1,052,707,143	1,046,757,143	+59,703,218	−5,950,000
Permanent appropriations	91,993,491	93,556,255	[2] 93,556,255	+1,562,764
Grand total	1,079,047,416	1,146,263,398	[3] 1,140,313,398	+61,265,982	−5,950,000

[2] Not included in the bill. Reported here for the purpose of affording a complete Budget picture.
[3] Includes a total of $93,556,255 for permanent appropriations which are not carried in the bill, but is reported here for the purpose of affording a complete Budget picture.

While it is difficult to make an exact comparison, the trend of the totals carried is, I think, significant. If we take the totals carried in the bill for the fiscal years 1935 to 1938, inclusive, leaving out deficiency items, and limiting ourselves to items for the regular establishments, we find that the totals run something like this:

1935	$617,000,000
1936	777,000,000
1937	880,000,000

On this basis the increase as compared with the bill a year ago amounts to about $106,000,000. Including deficiency items and reappropriations the increase on the basis of appropriations amounts to about $69,000,000, or on the basis of actual expenditure, to about $128,000,000.

The bill, as has been pointed out, represents in respect to the regular establishments a reduction as compared with Budget figures, of $4,950,000, reflecting a reduction in the salaries and administrative expenditures of the Social Security Board to the extent of $5,000,000, and an increase to the extent of $50,000 for the care and maintenance of the Executive Mansion and grounds.

The sum recommended by the Budget for the administrative expenditures of so-called emergency agencies amounts to roughly $61,000,000, or a decrease, as compared with estimated expenditure for the current year, of about $18,000,000. Your committee recommends a reduction in the Budget figures amounting to $1,000,000, reflecting a decrease for Home Owners' Loan Corporation of $2,000,000 and an increase for Federal Housing Administration of $1,000,000.

The principal items of increase and decrease appear for the regular establishments on page 3 of the report and for the emergency items on page 26 of the report.

The bill also carries permanent appropriations amounting to about ninety-three and one-half million dollars, an increase of about one and one-half million dollars as compared with the present year. The grand total, as indicated in the table, amounts to $1,140,313,398.

Mr. Chairman, the scope of the independent offices appropriation bill is always very great. It is particularly so this year because of the far-reaching character of the new items, which appear in the bill for the first time. As the chairman of the subcommittee has indicated, there are 32 agencies provided for in one way or another in this bill. Among the new items you will find such important items as the Social Security Board, the Rural Electrification Administration, the Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration, and the Public Works Administration. It is obvious that in the time available this morning any comprehensive treatment of the items carried in this bill is out of the question. All that can be done is refer in a very brief way to a few points which seem important in connection with the several agencies.

Just a few words, first, as to the items with which we are more familiar which have appeared in this bill in previous years.

I have already spoken in respect of the Federal Communications Commission, or more specifically, with respect to the Radio Broadcasting Division of that Commission. I have already called attention to transfers of broadcasting licenses approved by the Commission, which in the absence of further explanation appear to be without justification if not scandalous. I am not going to say anything further on that subject at this time. I shall, however, under permission granted insert at this point certain information furnished by the Commission on request.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The principal item in the bill is the item of about $585,000,000, the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration. This is an item in which we are always particularly interested. You will find an increase in the item for salaries and expenses amounting to about $7,000,000, an increase providing for over 10,000 additional beds to be available in the fiscal year 1938. A comprehensive report in regard to all the various activities of this great agency will be found in the hearings. The total appropriation for the administration as a whole reflects a substantial decrease as compared with other years.

I call the attention of the Committee particularly to the increase in appropriations for the Interstate Commerce Commission. This increase is explained by two items: First, an increase of about $40,000 as a result of additional duties imposed in respect to air mail; and, second, and more important, an increase of about $750,000 as a result of additional duties in connection with the regulation of the motor carriers of the country. The task of the Commission in the latter connection is very great indeed. It is estimated that some 150,000 carriers and brokers and a total of about 450,000 motor vehicles will come under the regulation of the Commission. In dealing with this problem I feel sure that the Commission will show the same ability and efficiency that it has shown in respect to other great problems in the past.

The Federal Trade Commission also reflects a substantial increase in appropriations, amounting to about $442,000. This increase is explained almost entirely by additional work which is called for under the terms of the Robinson-Patman bill. The Commission expects to have available for work in this connection a total amount of $513,163.

The Railroad Retirement Board, affecting some 200,000 workers in the great railroad systems of the country, shows an increase in administrative expenses and a substantial decrease in respect to annuities payable under this act. Both are explained by litigation pending at this time challenging the constitutionality of this legislation. In connection with this litigation the Court has held that the railroads of the country shall not be required to furnish information as to service records which it was anticipated would be furnished by the roads. As a result, the Retirement Board has been compelled to place an additional force in the field to obtain the information for itself.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman mean that the railroads have refused to furnish the information they had?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I understand the Court has held that the roads are not under obligation to furnish the information referred to at their own expense. The railroads have felt that they should not be called upon to do the clerical work in connection with furnishing the required information. I think there is no objection on their part to letting others come in and do the work.

Mr. MICHENER. I wanted to be sure it was not information which the company had in proper form but refused to give to the Board.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The Tariff Commission appropriation reflects a slight decrease as compared with the present fiscal year. The record raises the question, I think, of the extent and value of the functions of the Commission under present conditions and policies. Costs of foreign production, according to the testimony of the Commission, are largely unobtainable at this time. In their place invoice prices have been used, despite the fact that they have proven unreliable in the past and in certain instances subject to Government control. The extent to which transportation costs are available is not entirely clear.

The State Department and the Committee on Reciprocity Information seem to have taken over in large measure the work of the Commission under the present policy of tariff reduction.

In the trade agreement with Cuba, for example, it would appear that the findings of the Commission were not relied upon. The duty on sugar was slashed to such a point as to impose a handicap, as I understand it, amounting to about $12 per ton on the beet-sugar growers of this country. The action taken, I believe, has imposed a burden on the Federal Treasury of something over $40,000,000 a year. It appears to have carried with it no benefit to the millions of consumers of sugar in this country. On the contrary, the price of sugar today is higher than it was before the reduction. The direct beneficiaries are apparently those importing sugar to America from Cuba, a list of whom will be found in the hearings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the reduction in duty throws as a burden on the shoulders of the domestic beet producers about $12 per ton?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Twelve dollars per ton; yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It amounts to $1.10 per bag, and there are 20 bags per short ton. This, therefore, would make a burden of $22 per short ton. In other words, the duty was reduced from $2 per 100 to 90 cents per 100 on 96° sugar.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So it would certainly be at least $22 per ton which has been taken out of the returns of the beet growers of this country in favor of the sugar interests of Cuba.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I thank the gentleman.

If present policies are to continue, it seems to me the status of the Commission should be carefully considered.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman refer to the page of the hearings on which the list of these beneficiaries appear?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I shall be pleased to place that in the RECORD.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I thank the gentleman; that is what I sought.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The information appears on page 573 of the hearings.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take too much time, but perhaps I may refer briefly also to certain points in connection with some of the new agencies appearing in the bill for the first time.

The Social Security Board is, of course, of vital importance to millions of people in this country.

As a matter of fact, it expects to have between twenty-six and thirty million beneficiaries in the near future.

The total available a year ago was about $188,000,000. The committee recommendation in respect to the next fiscal year is approximately $255,000,000. Every cent requested in respect to annuities has been approved. Insofar as the expenses of administration are concerned, the committee recommends a substantial reduction as compared with the Budget figures. Nevertheless, as the chairman of the subcommittee has pointed out, the amount recommended is practically double the sum expended in the present fiscal year.

The Commission requests a force of about 8,500; 4,000 departmental; 4,500 in the field. It contemplates operations through 12 regional offices, and 289 district and branch offices, or a total of 301 offices.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Did those appearing before the committee on behalf of the Social Security Board express an opinion as to whether or not this force would increase from year to year, or are we presumed to have the maximum this year?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think there is special demand for an increase this time inasmuch as the provisions of title 2 are going into effect.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think the gentleman understood me. What I intended to ask was whether or not we may figure from the statement of the members of the Board that this is the peak year so far as employment by the Board is concerned, or will it take a larger force to administer the Social Security Act in years to come?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not recall any specific testimony on that point. I think all previous experience indicates, however, that the size of this agency will be increased tremendously in the years to come.

The Rural Electrification Administration has also been referred to. That Administration had in the present fiscal year about $1,200,000 for administration expenses, and a total of $24,000,000 for loans received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. For the next fiscal year the committee recommendation is for $1,500,000 or thereabouts for administration expenses and $30,000,000 for the 1938 loan program.

The record indicates that this Administration has about 222 projects under way in 34 State, with a total value of about $32,000,000. Loans have been made on an 80-percent basis for 20 years at a rate of interest of 2.77 percent.

The Home Loan Bank Board also appears for the first time with a recommendation of $1,140,000 as compared to $1,072,212 for the past year. The record indicates a total membership of something like 3,800 in this organization.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. It is my understanding that the Home Loan Corporation is liquidating. Is it necessary to have so many employees for a liquidating organization?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to my friend from Minnesota that I was referring to the Home Loan Bank Board as distinguished from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The committee recommendation in respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is a reduction to the extent of $2,000,000 as compared with the Budget figures.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman may perhaps refer to this later, but for fear he will not take the time, may I make this statement. I notice a reference to the R. F. C. Have they asked for more money as a liquidating corporation than they had before for servicing and expenses? I notice they claim they will need just as much money to carry on as they had before.

While the gentleman is looking that up may I read this rather startling statement which I find in the RECORD, because we have heard so much about the solvency of the banks?—

The proper servicing of these investments will continue to require close supervision when it is considered that an analysis recently completed indicated that 1,099 banks—

About one-third of the banks that have been helped—have less sound common stock today than they had upon the injection of our money.

I notice in the R. F. C. report of their assets and liabilities in order to balance they are carrying nearly two and one-half billion dollars paid for relief under the orders of Congress as assets in order to offset liabilities of over $4,000,000,000 in notes they owe the Treasury.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] state from whose testimony he is reading in the hearings, because that is material?

Mr. GIFFORD. The R. F. C. report to the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Give the page of the hearings.

Mr. GIFFORD. Page 957. This item of assets is $2,347,000,000 plus, which are allocations for relief previously given. I want to ask the gentleman to be a little bit plainer. Will the R. F. C., as a corporation, require an appropriation of Congress to make good those assets? Did the gentleman inquire with reference to those assets and liabilities?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, perhaps I can answer his several questions together.

Insofar as his first question concerning the amount requested by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is concerned, it is my understanding that in the present fiscal year there was available to the Corporation a total of $11,945,308; whereas the committee recommendation in respect to the next fiscal year amounts to $9,500,000, or a reduction of about $2,400,000 on a liquidation basis.

I believe that the Corporation asked the Bureau of the Budget for about $10,800,000 on the basis of a going concern. I may say incidentally that there is reflected in the reduction a decrease in personnel from about 3,000 to about 2,400.

As to the other question which the gentleman raises and which is, of course, of great importance, the record indicates that there has been authorized a total disbursement by the Corporation amounting to $11,300,000,000, or thereabouts, of which $2,800,000,000, or thereabouts, represents allocations to other departments, or for direct relief by order of Congress and not by decision of the Corporation itself.

Of these totals, approximately $9,000,000,000 has been actually disbursed, including approximately $2,700,000,000 for allocations to other departments and for direct relief.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is it a proper method of furnishing information to state that $2,800,000,000 are still assets, although it has been spent with nothing now to show for it? Is that a proper method of bookkeeping for the R. F. C. and the Treasury to follow?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. As the gentleman knows, both he and I have felt from the outset that this was not a proper method of providing the sums necessary for these departments or for direct relief. There never has been, to my mind, any reason why these sums should have been provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They are nothing more than direct appropriations and I see no justification for carrying them as assets. The gentleman has emphasized clearly the impropriety of this procedure on the floor of the House.

Now, may I say just a word as to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The totals available for the Corporation for the present fiscal year amount to about $29,000,000. The Budget recommendation in respect of the next fiscal year increases that figure to about $32,000,000, although, as the gentleman from Minnesota has just pointed out, the Corporation is in the process of liquidation, no loans having been possible since July 12, 1936. Your committee reduced this recommendation by $2,000,000, making available an appropriation of $30,000,000, an increase of $1,000,000 as compared with the present year. The increase is recommended in the light of testimony submitted of additional work in connection with the management of property taken over under foreclosure.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. How long, approximately, is it estimated it will take to liquidate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think the gentleman's guess is as good as mine in that respect. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee stated in the RECORD, I think, that, in his judgment, the Corporation would probably be here 50 years hence.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I noticed last year, after they started to function as a liquidating corporation, they acquired a large and expensive building and seem to have established themselves quite permanently in Washington Government society.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It is fair to say there is a tremendous problem involved in the management and liquidation of the property which is coming into their hands.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. In connection with the amount by which the committee reduced the appropriation for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, it is my understanding that the H. O. L. C. feels that on account of the increased work they will have in connection with the foreclosures that are now contemplated, they should have an additional allowance for this work. As I understand, they expect to foreclose about 160,000 additional mortgages and if they buy this property in, the Corporation will have to recondition it, they will have to have caretakers and people to examine the condition of the property, as well as take care of it, and I am advised the contention of the committee is, as evidenced by the reduction in force, they will not need any additional help. I presume the gentleman has gone into this very thoroughly and I should like to have his views on the subject if he has not already stated them.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to the gentleman in the first place that I think a good deal of the expenditure which he has in mind is not strictly administrative expenditure. It would, therefore, not be included within the limitation fixed by the recommendation of the Committee. Furthermore, the committee recommendation does carry with it an increase of $1,000,000 as compared with the funds available to the Corporation during the present fiscal year.

The estimated number of foreclosures as of June 30, 1938, is 160,000; the estimated dollar value is about $600,000,000. The Corporation has made about 1,000,000 loans of a total value of something over $3,000,000,000. They have been made on an 80-percent basis for 15 years at an annual charge of $7.91 per $1,000. The foreclosures estimated would amount to about 16 percent in terms of number of loans made or to about 20 percent in terms of dollar value.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. With respect to the $30,000,000 that we appropriate direct from the Treasury, understanding that all payments on principal have to be held to retire notes, is there any money received from the payment of interest or other things covered into the Treasury? In other words, it is stated that this goes to a revolving fund. What is that revolving fund? We can only assume that the revolving fund is kept there to take care of losses and expenses.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to the gentleman, if I understand his question, that the funds of the corporation go to the Treasury only upon liquidation of this activity.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then the revolving fund is going to be kept there and every year we are going to actually appropriate $30,000,000 to a corporation that is not going to lose any money. Can the gentleman give some explanation of this revolving fund, from what source the money comes to go into the revolving fund and how it is used? I find nothing in the RECORD in explanation of it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman, of course, understands that we are not making any appropriation for this activity. All we are doing is placing a limitation on the administrative expenditures which the corporation otherwise would be authorized to make in its discretion without limitation.

Mr. GIFFORD. I understand that. Then no money is going into the Treasury and then going out of the Treasury, as is usually the case, but they are to be allowed to pay this out of their own revolving fund.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The Congress simply exercises its control with a view to keeping the administrative expenditures within bounds.

Mr. GIFFORD. And can the gentleman tell me exactly what the revolving fund may be at the moment and how it was obtained?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I assume that what my colleague has in mind is the result of the normal receipts and expenditures of the Corporation.

Mr. GIFFORD. Any collection from principal must appear in another fund for the retirement of the bonds.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. May I call my colleague's attention to the balance sheet on page 665. This might be helpful in answering his question.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is the collection of interest and losses by foreclosure and expenses incident thereto all in the revolving fund?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not think I can answer my colleague's question more specifically.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not blame the gentleman. I have asked several and get no explanation. No explanation was given to the committee; therefore the committee would be unable to answer it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When the Bureau ceases to function and the balance of the revolving fund is covered back into the Treasury—when that occurs it is true that such losses as may be indicated from time to time will have been absorbed and hidden or submerged, due to the way the revolving fund and the manner in which it has operated; is not that true?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think the answer to the gentleman's question depends on the result of the operations of the Corporation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Assume that the result of the operations is a profit. Is it not true that such losses as may be covered on individual items, individual foreclosures, will be submerged?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If the records are properly kept I should suppose they would show all individual transactions.

Now, I may mention in passing that the Corporation holds about one-sixth of the dollar value of all urban mortgages. It has a force of about 14,000 and maintains 54 State, 162 district, and 223 loan-service offices or stations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The Federal Housing Administration authorization recommended amounts to $9,500,000 as compared with about $11,040,000 for the present fiscal year. It reflects, as has been indicated, an increase of $1,000,000 above Budget figures. The Administration has a total personnel of about 1,100 departmental, and about 1,700 in the field, and maintains 67 offices. The record indicates under title I of the Federal Housing Act, the insurance of loans to the number of 1,300,000 of a total value of $500,000,000. It indicates under title II insurance approved to the extent of about $570,000,000. There is a $20,000,000 deficit over a period of 2½ years with funds being provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The recommended authorization for the administrative expenditure of the Public Works Administration amounts to $10,000,000 as compared with $26,000,000 available for the present fiscal year. There is a corresponding reduction in personnel from about 8,800 to about 3,100. The amount recommended is on a liquidation basis.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make four observations in concluding what I have to say.

I want to say first that this bill, in my judgment, represents a real step in the direction of proper control over expenditures of the so-called emergency agencies. For several years many of these agencies have received funds for operation out of lump-sum appropriations or the issue of securities. Congress has had no control whatsoever over their expenditures. The dangers in this situation have been apparent to many of us. I have personally appealed on more than one occasion for the reestablishment of proper control.

A year ago the deficiency appropriation bill carried the following provision.

SEC. 7. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, none of the establishments or agencies named in subsection (b) of this section shall, after June 30, 1937, incur any obligations for administrative expenses except pursuant to an annual appropriation specifically therefor, nor shall any such establishment or agency continue to function after said date unless established by or pursuant to law: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to extend the period during which any such establishment or agency heretofore has been authorized by law to function.

(b) 1. Federal Home Loan Bank Board;
2. Home Owners' Loan Corporation;
3. Federal Housing Administration;
4. Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation;
5. Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation;
6. Export-Import Bank of Washington;
7. Second Export-Import Bank of Washington, D. C.;
8. Reconstruction Finance Corporation;
9. Electric Home and Farm Authority;
10. Commodity Credit Corporation;
11. Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works;
12. Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation;
13. Reconstruction Finance Mortgage Co.

The effect of this proviso was to compel 13 of these agencies to come to Congress in respect to administrative expenses. More recently the Congress received the President's Budget message; I quote from that message:

Such of the emergency agencies and corporations as may be continued by Congress should have all their expenditure requirements made subject to the same scrutiny that is given by the Bureau of the Budget to the expenditure requirements of the regular departments and establishments, and I recommend that a provision to that effect be included in any future legislation for the continuance of any such agency or corporation.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we shall not again see such a condition as has prevailed in this respect during the last few years.

Two days ago the House had an opportunity to listen to a splendid address by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. He spoke on the history of the General Accounting Office, and of the vital importance of that office to Congress, and to the country as a whole. I share very keenly the sentiments which he expressed. I have pointed out on more than one occasion on the floor of the House instances where proper regulation by the Comptroller General seemed to me to be lacking. I again call the attention of the committee to the fact that there are today some 23 agencies of the National Government which do not account to the Comptroller General. A list of these agencies follows:

LIST OF ACTIVITIES WHICH DO NOT SUBMIT ACCOUNTS TO GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE FOR AUDIT

Agricultural Credit Corporation (under F. C. A.).
Alien Property Custodian.
Central banks for cooperatives (F. C. A.).
Corporation of Foreign Security Holders.
Comptroller of Currency (assessments and insolvent, etc., banks).
Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.
Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation (F. C. A.).
Federal savings and loan associations.
Federal Reserve Board.
Gorgas Memorial Institute (field audit).
Home Owners' Loan Corporation (offers to account).
Hospitals of various services.
Inland Waterways Corporation.
Insular governments' funds in Treasury, except Virgin Islands.
Merchant Fleet Corporation (local audit).
Panama Railway Co.
Panama Steamship Co.
Perry's Victory Memorial Commission (collections).
Reconstruction Finance Corporation.
Smithsonian Institution (funds, etc.).
Tennessee Valley Association Cooperatives, Inc.
Various special deposits.
Virgin Islands (partial).

There may be some good and sufficient reason why some one or more of these agencies should not account. It occurs to me, however, that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments might well inquire into the matter with a view to assuring a proper audit, insofar as possible, of all agencies charged with the expenditure of Federal funds.

The troubles of the Comptroller General are not limited, I may add, to those agencies which do not account to him. Sometime ago I became interested in a newspaper story referring to difficulties experienced in respect to rental and benefit payments under the Department of Agriculture. Under leave to extend, I insert at this point copies of two letters furnished me at my request, the first addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture, under date of July 17, 1936; the second addressed to the Comptroller General under date of August 5, 1936.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, July 17, 1936.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

SIR: I have to refer to office letter dated March 16, 1934, in reply to your letter dated February 13, 1934, relative to the filing of rental and benefit contracts in this office in accordance with the provisions of section 3743, Revised Statutes. The last paragraph of letter of March 16, 1934, supra, is as follows:

"The contracts must, of course, be filed here. The law clearly so requires. As a matter of fact, an audit of payments made thereunder would be impossible without them. Inasmuch as it will be necessary to withhold approval of all such payments appearing in accounts until the original contracts are received, which will involve considerable additional work in this office, it is hoped a special effort will be made to transmit them here with no unnecessary delay."

The transmission of the contracts to this office was again requested in office letter dated July 9, 1934.

In your letter of February 13, 1934, supra, you stated that—

"* * * Only one copy of each rental and benefit contract is on file in this Department. On most of the contracts there are two payments or more extending over a period of at least 1 year. More than a year will probably elapse before we can release any of our rental and benefit contracts. For example, in the case of the cotton contracts for 1933, some of the payments will not be made until 1935. In addition to the need for having the contracts here until after final payment is made, they will be currently required for reference in connection with the audit of the 1934–35 cotton program.

"There were over 1 million contracts entered into in the 1933 cotton program. Each contract file contains at least three papers—an offer, an acceptance, and a certificate of performance. Many of the contracts contain letters and other documents. The volume of work which would be involved in preparing duplicate copies so that we could forward the original to you would be so great that, in our opinion, it would be prohibitive. Our problem in connection with other commodities is similar. By the close of the calendar year 1934 we will probably have entered into a total of 10 million or more contracts involving rental and benefit payments.

"In view of the foregoing explanation, it is requested that the General Accounting Office not press the matter of the submission of the rental and benefit contracts until such time as this Department has completed its work on them."

Almost 2½ years have elapsed since your letter of February 13, 1934, and it would appear that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration should by now have completed its work on the contracts pertaining to the 1933 and 1934–35 programs. It is therefore requested, in order that further delay in the audit of the payments made thereunder may be avoided, that the contracts be promptly turned over to this office.

Respectfully,

R. N. ELLIOTT,
Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., August 5, 1936.

The honorable the ACTING COMPTROLLER OF THE UNITED STATES.

DEAR MR. ELLIOTT: This Department is in receipt of your letter dated July 17, 1936, file A-44002, requesting that the rental and benefit contracts be transmitted to your office in accordance with the provisions of section 3743, Revised Statutes.

You are advised that this Department is currently engaged in the final checking of the corn-hog reduction contract for the 1934 crop year. When this work is completed, these contracts will be transmitted to your office.

The 1933 cotton contract is still occasionally required for reference in connection with the audit of the 1934–35 cotton contracts. It is planned to make the final check of these 1933 cotton contracts and turn them over to your office as soon as practicable after the completion of the checking of the corn-hog reduction contracts.

The other rental and benefit commodity contracts entered into by this Department cannot be released because all payments to be approved under the contracts have not been made. The wheat allotment contract, 1934–35 cotton contract, various types of tobacco contracts, 1935 corn-hog contract, sugarcane contract, sugar-beet contract, rice contract, and peanut contract all provide for payments upon proof of compliance for 1935 crop year, and at this date a large number of the final 1935 payments have not been made.

This Department is exerting every effort to complete all payments under all commodity contracts as promptly as possible, and it is planned to make a final check of contracts for each commodity and transmit the same to the General Accounting Office immediately following the completion of 1935 payments.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

The position of the Secretary of Agriculture is, to say the least, difficult to justify. Prompt and complete auditing of all agencies of the Federal Government expending Federal funds seems to me essential for the protection of any administration, for the protection of Congress, for the protection of the American people.

A word as to propaganda. A number of years ago I served in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. In those days if the Secretary or Under Secretary had something to say, he pressed a button and dictated a short release. What is the situation today? I submit that the record before your committee indicates that a situation has developed today with respect to publicity in many agencies of the National Government which is absolutely without justification. Millions of dollars of the people's money is being expended under such headings as the "Collection and Dissemination of Information", "Public Relations", "Informational Service", and so on. The service rendered is in fact in large measure propaganda by the agencies concerned.

Take the Rural Electrification Administration, for example. That activity expects to maintain a force of 45 people at a cost of $163,000 for the collection and dissemination of information. This is in addition to a force of 23 at a cost of $70,000 for "utilization" or further education. The Social Security Board expects to maintain a force of 97 persons at a cost of $233,000 for informational service. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the record discloses that during a period of 6 months this service prepared no less than 160 press releases, 450 magazine articles, 180 speeches, 3 moving pictures, and 60 hours of broadcasting. The Federal Housing Administration contemplates a force of 120 at a cost of $500,000.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying in this regard. At a previous session of Congress I called attention to the enormous quantity of printing being done. We can hardly go to our offices in the morning without finding a great deal of printed material, most of which we throw in the waste basket. It seems to me that much of our appropriation that is intended to give employment and relief is being diverted to printing and advertising agencies, to printing being done by the Government Printing Office, whereas in an annual or semiannual report these various agencies could give to the Congress or to the proper authority an account of what they are doing. They are not primarily advertising agencies, and it seems to me that much of this money has been diverted from its proper purpose to advertising their own endeavors.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly, and call his attention to the fact that the three agencies to which I have referred alone account for a total expenditure in this connection of almost a million dollars in a single year.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want half a minute to express my own opinion as reflected in the following article in connection with that item:

> I see no reason on earth why press agents and promotion experts should be attached to a relief administration. Certainly it is not necessary to advertise Santa Claus to the relief clients. They will find the place without any high-pressure salesmanship. And why must it advertise itself to the taxpayers? He has to pay, anyhow, whether he likes it or not. His subscription is not solicited. It is collected. Yet the Relief Administration and all its branches have press agents, under one name or another, whose business is to turn out "stories" about the poor, about the nobility of the Government, and about specific cases. Photographers, ex-newspapermen, special writers, are all busy, not at administering a Government bureau but at selling that bureau's necessity, wisdom, and efficiency to the people who pay for it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not believe the people of this country have any conception of the amount of money which we are spending in this manner. It seems to me another example of the waste and extravagance of recent years.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. What were the three agencies the gentleman mentioned a few moments ago?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I mentioned the Rural Electrification, the Social Security Board, and the Federal Housing Administration.

I call the attention of the Committee in this connection to a provision in a statute enacted by the Congress on October 22, 1913. You will find it in the United States Code, title V, section 54, page 38. It is very short and provides as follows:

> No money appropriated by any act shall be used for the compensation of any publicity expert unless specifically appropriated for that purpose.

Your subcommittee has recorded emphatically its disapproval of the practice which has developed. I trust that the agencies covered by this bill, and, for that matter, every other agency, will be guided accordingly.

Just one more thought, if I may, in conclusion, in respect to the housing activities of this Government. The desire to alleviate poverty and distress among the masses of our people is, of course, shared by us all, particularly in these difficult times through which we are passing. Nevertheless, I think no one can effectively deny that we have at this time too many competing, conflicting, and overlapping agencies in the National Government. The record before the committee in respect to the activities in the housing field emphasizes this fact. Here we find, among others, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Public Works Administration, and the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Authority. In addition there is the Resettlement Administration, and other agencies, all endeavoring from one angle or another to contribute to the solution of the great problems in this field. The purpose is one that appeals to us all. I submit, however, that no one can read the record without an appreciation of the lack of coordination and direction which exists in this field as a whole. I appreciate fully the contribution which has been made by some of the agencies in this connection, but surely there is ample room for improvement in the service rendered.

The record indicates, for example, that the National Government, under title I of the Federal Housing Act, has actually placed itself in the position of guaranteeing loans to the bankers of this country, which impose on the borrowers of small income an annual interest rate to the extent of 9.72 percent.

The record also indicates in spite of all statements to the contrary, that we have not begun to cope with the problem presented by the living conditions of the poor in this country at this time.

The United States, incidentally, is becoming, if it is not already, the world's greatest landlord. It is doubtful if any agency of our Government is in a position at this time to give us an accurate picture of the extent of our investment or of the legal and moral responsibilities as a result of the billion dollars that have been spent by the various Government agencies.

Testifying before your committee, Mr. Stewart McDonald, Administrator of the Federal Housing Administration, made the following statement, which I quote:

> You have not asked me the question, but I will say that it would, of course, simplify the operation of all housing activities of the Government if they were grouped together under one head. But that is for you gentlemen in Congress to determine.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the time has come to take account of stock. I recommend a sweeping survey of the whole situation with a view to clearer understanding, with a view to elimination of conflicting and misdirected efforts in this field which is so vital to millions of our fellow citizens.

I am sorry to have taken so much of the committee's time. I appreciate its consideration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] has expired.

All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For personal services in the office of the President, including the Secretary to the President, and two additional secretaries to the President at $10,000 each; $133,680: Provided, That employees of the executive departments and other establishments of the executive branch of the Government may be detailed from time to time to the office of the President of the United States for such temporary assistance as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the committee has done a fine piece of work in bringing this bill before the House with a reduction in many items. I compliment the chairman and the other members of the subcommittee upon this splendid piece of work.

I want to discuss today one phase of this appropriation bill, and only one, not with a view of offering an amendment, but with the hope that the chairman of the subcommittee and its members will increase the estimates for this particular governmental activity after they have thoroughly gone into the items that make up this particular appropriation. I refer to the appropriation for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has made loans to about 1,021,818 home owners, and the aggregate of the loans is in excess of $3,093,424,244. The annual administrative cost at its peak was $36,000,000. For 1936 it was slightly in excess of $31,500,000. In 1937, if the Budget estimate for an additional sum of $1,500,000,000 is forthcoming, as I understand it will be, the cost of administration will be $30,500,000. The Budget after going into the activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation very carefully and painstakingly, even to the extent of sending representatives into the regional, State, and district offices, submitted estimates to the Congress of $32,000,000. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that $32,000,000 should be given by the Congress to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The property-management branch of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is the only one that has not reduced costs of operation. In 1935 there were 17,000 homes that had been taken over by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and the expenditures for that time were approximately $872,000. During the fiscal year 1938, however, this Corporation will have under its control 160,000 homes instead of 17,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. How will they get these 160,000 homes?

Mr. COLLINS. By foreclosure; and the foreclosure department is separate entirely from the property-management department.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I know the gentleman wants accurate information.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. The property management department is not limited by this appropriation. Any expense to which the Corporation is put for property management is taken out of their funds and is not included in the appropriation that we authorize in the bill. That is not an administrative expense.

Mr. COLLINS. Then, if the gentleman from Virginia is correct in his statement, certainly the Home Owners' Loan Corporation could use $2,000,000 or any necessary amount available in the expense of property management. I am confident, however, that the chairman of the subcommittee is mistaken in his statement. If the gentleman from Virginia will confer with the proper officials I am sure he will find the cost of property management is an administrative expense, and that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation cannot spend any money for this particular item except as authorized and appropriated by Congress If Congress appropriates $32,000,000 for the administrative expenses of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, there is no authority for officials to use an additional amount of money in the cost of personal supervision of properties acquired. This administrative expense of property management, as I understand it, is for such personal service as the supervision of appraising, renting, repairing, and so forth, of acquired properties by the personnel of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I hope the chairman of the subcommittee will further investigate this matter and I believe he will find that my statement is correct. It is my understanding that there is a limitation on the cost of property management, said limitation being definitely determined by the appropriation made by the Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM. They can spend all the money they need for this department out of their funds. There is no limitation put on that.

Mr.COLLINS. They tell me that they are not going to spend any more money for any of these activities than the amounts allowed by the Congress as appropriations.

At $35 per month the losses would amount to around $5,000,000 per month, and I insist that it is the part of good judgment and good management to give to this Corporation in its management of property the amount that they say is necessary and that the Budget says is necessary to properly carry on this particular activity. If we do not do that, this Corporation will lose instead of gain, all of which will come from the Treasury of the United States. I submit that the chairman of this subcommittee and the other members thereof should confer still further with the management of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. After they have done so, if they find that the Budget estimate should be given to this governmental activity, the cut of $2,000,000 should be restored. I know my friend, the chairman of this subcommittee, and I know that he will do it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but my time is too limited to yield.

Mr. Chairman, there were two governmental activities created by the Congress of the United States when Mr. Roosevelt went into office that had more to do with breaking the backbone of the depression than any other two activities. They were the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration. Up to the time these two corporations were created there were approximately $15,000,000,000 of loans on homes in this country, one-third of them maturing each year. This meant that there had to be available each year $5,000,000,000 in order to properly finance loans on homes in this country. With the creation of these two corporations, a different policy was inaugurated and loans were made to mature in 15 years instead of 3, with the result that now it takes only $1,000,000,000 available cash to finance the loans on homes in this country, whereas heretofore it was necessary to have $5,000,000,000 each year; and $1,000,000,000 is available and will continue available because of the inauguration of this new policy. It seems to me, knowing that when this Corporation ceases business will have been self-sustaining and that there will have been no total losses as a result of its creation, that we should make available to it sufficient funds with which to operate effectively.

Mr. TABER and Mr. McCORMACK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, a member of the committee.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House and the Congress to some salient facts in connection with this appropriation, and especially to some things in connection with the emergency agencies that are provided for.

The Federal Home Loan Bank is taken care of with upward of a million dollars. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is allowed $30,000,000.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has mortgages outstanding approximating $2,800,000,000. The expense for servicing those loans and taking care of the property to be taken over will amount to $30,000,000.

The Farm Loan has outstanding mortgages totaling $2,000,000,000, and their total expense, including taking care of $125,000,000 worth of property that they have had to take over, is running at the present time at the rate of approximately $11,000,000 per year, indicating that the Home Loan Board mortgages are costing much more to service and to look after than are the farm loans.

It seems to me it is absolutely ridiculous for these people not to reorganize their business and put it on a sound basis and get down to earth. Frankly, I believe that the $30,000,000 could very largely be reduced and still have more efficiency. If they would put into effect the servicing systems that are in vogue in savings and loan associations and in savings banks which handle these mortgages, and they were kept accurate and currently up to date, I believe they could get along with very much less help.

Mr. Chairman, all of these things have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Until they systematize their business and put it on a sound basis we are not going to have efficiency. I hope when we get to this matter we will not appropriate more than $30,000,000 which the committee has recommended, and, if possible, I believe we should reduce this item.

There are several other items here that are extremely large.

There is an increase of a million dollars over the Budget in the case of the Federal Housing Administration. There are a great many duplications of activities in the nature of appraisers and all that sort of thing as between the H. O. L. C. and the Federal Housing Administration. There are many places where with equal efficiency the same appraisers could do the work for both organizations. There should be cooperation between the various organizations so that the expense to the Government may be reduced. If that plan were followed, we would be able to get along without allowing for this increase above the Budget estimate.

Then there is the R. F. C., with practically $2,000,000,000 of loans outstanding, most of which are in the process of liquidation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, there is the R. F. C. with nine and one-half million dollars. This organization is practically upon a liquidating basis. Very little in the way of new loans is to be expected in the next year. It seems as if that organization could get along and function efficiently without requiring a very considerable amount of help.

Then there is the Public Works Administration with a pay roll of $10,000,000, and it likewise is under liquidation. They have not, in fact, any securities to liquidate or not a sufficient amount to justify that amount of money.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will proceed along the line of trying to keep the expenses of the Government down and trying to save some money for the Federal Treasury. It does not make any difference whether these funds are paid by the H. O. L. C., the P. W. A., or any other organization, the funds ultimately come out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation have been discussed, there are a few observations I feel constrained to make, not by way of criticism, because I dislike to develop the mind of a critic. What I shall state will be an expression of views which have recently developed in my mind as a result of some of the foreclosures that the Corporation has been engaged in recently.

I was amazed to hear the gentleman from Mississippi say they expected to own 160,000 homes next year. They have foreclosed on about 17,000 homes up to the present time out of mortgages approximating 1,300,000, according to his statements.

The purpose of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the emergency was to prevent the squeezing out through foreclosure and prevent the bringing about of a reduction in the number of homes owned in this country by individuals. Not only was it deserving and worthy legislation from the angle of the individual, but from the angle of the Government it was very important. The home owners constitute a very important element in our Government. They are an important part of our middle class. A strong middle class is one of the necessary elements of the existence of a strong stable government. The legislation creating this Corporation had as its objective not only the assistance of the individual home owner but of doing something on a broad scale which would be of invaluable assistance to the continued strength of our Government.

This Corporation has gone through one period. Now it is coming to the other part—the question of foreclosure. Those who administer the law must keep in mind that only those home owners were eligible who were unable to continue their mortgages with private banks.

From the bankers' angle they were bad risks; in any event they were faced with the danger of imminent foreclosure. That is the class of home owners this bill was aimed to assist. When it comes to foreclosure, the officials who are administering this act of Congress should remember that the act was drawn by the Congress in a spirit of humaneness, and we expect that it will be administered by those who are administering that particular law in the humane spirit that the Congress intended.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we will not have 174,000 foreclosures at the end of the next year. I hope the members of the Board and those entrusted with the administration of that act will act with humaneness, and that there will be no hasty or arbitrary action. I hope every consideration will be given to the home owners. That is what the Congress intended. True, we gave them a moratorium period, but in many cases it is not enough. The only group that could benefit from the law was a group faced with immediate foreclosure by the banks who held the mortgages. Many of these people have recently gone back to work, but they have to be given further time. Discretion under the law exists with the Board and the officials of this corporation to extend the humane consideration intended by the Congress.

I rise to speak, not from any angle of criticism, because on the evidence to date I would not be warranted in being a critic. However, I have noticed recently a tendency with respect to foreclosures which might warrant fair criticism in the near future unless caution in this respect is employed by those administering the law. I rise to urge the Corporation to use caution and judgment, and to warn them that unless they do so, criticism will follow.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman stated there were 17,000 foreclosures and I wish to correct that statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. I based my statement on what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] said in that regard.

Mr. ENGEL. On page 633 of the hearings the gentleman will find a statement by Mr. Fahey to the effect that the total number of foreclosures sent to the legal department with instructions to initiate court action aggregated 62,221 cases to November 30, 1936, involving an amount of $248,688,601.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman for the correction.

In conclusion, I hope the officials who are administering this act will keep in mind the underlying intent and spirit of the Congress. When I voted for that bill I intended individually, and I know my colleagues also did, that the element of humaneness should be considered and that when the time came for foreclosure those entrusted with the duty of administration would recognize such intention on the part of the Congress and hold off foreclosure as long as possible in order that as many home owners as possible would be able to retain their property. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, we have not reached the item for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and there has already been 20 or 30 minutes of debate. I have no disposition to shut off Members from speaking, but I hope we can read along in the bill for a while, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

HOME SEIZURES IN THE STATE OF MAINE

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, while discussion of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and its policies seems to be the matter immediately before the House, I rise, not only to express my full sympathy with what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has just said regarding consideration for the borrowers by the Government, but to say also that I know that in many instances the Corporation has shown such consideration. I do not, therefore, rise to criticize their action in foreclosure or to commend it, although the record is somewhat startling when we realize that 66,000 American homes are now being seized by the Government of the United States.

The present policy of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, however, in taking possession by court action of homes during the process of foreclosure is almost unprecedented so far as the State of Maine is concerned and is particularly unfortunate in turning people out of their homes in the middle of a Maine winter.

From the standpoint of the Government, the policy is also open to serious question, as the Government becomes accountable for the rents and profits during the months remaining to complete foreclosure. The property also suffers from lack of occupancy during the cold winter months.

LOW FORECLOSURE COSTS IN MAINE

Whether the same policy is being followed in other States I am not informed, but the State of Maine would seem entitled to some consideration from the fact that the foreclosure costs in the State of Maine are the lowest in the country, as shown by the report of the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill, on page 656, where it appears that the—

> Total foreclosure costs vary from about $10 in Maine, which is the lowest, to approximately $300 in New York State and approximately the same in the State of Illinois. The average in the country is around $150 a case.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY THOUSAND FORECLOSURES

With 66,000 homes now in process of foreclosure and with 100,000 more foreclosures in immediate prospect in the country during the coming year, it is startling to discover that the Corporation is departing from the long-established practices in Maine in cases of this character.

Within the next year the Home Owners' Loan Corporation expects to "own more individual pieces of property than were ever in a single ownership before, and these properties will be scattered throughout nearly every county in the United States."

This is a sufficient indication of the character of the problem with which we must be prepared to cope.

HALT EJECTIONS

I wish to speak of a specific matter in the State of Maine, which may exist in other States, which, I think, if it were properly considered by the Corporation would certainly be called to a halt. This concerns the procedure in foreclosure. In many instances in Maine—I do not know about other States—foreclosure which requires a period of 1 year has been commenced by the process of publication. Foreclosure by taking possession is most unusual in the State of Maine, because the mortgagee then becomes accountable for the rents and profits, so that no banks, corporations, or even loan sharks in the State of Maine, if such there be, so far as my knowledge has gone, have ever resorted to this method of foreclosure, except in most extraordinary cases. But in the State of Maine today, in repeated instances that have been brought to my attention in the past few months, the Government, after commencing foreclosure in the usual way, while the foreclosure is still in process with several months to run—in the middle of a Maine winter—has started court procedure to eject the people from possession and throw them, literally, out into the snow and cold of Maine. So far as my knowledge in 25 years in Maine goes no corporation, no individual, not even the worst loan shark, has ever resorted to such a process as is now being practiced by the Government of the United States.

I may say in justice to those in authority here that I have brought this matter to their attention and they have assured me of most sympathic consideration of whether a halt shall now be called. So far as I can discover, certain individuals in Maine, who will get some fees by starting these proceedings, have advised this process almost unprecedented in our State. The chief immediate result is to increase the costs and make the Government responsible for the care of the property and for the rents and profits. I hope that what I say here may result in suspending these evictions and that in the future the Government may follow the usual practice in the State of Maine in such cases.

Total, Executive Office, $494,478.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last figures.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the Committee's attention to the fact that you are approaching the appropriation for next year for the independent offices. I have been told by some Members of the House that I am rather excited and get too critical over some of the independent establishments. In answer to that, I have some responsibilities as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures that I am not going to shirk. I only wish the time would permit me to go into detail concerning the growth of some of the independent offices, but I express the hope the Special Committee on Reorganization will—and I think it will—look into some of these activities.

I want particularly to call your attention now to the appropriations for one of these agencies provided for in the bill, and that is for The National Archives, which provides for an additional appropriation of $135,000 over and above the amount they had this year.

I understand that while I was absent from the Chamber my good friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] produced a lot of pictures showing where the Government documents have been stored prior to the time The Archives was erected.

I know something about The Archives and the original idea was to build a small structure something like the Folger Memorial to store a few rare documents, such as the Constitution, Declaration of Independence, treaties, proclamations of outstanding interest, and so forth.

But what has been done? I am giving you an estimate, as I do not have the correct figures before me, but, believe me, I will give the minimum, not the maximum. The building and equipment has cost over $12,000,000 so far. The last allocation was for three and a half million dollars for stacks to be built in the enclosure; that might have included equipment, but I am not sure about that. There is appropriated $752,000 in this bill, an increase of $135,000 over funds available for the current year.

I quote from the report:

> This increase is not because of any added function, but represents the normal expansion necessary to man the additional stacks and files which will be available next year. This expansion will continue gradually over an estimated period of 10 to 15 years, and will reach an ultimate personnel total of 600 to 700, or thereabouts.

The space available today is the same amount available a year ago. Read the hearings. You will see the head of

The National Archives states the new stacks are not ready, will not be ready for some time, and that advertisements have not even been sent out for bids for the equipment to go into the stacks. What good are the stacks without the equipment? There is no indication they will have any additional space within a year; still they want a lot of new employees. They have more stacks now than they will be able to fill in years if only real historical documents are retained.

The organization had been in existence, paying out Government money, for over a year and never had one meeting of the council that is composed of the heads of the executive departments to find out what they should do until the committee, of which I am chairman, held hearings. We forced them to have a meeting of the council. I can prove this statement. I have copies of letters I wrote to Secretary Hull, calling his attention to the situation.

Here you have a structure costing well over $12,000,000, and as the hearings on this bill show, you are going to fill it with a lot of trash which had better be in ashes.

The first documents they took were those of the Food Administration, which the Government had housed in the White House garage. Now, if you are going to save all the records of the Food Administration as historical documents you had better start constructing some new additions. You will find a few documents of historical value, but the way the Archivist described how they are numbering these documents leads me to believe they will retain tens of thousands.

The people have invested a tremendous sum in this building. It should be used wisely. It seems to me right now is the time for the council to get together and come to a sane understanding of just what is to be the policy in the future and stay within that policy. Investigate and learn just how many records are being placed in The Archives that are already in the Library of Congress. Frankly I feel if the law had been properly drawn, this agency would have been made a part of the Library of Congress. Probably I am too critical, but the American people are going to become critical if we do not soon put the brakes on these independent agencies that keep reaching out for more and more. We owe something to the taxpayers we represent, and it will not be long until they call us to account. They do not object to relief appropriations to care for the needy, but they will object to the enlargement of Government agencies when there is no need for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, they have 1,200,000,000 individual documents in the War Department, and these documents show the history of every man and woman who ever served in the Army. The same applies to the Navy. They have the history and individual applications of every man who ever served in the Post Office Department. They still have the papers of everyone who ever applied for a pension, whether he had a right to a pension or not. There is in the Patent Office the applications that were filed in that office since the time it was created, even those where the patents have long since run out. Throughout the Government you have a situation such as that.

Some 6 years ago I attempted to have a warehouse or a Government storage house built in this city to store these documents that are inactive but that the departments do not want to destroy. I wanted to put them in this building which could be a filing house, with a few file clerks. There would be a space for every department, and in that way release the space in the various Government agencies and departments occupied by these documents now, so that desks could be put in. I have been advised that almost one-fourth, if not more, of the space now occupied by Government offices is taken up with old files, maps, and so forth. If my idea had been carried out or is carried out, we can stop building these monumental structures in the District of Columbia. I thought I had that fight won until my friend Mr. Ickes came along and licked me; and how did he lick me? He induced the President to approve his order to put these $3,500,000 worth of stacks inside of The Archives Building. You do not know they are in there, but they are there; they are building them. I repeat, if we had a warehouse here we could take documents away from Government buildings and release the space for desk room. It could be constructed in the southwest section, not a monumental building, but a concrete building. You would not have to construct walls but use heavy wire to partition off the space. The file clerks now handling these documents could go along with them, and whenever the officials needed some of the old files they could be sent up by messenger and returned when they had served their purpose. Archives or no archives, you are going to be forced to come to this some day.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman has given us a very apt illustration of the rapid growth of a new agency. He has brought out some very interesting information. I particularly like the suggestion he makes with regard to a storage house for ordinary documents. If the fight the gentleman made had been won and carried to consummation, it would only be necessary for us to have filing clerks in the storehouse to file away these old worth-while records. Under existing circumstances, however, in order to secure employment in The Archives, one must have had a postgraduate course at one of the large universities of the country, as well as considerable experience in some similar institution. This is necessary in order to qualify under their civil-service requirements.

Mr. COCHRAN. It depends on who you are and who is behind you.

Mr. MEAD. Except, of course, those who got in when the agency was started. The thought the gentleman has in mind is this: In having a storehouse for ordinary records we would provide work for filing clerks, while in this monumental building on the Triangle, of course, a college degree is necessary to obtain employment. There is room for both buildings. Ordinary documents could be filed in a large storehouse and valuable documents would be preserved in the archives.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am going to find out what The Archives is doing, because I am going to have them before my committee again.

Mr. WOODRUM. But the gentleman had them down there a year ago, did he not, and did he find out anything then?

Mr. COCHRAN. I found out plenty but practically nothing whatever from them.

Mr. WOODRUM. Has the gentleman been down there for a year?

Mr. COCHRAN. No. But I am going back. We have this set-up. I want to keep it within bounds, and I want to see some results. Why they are now out in the States. Why not do the job here before we go to the States? Let the State historical societies take care of those W. P. A. projects. I hope every Member of the House will go down and see this beautiful structure. You will find the offices occupied by some minor officials in The Archives Building are far more attractive than the office occupied by the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for half a minute?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Just to say that I am willing to stay here and debate this bill, but we have to finish it tonight, and all the time that we are taking up now will likely take us past 6 o'clock this evening.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall try to help the gentleman; I am supporting his committee, and he should not object. I propose to make just a few general observations; and if I should happen to mention the Democratic platform of 1932 and our Republican friends over here should laugh about it, I hope my Democratic colleagues will not get offended. We have the unusual spectacle this afternoon, with the very first general appropriation bill reported to the House, of the Member first moving to strike out the last word getting on the floor—and I do not mean to be critical of my good friend the gentleman from Mississippi—but just think of it; last week we passed a deficiency bill of nearly a billion dollars, and this bill appropriates more than a billion dollars, advocating an increase in an appropriation bill that already carries $1,046,000,000, and that in the face of the fact that the Home Owners' Corporation is liquidating its business. This concern gets its money through the R. F. C. at 1¾ percent and loans it to home owners at 5 percent, thereby showing a margin of 3¼ percent. With that margin on more than three billion of loans, I see no reason why they cannot operate on that vast sum. Then we are told by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], the chairman of the committee, that it is proposed to employ 1,000 more people in this one agency.

That is a good start toward a bad ending. I am not here to criticize the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I think it has done a fine job and I think it has been far more lenient than it is being given credit for on this occasion.

I want to make this further observation—that there is only one place where this Congress will ever start to economize, and that is at the point of the pruning knife of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives and nowhere else.

I was in another great body a day or two ago and I heard a distinguished statesman, with an illustrious career, standing with outstretched hands, recounting the tragedies and hardships of floods, droughts, and disaster all over this country. I heard him recount the blood-curdling stories of despair told to him by employees of some of these bureaus in Washington about the difficulties they had experienced and the human suffering they had witnessed, and as the tears rolled down his cheeks he pleaded for an increase in an appropriation bill, a deficiency bill, if you please, carrying more than $700,000,000, and just a few minutes ago that same body voted to increase that bill to more than $900,000,000.

My position is that we are trustees of an express trust, consisting of the money of the taxpayers of this country, and that just so long as we listen to the cries of the bureaucrats in Washington who intend to keep their jobs without regard to cost, we will continue to make additional appropriations. If there is anyone who thinks that is not so, I wish he would take the floor and disprove it.

The criticism has been made here that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is a greedy, avaricious, penny-hunting foreclosure institution that is trying to rob the people of their homes. Mr. Fahey, in the hearings before the committee, said this in reference to these foreclosures, after he had shown they had more than 60,000 of them submitted to the legal department:

> We go to very great lengths in every attempt possible to avoid foreclosure.

Mr. Jones, a member of the organization, speaking of foreclosures against people whose incomes have been cut off and whose houses have been taken away from them under foreclosure, said:

> I think you will find very few cases in Oklahoma of the kind you have in mind, where there is default in case of a man whose income had been cut off by economic conditions, who has lost his home. They are carried for a long period of time.

I am fearful that we are face to face with uncontrolled inflation, the result of which means destruction of all values—and that means repudiation. There is only one alternative, and that is to impose upon all our people and upon industry and business unthinkable burdens of taxes. Who in this country is in the best position to know? Most certainly the Federal Reserve Board. And what conclusion may we draw from the fact that within the last 10 days the Federal Reserve Board has increased reserve requirements of their member banks by almost 100 percent? It can mean but one thing, and that is that that great Federal financial system sees breakers ahead. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise only for the purpose of keeping the record straight. May I say that the question provoked by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] relative to what should go into the archives was anticipated long ago, and as a solution to that question they have formed what is known as the National Archives Council. It consists of every one of the Cabinet secretaries, plus the chairman of the House Library Committee, the chairman of the Senate Library Committee, and the Librarian of Congress. The Secretary of State is chairman. That is the body which determines what shall go into the archives. I would rather trust the judgment of that body, with its famed personnel, than the judgment of my good friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], even though I have the highest regard for him.

As to the stacks about which he talked, and the quantity of stacks now unused, may I say that for the past year they have been making a survey not only in Washington but in some 600 towns in the United States, surveying documents, surveying motion-picture films, surveying historical matter and data, and when they get it all together you will find those shelves will fill up soon enough.

I believe that answers the two propositions submitted by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOODRUM. And they will not be filled with useless documents that should be burned up either.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Indeed not.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Gladly.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman tell us whether or not it is a fact that The National Archives itself is publishing what is called "National Archives", that is costing about $50 a day, to advertise its business?

Mr. WOODRUM. I know of no such publication. There is no such publication in existence.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is the Federal Digest.

Mr. WOODRUM. The Federal Register. That was put on and established by this House.

Mr. MAY. Is that not costing about as much per day as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL CAPITAL PARK AND PLANNING COMMISSION

For each and every purpose requisite for and incident to the work of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission necessary toward carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital", approved May 29, 1930; personal services, including real estate and other technical services, at rates of pay to be fixed by the Commission and not exceeding those usual for similar services and without reference to civil-service rules and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; travel expenses; expenses of surveys and searching of titles, purchase of options, and all other costs incident to the acquisition of land, purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles for official use, $893,700, to be expended in carrying out the provisions of section 4 of said act, and to remain available until expended, $893,700.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: On page 27, line 15, strike out the comma and "$893,700."

Mr. WOODRUM. That is simply a typographical mistake. That amount occurs twice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment will be agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

For salaries and expenses, Railroad Retirement Board: For three Board members and for all other authorized and necessary expenditures of the Railroad Retirement Board in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, including rent; personal and other services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including not to exceed $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Board when specifically authorized by the Board; not to exceed $2,500 for payment of actual transportation expenses and per diem (not to exceed $10) in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving while away from their homes without other compensation in an advisory capacity to the Railroad Retirement Board; repairs and alterations; contract stenographic reporting services; office appliances and labor-saving devices; supplies and equipment (including photographic equipment); not to exceed $2,000 for law books, books of reference, newspapers, press clippings, periodicals, and for payment in advance when authorized by the Board for library membership in organizations which issue publications to members only or to members at a price lower than to the general public; operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and other necessary expenses, $2,300,000: Provided, That the Board may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount does not exceed $50.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Page 31, lines 7 and 8, strike out "and labor-saving devices."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, this is the first amendment to which I referred yesterday in reference to labor-saving devices. I have other similar amendments following this, but the test will come on this amendment. In this bill there will perhaps be seven other similar amendments, but they all relate to striking out the phrase "labor-saving devices" wherever this phrase appears in the bill.

We of the Congress are continuously telling private industry not to use labor-saving devices, for by their use people are thrown out of employment. As I said yesterday there are machines used in private industry which displace as many as 100 people per machine. The increased use of labor-saving devices only means that eventually it is going to put a tremendous tax burden on the American people to pay for unemployment insurance for these people or for relief, Works Progress Administration, or whatever form the relief may take. The Federal Government should set the example and refuse to purchase more labor-saving devices which will throw people out of work and throw them onto the taxpayers.

The whole story is there. I went into this subject at length yesterday. I think the Members of the House are entirely familiar with what I am trying to do—to keep people employed and not to throw them out of work; and that it is my desire that the United States Government set the example. We can do this very readily by striking out this phrase "labor-saving devices."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. Does the gentleman believe that by striking out "labor-saving devices" he will increase the labor of the men making these machines? There is considerable employment of labor there.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think that treats the issue fairly. The Civil Service Commission, as I was informed yesterday, expect to fire 130 people because of the installation of the electric eye to read papers. If the gentleman was here yesterday he will remember that I said the concern which would benefit chiefly by the retention of this phrase "labor-saving devices" is the Remington-Rand Corporation, one of the greatest strikebreaking concerns in the country. Mr. Rand, on a train running between New York and Hartford, ran a school for strikebreakers and offered $5 to every man who would break the picket line.

Mr. KRAMER. I sympathize with the gentleman's viewpoint, but I would remind him that many men are employed in the manufacture of these machines. What is to become of them?

Mr. CONNERY. Not many men; probably one or two, the inventor and his assistant. They make machines that throw many people out of work.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Commenting on the gentleman's remark I may say that the number of men employed in the manufacture of these machines is very small compared with the number of people thrown out of work by the labor-saving machines. The gentleman from Massachusetts is right. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will go further and try to have a law enacted which would stop their excessive use not only in the Government but in all industry. Were this done, in a short time the seven or eight million people now out of work would be reemployed. I hope the Committee on Labor will consider this proposal very seriously.

Mr. CONNERY. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I are in complete harmony on this subject.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I am not familiar with the part of the bill to which the gentleman offers his amendment, but I am wondering if the gentleman's amendment would not prohibit the use of such machines as dictaphones?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, no, no; they may continue to use all these different things, typewriters and standard office equipment, but not labor-saving devices like this electric eye the Civil Service intends to use to read papers, a device which will throw 130 people out of work.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. Does the gentleman have in mind throwing out typewriters, comptometers, bookkeeping machines, and machines of that type?

Mr. CONNERY. No; they have those already. This relates to additional labor-saving devices which throw out of work 100 people at a time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will not the gentleman inform the Committee what labor-saving devices the Railroad Retirement Board would employ that would throw people out of work?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not know. I have referred only to the Civil Service Commission, but all of the different departments will be throwing people out of work with labor-saving devices after this bill passes.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is not an electric eye used by the Board; and the gentleman knows it is perfectly ridiculous to talk about the Railroad Retirement Board, an organization that certainly is sympathetic with the viewpoint the gentleman is expressing, putting in any labor-saving devices that would throw anybody out of a job. The gentleman's amendment would prevent their using duplicating machines, typewriters, adding machines, and other standard office equipment that every Government establishment must have.

Mr. CONNERY. I disagree with my friend from Virginia. As amended this portion of the bill would read:

Contract stenographic reporting services, office supplies, supplies and equipment (including photographic equipment).

That is all left in. All that is taken out is the phrase "labor-saving devices."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I shall take but 1 minute to say that in my judgment the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is pure surplusage, because, if you will examine the bill on page 31, you will find a semicolon after "stenographic reporting services." Then you will find the words "office appliances and labor-saving devices."

Can the gentleman specify in any respect whatever how his amendment is going to have any effect at all, except to probably precipitate a question for the General Accounting Office to settle?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I may say to the gentleman that I would be tickled to have the General Accounting Office decide what a labor-saving device is. If the Comptroller General does that, the electric eye will go out. That is what I want to stop.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The electric eye is involved in only one agency, and that is the Civil Service Commission. I may say that either the amendment will have no effect at all, or it will have precisely the effect pointed out by the chairman of the subcommittee, and we will throw overboard duplicating machines, mimeograph machines, typewriters, and everything else. It depends entirely upon what interpretation might be placed upon the language of the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to this bill. I do not believe he will accomplish any good at all except to provoke a question that may be rather annoying for a little while. This amendment may cause no end of trouble to one of the departments and not accomplish what he is after anyway.

Mr. CONNERY. I shall be very glad to have this question raised if it will settle just what a labor-saving device is. You may be sure if this question is brought up in the departments, they are not going to throw out typewriters or mimeograph machines. Those things are in there already and will not be thrown out. But it may serve to stop their bringing in these electric eyes and other devices of the Remington-Rand type that will throw people out of work.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. May I make this observation? The amendment offered by the gentleman would stop the use of dictaphones. Does he not think it would be better to regulate the hours of labor and give the people some time for relaxation rather than to cut out labor-saving devices?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That may be the ultimate effect of the language proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. However, I do not believe it has any effect at all. It may be found difficult for a department to supply itself with a new typewriter or any other kind of machine in order to get out literature immediately and at a time when they might have very acute and pressing need for such service. I am in full accord with the gentleman's desire to prevent labor displacement wherever possible, but his amendment will not do it.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from Texas spoke about a dictaphone. You have to use somebody at the other end of that.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

INCREASE PURCHASING POWER OF PEOPLE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I know that my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is sincere in offering this amendment. I know he is sincerely for the cause of labor, and I am not taking issue with him on that score, but I do wonder if he is approaching it from the right angle. It occurs to me there is a better way of approach than the angle from which the gentleman seeks to approach it.

Mr. Chairman, there are 40,000,000 people in this country engaged in production. They work on the farms, on the ranches, in the mines, in the orchards, in the forests, and elsewhere. If those 40,000,000 people, including the wives, children, and hired hands of these people engaged in these various production enterprises, received a wage or a price that compared favorably with those engaged in industry generally, I believe you could invent new labor-saving devices, utilize every one we have, and still you would not be able to supply the demand for goods.

I believe the problem should be approached first from the standpoint of making it possible for those who need the comforts and necessities of life to buy them. We can do that by raising the buying power of these people who are engaged in production. Instead of cutting down production and eliminating labor-saving devices, let us make it possible for those who need these things and who are engaged in production to buy the necessities of life.

There are millions of farmers in this country who are not earning more than two or three hundred dollars a year. I may say there are millions of them. If those people received a fair price for what they produced, they would have an incentive to work, they would work, they would earn money and would use this money to buy shoes made in the gentleman's home town. Lynn, Mass., I suppose, is the largest shoe-manufacturing area in the United States. If the people to which I refer could buy what they needed, those shoe factories would continue to run. They could employ every labor-saving device they have, they could invent more, and still they would not have enough.

If the buying power of those people on the farms, in the mines, in the forests, in the orchards, and on the ranches and engaged in other production could be brought up equal to that which prevails in industry generally, we will not have to talk about labor-saving devices. For instance, we have a surplus of cotton. If the people who work on the farms and these other producers could buy the cotton goods that they actually need in order to enjoy a decent life, I doubt if there would be a surplus of cotton goods.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. In just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the solution of this problem and the approach should be from the standpoint of bringing the earning power of those people who are now suffering by reason of starvation wages and starvation prices up to a higher plane. I believe we will then solve this problem. I now yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. In carrying out the plan that the gentleman advocates, is not one of the first requisites a good, workable, adequate money system to be adopted by this Government?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; but I think the first consideration is a fair price for the goods which the people produce, and a sound monetary system can be helpful in that direction.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. But it is only under an adequate money system that we can have a fair price?

Mr. PATMAN. I only have a couple of minutes, and I could not discuss a money system in that time. I hope the gentleman will excuse me, as much as I should like to discuss that question.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. The other night he made a speech over the radio, in which he stated that the paramount question today, so far as the producers are concerned, is the question of price. I believe he will pursue this question and I believe that eventually, with the aid and assistance of his committee, will bring in a bill that will make it possible for people who are ambitious, energetic, and who are willing to work and have initiative to earn a fair annual income which will make it possible for them to buy what these labor-saving devices produce. [Applause.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, even if the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] prevails I do not believe you are going to stop the purchase of these labor-saving devices, and I am not one who believes like the chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee that they will not use labor-saving devices in the Railroad Labor Board. If there is any place in the entire Government where they will use these labor-saving devices I believe it will be in that Board just as they use them in the A. A. A. I can see no reason why they could not use the same system as the A. A. A. with their card-punching system and use it to better advantage than the A. A. A.

I believe if you strike out this language they will still purchase these things, and yet I favor the striking out of the language. I favor the striking out of the words "labor-saving devices" in the interest of consistency on the part of this House. We came out in one bill just a few weeks ago, and went on record in the last Congress and the Congress before that, in our appropriations bill, carrying out the policy that we must spend money to put men to work, and yet in the same Congress we come with this inconsistency in this bill and say that now we must increase the man-hours of production and decrease the man-units of consumption by the use of the words "labor-saving devices."

This is a march of progress, and we are going to use these labor-saving devices, whether this language is in the bill or not.

If you strike out these words the bill will read, "Office appliances, supplies, and equipment." This covers the multitude of sins in labor-saving devices, and if you strike out the language referred to in the amendment the labor-saving devices will be purchased, but they will not be purchased with you on record as backing the theory that as a Congress we are willing to purchase things to throw men out of work one day and the next day appropriate seven or eight billion dollars to put men to work.

I think the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts should prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 27, noes 63.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: For administrative expenses and expenses of studies, investigations, publications, and reports necessary to carry out the provisions of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, approved May 20, 1936, including the salary of the Administrator and other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance of officers and employees at meetings when determined by the Administrator to be necessary in furthering the work of the Administration; contract stenographic reporting services; expert witness fees; materials, supplies, equipment, and services; rentals, including buildings and parts of buildings and garages, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase and exchange of books, law books, books of reference, directories, and periodicals; not to exceed $200 for newspapers and press clippings; financial and credit reports; purchase, rental, exchange, operation, maintenance, and repair of typewriters, calculating machines, and other office appliances; and all other expenses necessary to administer said act, $1,450,000: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Rural Electrification Administration when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 1, after the word "act", strike out the figures "$1,450,000" and insert "$1,140,000: Provided, That not more than $113,000 shall be expended for the collection and dissemination of information."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of reducing to some extent the funds contemplated to be expended for publicity work by this particular agency.

I called attention this morning to the situation that seems to be developing in many Federal agencies. I called attention specifically to the fact that the funds asked for by the Rural Electrification Administration, the Social Security Board, and the Federal Housing Administration for publicity purposes when added together amount to a total of almost $1,000,000.

The Rural Electrification Administration is the first of these three agencies to be reached in the bill. It asks for $163,000 for the collection and dissemination of information; it asks for $70,000 for utilization, which is really a further educational work; in addition it asks for $70,000 for printing and binding.

My amendment would simply reduce the total of $163,000 by $50,000 as a start in the right direction. The sum of $113,000 would seem to be more than sufficient for the collection and dissemination of information.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to note the attacks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] on the Rural Electrification Administration, one of the most valuable agencies of this Government, and one that has the power, if properly used, to do more for the people in the rural sections than probably any other agency of its kind in America.

It is a little surprising to me to hear these attacks waged against the small amount provided in this bill to carry on the work of this great organization, in view of the fact that millions, if not hundreds of millions of dollars, wrung from the helpless consumers of electric energy, have been spent every year by private power companies and holding companies for propaganda purposes in order to try to destroy the power policies of this Administration and to prevent the American people from getting electricity at reasonable rates.

Private power interests are overcharging the American people more than $1,000,000,000 a year for electric lights and power. And in order to continue these overcharges, they are spending more money in 1 week for propaganda purposes than all the electric power agencies of this Government combined spend in an entire year. They want to continue to rob and plunder the helpless consumers of electric energy throughout the country, and are using every means at their command to try to strangle, stamp out, or destroy all competition.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman just made the statement that privately owned power and light companies were robbing the people in every area of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; in overcharges.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Does the gentleman claim that in the State of New Jersey 4 cents a kilowatt-hour is an overcharge?

Mr. RANKIN. I shall put the overcharges for New Jersey in the RECORD at this point——

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I am asking the gentleman a particular question.

Mr. RANKIN. I decline to yield further, but will answer the question by showing what the people of New Jersey are paying, and how they are being overcharged.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. But that is not an answer to the question.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. If the gentleman from New Jersey is so poorly informed on this subject that he does not know that the people in New Jersey are overcharged $39,000,000 a year for electric light and power, he ought not to try to project himself into a discussion of this kind. He may not know it, but the people of New Jersey pay about the highest light and power rates of any State in the Union.

In 1934 the people of New Jersey used 1,839,677,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid $76,487,173. Under the T. V. A. rates the cost would have been $37,364,173, a difference of $39,123,000. Under the Tacoma rates the cost would have been $36,924,173, a difference of $39,563,000. Under the Ontario rates the cost would have been $29,724,156, a difference of $46,763,017. Which shows that the overcharges paid by the people of New Jersey alone amount to about $40,000,000 a year.

This burden falls most heavily upon the domestic or residential consumers. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS] gives as his home address the town of Allendale, and for his information I call attention to the electric light and power rates paid by the domestic consumers of Allendale, which are about the average paid throughout the State of New Jersey.

In Allendale, 15 kilowatt-hours a month of electric energy costs a domestic consumer $1.35; 25 kilowatt-hours a month costs $2.25, and 40 kilowatt-hours a month costs a domestic consumer in that town $3.60, when it should cost not more than $1.20. The average domestic consumption throughout the State of New Jersey is only 40 kilowatt-hours a month, and I am sure that the consumers in Allendale, especially with these high rates, do not use above the average consumption. So, instead of paying 4 cents a kilowatt-hour, a domestic consumer in Allendale pays $3.60 for 40 kilowatt-hours, or 9 cents a kilowatt-hour. If that is not legalized robbery, then I submit that I do not know how one would go about robbing a householder in the State of New Jersey.

In order to show what electric lights and power should cost domestic consumers I insert at this point the rates charged domestic consumers in the Tennessee Valley area. These are the T. V. A. yardstick rates which the ultimate consumers in that area are required to pay:

First 50 kilowatt-hours per month, 3 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 150 kilowatt-hours per month, 2 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 200 kilowatt-hours per month, 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.

Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month, 4 mills per kilowatt-hour.

I shall show that these rates are not only not too low, but that they really are too high, and should be reduced. I hope every Member of the House and everyone else who reads this RECORD will get his canceled light and power bill for the last month and compare the rates he now pays with these T. V. A. yardstick rates.

During the year 1936 the American people consumed 88,883,000,000 kilowatt-hour of electric energy, for which they paid $2,059,136,000, according to the Edison Electric Institute Bulletin for January 1937. If they had paid the Ontario rates, or the rates charged by the Ontario Public Power Commission, the cost would have been $445,000,000 instead of $2,059,136,000. Therefore, according to the Ontario rates, the American people were overcharged $1,614,136,000 for electric lights and power during the year 1936.

If this power had been supplied to them at the Tacoma rates, the rates now in effect in Tacoma, Wash., where they have a public power system, the cost would have been $489,950,000, instead of $2,059,136,000, or a difference of $1,669,186,000. Therefore, the American people were overcharged last year, according to the Tacoma rates, the enormous amount of $1,669,186,000.

But the friends of the Power Trust will tell you that the Ontario Power Commission pays no taxes, that it is a public system and supplies power to the people of Ontario at cost. That is true. But let us add the taxes and see what difference that would make. A thorough investigation in the State of Washington showed that taxes paid by power companies for all purposes amounted to about 1 mill per kilowatt-hour, or a little less. Therefore, the taxes on this 88,883,000,000 kilowatt-hours consumed by the people of the United States last year would amount to not more than $88,883,000. Take that amount from the $1,614,136,000, the overcharges according to the Ontario rates, and it will still show an overcharge of $1,525,253,000 after allowing for all taxes.

Remember that the tax question does not enter into the overcharges in the Tacoma comparison, for the reason that the Tacoma power system pays taxes of about $150,000 a year. Remember, too, that the Ontario system has about $400,000,000 invested, and that these charges take care of all expenses, including interest and sinking funds necessary to liquidate their indebtedness within a reasonable time.

Remember also that the Tacoma system has $23,000,000 invested and has paid its indebtedness down to about $7,000,000. Tacoma is a city of about 106,000 people, and yet with this tremendous investment, it has the lowest light and power rates in the United States, even lower than the T. V. A. rates. It pays taxes, takes care of all the interest on its indebtedness, sinking funds, repairs and other necessary expenses, and at the same time is gradually paying its system out. In a few years it will be entirely out of debt, and then its rates will be reduced still further.

Now let's see about the T. V. A. rates. On yesterday, the contract between the Government and the Commonwealth & Southern through which the latter was purchasing T. V. A. power generated at Muscle Shoals expired, and if I can prevent it, that contract will not be renewed. The Commonwealth & Southern remains an outlaw corporation and refuses to register under the Holding Company Act. We do not treat with other outlaws, and I am not willing to make an exception of the Power Trust. Even if they should register under the Holding Company Act, I would oppose the T. V. A.'s selling them power until they dismiss their injunction suits against the T. V. A. and dismiss every other suit they now have against any agency of this Government in which they are attempting to prevent the Government from aiding municipalities and rural cooperative associations in buying or building their own distribution systems.

And even then I would oppose selling them power unless it were provided, and written into the contract, that they were to deliver it to the ultimate consumers at the T. V. A. yardstick rates. Even then I would oppose selling them this power unless they paid the same rate for it that is now being paid by the municipalities and cooperative associations in the T. V. A. area. And, in addition, I would have it written into the contract that the Commonwealth & Southern and its subsidiaries are to cease their pernicious practices of building spite lines through rural sections merely to cut the territory to pieces and prevent the development of rural electrification systems.

In other words, I would serve notice on the Commonwealth & Southern, and give reassurance to the people of this Nation that the T. V. A. is to be operated for the benefit of the people of this country, and not for the benefit of the Power Trust.

As most of you know, my home is at Tupelo, Miss., the first municipality to purchase power from the T. V. A. and to apply the T. V. A. yardstick rates. I am going to give you the results of the operation of our municipal power system during the last 12 months, under that contract. Tupelo is purchasing power from the T. V. A. at wholesale and then selling it to the ultimate consumers at the standard T. V. A. yardstick rates.

Sometime ago, Mr. Wendell L. Wilkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern, who has come to be known throughout my section of the country as "Windy" Wilkie, made the ridiculous assertion that—

> Whenever a citizen of Tupelo, Miss., turns on the electric switch, everybody in the United States helps to pay his electric bill.

In the same statement he said:

> Our operating companies in that area could lower their rates at least 25 percent below the Tennessee Valley Authority rates if they were given the same gifts from the Federal Treasury as are given to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Now, let us see about that. The report of the Chief of Army Engineers on the Tennessee River and its tributaries, filed on March 24, 1930, and signed by Hon. Patrick J. Hurley, then Secretary of War, states that this power can be laid down at the switchboard at 1.352 mills per kilowatt-hour, which is about one-seventh of a cent. This was said to be the sales price necessary to obtain in order to pay 4 percent on the investment. Evidently that report was correct, for the Army engineers had no reason whatsoever for coloring their report or misstating their findings. This report also showing this power could be transmitted 100 miles and sold for 1.993 mills, or approximately 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. That would be about one-sixth of a cent per kilowatt-hour. Tupelo is about 100 miles from Muscle Shoals.

On the basis of this report of the Army engineers, a contract was made by the administration then in power, for the sale of Muscle Shoals power to the Commonwealth & Southern and its subsidiaries. That contract was to last for 5 years. It has just now expired. I called on the Tennessee Valley Authority to find out how much power the Commonwealth & Southern purchased under that contract last year, and what they paid for it, and I have a telegram from the Authority stating that the T. V. A. delivered to the Commonwealth & Southern during the year 1936, under that old contract, 556,626,670 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid the sum of $870,238. By simple division you can see that this amounted to about 1.561 mills per kilowatt-hour, or a little less than one-sixth of a cent per kilowatt-hour.

During the same year the electric department of the city of Tupelo purchased from the Tennessee Valley Authority, under its contract, 10,312,600 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which it paid the sum of $50,280.22, or 4.875 mills per kilowatt-hour, or a little more than three times the price paid by the Commonwealth & Southern. The city of Tupelo paid 4.875 mills per kilowatt-hour, while the Commonwealth & Southern was buying it at 1.561 mills per kilowatt-hour. Yet Mr. Wilkie says that every time a consumer in Tupelo turns the electric-light switch the American people pay the bill. I wonder who was paying the Commonwealth & Southern's bill? No wonder he wants this contract renewed.

At the time the T. V. A. was created, the Commonwealth & Southern and its subsidiaries, the Alabama Power Co., the Mississippi Power Co., and others, were selling this electricity for which they were paying 1.561 mills per kilowatt-hour to the domestic consumers in that area at the following rates:

First 30 kilowatt-hours per month, 10 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 170 kilowatt-hours per month, 8 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 300 kilowatt-hours per month, 7 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Next 350 kilowatt-hours per month, 6 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Excess over 850 kilowatt-hours per month, 5 cents per kilowatt-hour.

Now let us make some comparisons in rates. The following table will show the comparative cost to the domestic consumers under the old Commonwealth & Southern rates and the T. V. A. rates up to 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month:

	Former power-company rates	Tennessee Valley Authority rates
First 30 kilowatt-hours	$3.00	$0.90
Next 170 kilowatt-hours	13.60	3.60
Next 300 kilowatt-hours	21.00	2.40
Next 350 kilowatt-hours	21.00	1.40
Next 150 kilowatt-hours	7.50	.60
1,000 kilowatt-hours	66.10	8.90

In other words, a householder under the T. V. A. rates pays $8.90 for 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month, which formerly cost him $66.10 under the power-company rates in effect in the Muscle Shoals area at the time the T. V. A. was created.

Ah, now we can see who pays the bill when the Commonwealth & Southern throws the switch. This 1,000 kilowatt-hours for which the Commonwealth & Southern, or one of its subsidiaries, charge the domestic consumer $66.10, costs them the sum of $1.56.

Since I have referred to the Ontario rates and the Tacoma, Wash., rates, I am here inserting the residential rates up to 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month and comparing them with the T. V. A. rates now in effect, and with the Commonwealth & Southern rates in effect in that area at the time the T. V. A. was created.

Table of comparative monthly rates

	Monthly consumption, kilowatt-hours
	25	40	60	100	300	500	1,000
Ontario rates	$0.75	$1.02	$1.54	$1.74	$3.02	$3.92	$6.17
Tacoma rates	1.13	1.52	1.72	2.12	4.12	6.12	8.62
Tennessee Valley Authority rates	.75	1.20	1.70	2.50	5.50	6.90	8.90
Old Commonwealth & Southern rates	2.50	3.80	5.40	8.60	23.00	37.60	66.10

At the time the T. V. A. was created, the people of the city of Tupelo were paying the standard Commonwealth & Southern rates for electric energy. At that time the domestic consumers were using an average of 42 kilowatt-hours a month, for which they were paying $3.96. Today they are using an average of 156 kilowatt-hours for which they pay an average of $3.62. At that time the domestic consumers were using 15 electric ranges and 158 electric refrigerators. Today they are using 296 electric ranges and 989 electric refrigerators, which shows that the lower the rates the greater the consumption and the more liberal the use of electrical appliances.

I might call attention to the fact that in the city of New York, where the rates are tremendously high, the average domestic consumption of electricity is only 39 kilowatt-hours a month, whereas in Tupelo, where the T. V. A. yardstick rates are in effect, the average domestic consumption is 156 kilowatt-hours a month, or four times as much as it is in New York City.

Remember, too, that Tupelo is a town of less than 10,000. It has 1,400 domestic consumers of electric energy. They use an average of 156 kilowatt-hours per month, which costs them $3.62. Under the Commonwealth & Southern rates, 156 kilowatt-hours a month would have cost them $13.08, a difference of $9.46 a month, or $113.52 a year, or a total difference of $158,928 a year for these 1,400 domestic consumers.

In other words, if the domestic consumers of Tupelo were paying the same rates for electricity they were paying 3 years ago under the standard Commonwealth & Southern rates the annual cost to the domestic consumers alone in that city would be $158,928 more.

So you can see who was paying the bill when the Commonwealth & Southern threw the switch.

Remember that this was T. V. A. power, or Muscle Shoals power, which they were selling at these exorbitant rates at that time, and which they are now, or were until yesterday, selling in nearby towns at rates practically as exorbitant.

Last year the city of Tupelo bought 10,312,600 kilowatt-hours of electric energy from the T. V. A., for which it paid $50,280.22, and sold it to the ultimate consumers for $123,397. The city's electric department paid into the city treasury for taxes the sum of $9,546.64, paid interest on the city's investment of $4,390.03, set up a depreciation account of $8,089.47, paid interest on bonds of $1,906.09, and paid all maturing bonds in the amount of $5,911.39, and then made a net profit of $15,000.

I have a letter from Hon. J. P. Nanney, mayor of Tupelo, in which he says that anyone who cannot take a plant such as Tupelo's, purchase power at the T. V. A. wholesale rates, and retail it at the yardstick rates and make a profit "should not be allowed to hold public office."

Yet this same Commonwealth & Southern that has been buying its power at Muscle Shoals for less than one-third the rate paid by the city of Tupelo, has been telling the world through Mr. "Windy" Wilkie, that Tupelo was buying electricity below the cost of production. The power companies have used every means known to man to get control of the distribution systems of the cities, towns, and municipalities in that area, and are today using the Federal courts to hold the people in those towns and municipalities in economic subjugation, while they rob and plunder them through exorbitant light and power rates.

The city of Aberdeen, Miss., formerly owned its own electric plant and distribution system. When the Muscle Shoals development got under way these private power interests went throughout that section buying up municipal plants, without regard to their actual values. The people of Aberdeen voted against selling their plant, but these private power companies brought so much pressure to bear that they finally induced the board of aldermen to sell it to them, over the protest of the mayor, for $102,000. At the same time they bought the plant in Corinth, Miss., a town slightly larger than Aberdeen, and paid $750,000 for it, and attempted to buy the plant at West Point, a town similar in size to Aberdeen, and only 18 miles away, for which they offered $1,250,000.

I warned my people then that they were not merely selling their plants but were selling themselves into the bondage of the Power Trust; that they were selling the birthright of their children. We prevented them from getting the Tupelo plant.

The people of Aberdeen have attempted to put in their own distribution system or to purchase back the old one. They took a vote on the proposition and it carried by more than 10 to 1, but the private power company not only refused to sell but went into the Federal court and enjoined the city from building a system of its own. The case is now before the circuit court of appeals. Thus they have held the people of Aberdeen in subjugation now for about 2 or 3 years and have robbed them through overcharges of around $100,000 a year, denied to them a liberal use of electric energy, and prevented them from the employment of the necessary electrical appliances.

They have done the same thing at Starkville and in other towns and cities throughout that area, using the Federal courts to further their iniquitous scheme of plundering the consumers of electric lights and power, and now they have the audacity to attempt to renew their contract for the purchase of this power at the price which I have stated, and are attempting to further use the Federal courts to strangle or prevent competition.

Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted, I had started in to discuss rural electrification, which I hope to do at length at a later date. It is the ambition of my life to see every farm home in America electrified at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, to see this Nation develop its great wealth of hydroelectric power in our navigable streams and their tributaries, and then use it for the benefit of all. In that way we can supply every domestic consumer in America and electrify every farm at the T. V. A. rates, reduce those rates as the years go by, and at the same time secure enough revenue in return to amortize our investments.

This would do more for the farmers of this country than anything else that has ever been done or attempted by this Government. It would take to the farmer every convenience that we have in the towns and cities, without the additional noise and extra taxes. It would light his home, run his radio, his water pump, refrigerator, washing machine, electric range, and all the other appliances necessary to make that home pleasant and attractive, and to relieve him and his wife and children of the great burdens of drudgery which farmers and farm women have endured since the beginning of time.

This is being done in the district which I have the honor to represent, and I know what it means. We have not been able to reach all of them yet, but we are still striving to that end. We are on our way.

It is the greatest farm relief movement this country has ever known and, if fully carried out, instead of burdening this Government with expenses, it will add billions of dollars to our national wealth and make the rural sections of this Nation the most attractive place on earth for men and women to live, rear their families, and enjoy that freedom which civilized man has always craved.

I certainly hope this House will not disturb the small amount which this bill carries for rural electrification. [Applause.]

Mr. TERRY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman from Mississippi asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks. I rose, and I wish to object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not get up until after the question was put and passed on.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman state that he was on his feet before the decision was rendered by the Chair?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman asked for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear any objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I stood on my feet and objected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, that is incorrect. I was looking at the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman's objection and the Chair thinks the objection comes too late. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas for 2 minutes.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into the controversy raised by the two gentlemen who have just addressed the Chair, but I desire to address myself for a moment to the merits of this amendment.

I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be adopted. I feel that the work which the Rural Electrification Administration is doing is one of the best works the Government is now engaged in. It is a new administration. It is one that peculiarly deals with rural people, people out in the back districts, who do not have facilities for knowing what this electrification program means. It seems to me it is only meet and proper that the Rural Electrification Administration should have the right to have publicity on its program. In the rural districts the people do not know what it means. They do not know that rural electrification will bring more happiness to those people than any other program the Government is now undertaking.

I ask that the amendment be voted down. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing and binding: For printing and binding for the Rural Electrification Administration, $70,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think in all fairness to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], I ought to say something by way of rebuttal to the statement that was made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

I fully appreciate the zeal of the distinguished advocate from Mississippi, but in justice to my colleague from Massachusetts, I must say that he never had in mind at any time a desire to hamstring the Rural Electrification Administration. When that bill was on the floor in the last session of the Congress I voted for it, and I am not sure but what the gentleman from Massachusetts voted for it also. We are as much interested in the rural electrification as anybody. We have no idea in mind of trying to curtail or cripple its activities, but the Rural Electrification Administration, for instance, gets out a lot of pamphlets. Some of them are called Wiring Your Farm and Home; Electrifying Farm and Home; Wiring; Lighting; Home and Farm Appliances. In addition to this, they get a monthly called Rural Electrification News. They get out a lot of blue prints and specifications that are sent around the country; and they get out a little booklet in connection with soil conservation called Little Waters.

I have no objection to these. I think they are fair and informative, and, incidentally, interesting documents that ought to go out to the country; but, in addition thereto, you will find we are making an allowance here aggregating nearly $180,000, if I read the figures correctly, for "Collection and dissemination"; not for the purpose of getting out these pamphlets particularly, but for the purpose of maintaining personnel down there to write and have mimeographed a lot of information to go out to the country newspapers and to the city newspapers to carry on sales-promotion work.

I am going to put you on notice with this statement—that if you think that sort of thing ought to go on, then every new agency that we set up ought to have provision for a sales manager to sell this function to the people of this country. With your eyes open, if you think that is a fair domain for the Government to enter, very well. I have no objection, but I do believe that a very clear distinction should be made as between things which we endorse and things which we oppose. Sooner or later we are going to reap a great crop of evil as a result of bureaucratic set-ups that have no other purpose than to send out promotional literature and propaganda and that sort of thing. I do not know where the end is going to be, but I am going to suggest to you that if you will look at the Public Printer's annual report you will find that for the last fiscal year the publication charges charged to the Resettlement Administration by the Public Printer aggregated over $808,000. Where is the end going to be? It is your responsibility. If you are going to cooperate to make some of these departments a little more efficient, save a little money, you must give a little thought to it. I think it is the individual responsibility of every Member of this body.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman will find that there are $2,072,673 for printing and binding alone contained in this bill, to say nothing of the Federal Housing Administration and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Why does the gentleman single out the Rural Electrification Administration and let all the rest go by?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman had been on the floor when we had the feed and seed loan bill under consideration, he will recall that I made the same point at that time, that we are just throwing money to the birds for a lot of propaganda work, much of which could be saved.

I appreciate the gentleman's point of view, but I do say there is no use piling up tons and tons and tons of printed matter to be scattered all over the country.

Shall I remind you that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the last session took over 894 tons of paper?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is the gentleman familiar with the statement on page 487 of the hearings by Mr. Cooke, of the Commission, that the leaders of the power industry were in favor of this operation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will take the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. TABER. Well, it is there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Securities and Exchange Commission, $3,895,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For all authorized and necessary administrative expenses of the Social Security Board in performing the duties imposed upon it in titles I, II, III, IV, VII, IX, and X of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, including three Board members, an executive director at a salary of $9,500 a year, a director of the old-age benefits division at a salary of $9,000 a year, and other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, including not to exceed $10,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Board when specifically authorized by the chairman; not to exceed $10,000 for payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving while away from their home, without other compensation, in an advisory capacity to the Social Security Board; supplies; reproducing, photographing, and all other equipment, office appliances, and labor-saving devices, services; advertising, postage, telephone, telegraph, and not to exceed $900 for teletype news services and tolls; newspapers and press clippings (not to exceed $1,500), periodicals, manuscripts and special reports, purchase and exchange of law books and other books of reference; library membership fees or dues in organizations which issue publications to members only or to members at a lower price than to others, payment for which may be made in advance; alterations and repairs; rentals, including garages, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; purchase and exchange, not to exceed $35,000, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes in the District of Columbia and in the field; and miscellaneous items, including those for public instruction and information deemed necessary by the Board, $10,000,000, together with any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purpose contained in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase by the Board when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $100: Provided further, That the Board may expend not to exceed $40,000 of the sum herein appropriated for employing persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for special accounting, actuarial, statistical, and reporting, engineering, and organizational services determined necessary by the Board, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), and the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am appealing to the House of Representatives and the Congress in behalf of a great many citizens in the Sixth Congressional District of Indiana, as well as the Nation, to protest and rise up against one of the provisions of H. R. 4064, Report No. 165.

I speak for the millions of unemployed citizens who are tramping the streets looking for an opportunity to earn an honest living. The Congress and the administration have assured these people of their right to have an opportunity to earn their livelihood. The Congress and the executive branch of the Government have appealed to industry to make jobs. The administration has spent so many billions of dollars to create jobs that our American taxpayers are groaning under the heavy financial burden that has been placed upon them, and which they are cheerfully carrying in order that their fellow citizens might have an opportunity to work.

The attention of the House of Representatives is invited to page 37 of the printed bill, H. R. 4064. I invite your attention to lines 15 and 16 on page 37. You will note that notwithstanding the fact that millions of Americans are out of work, it is proposed that this House of Representatives should appropriate money in order that "labor-saving devices" might be purchased by the Government, thereby throwing out of work many more men and women who will be forced to tramp the streets and possibly go hungry by reason of the installation of labor-saving devices. With many millions of people still on the charity rolls, this is no time for the Federal Government to invest in labor-saving devices.

If it is intended to build up a great bureaucracy and let the people starve, then it is proper and fitting that labor-saving devices be used by the Government, but as long as there are American citizens out of work by reason of the evil forces of the depression, we must not resort to machine-operated labor-saving devices.

The citizens of my congressional district are crying out for an opportunity to get off the charity rolls and go on the pay rolls, where they can retain their self-respect and not be considered as objects of municipal, State, or Federal charity.

The Federal Government must not provide money to buy machines which will create greater unemployment. I denounce the use of labor-saving devices during this time of depression, and I call on every Member of this House to arouse yourselves to a full realization of what these labor-saving devices will do to the unemployed citizens of your congressional districts who are still clinging to their meager positions.

I demand, in the name of genuine recovery, that the words in line 16, page 37, under paragraph 23, Social Security Board, "labor-saving devices" be stricken out. I make this demand in the name of millions of unemployed who will be further mired by this detestable provision.

In conclusion, please be assured that I favor the use of machines when they work to the advantage of humanity. I am for labor-saving devices when they will bring blessings to humanity, but I denounce in the strongest terms within my power this horrible attempt to throw hundreds of underpaid Government clerks out of work and force them to face unemployment through the purchasing of labor-saving devices.

We cannot overcome unemployment through using the taxpayers money to buy labor-saving devices. I appeal to you for your support. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of offering any amendment by way of reducing the sum made available in this bill for the Social Security Board. The work of this Board is too important, too vital to millions of our people. I have been in hearty sympathy with its objectives from the outset. One of the most vital matters confronting us at this time is the proper solution of the problems by which the Board is faced.

Moreover, while every cent requested has been allowed for annuity payments a substantial reduction has been recommended in the costs of administration as compared with the Budget figures. It may be that the reduction has been too great. You have heard the fine attitude of the Board presented by the chairman of the subcommittee this morning. If it proves that the cut is too deep, the way is of course always open for an increase through a deficiency item.

Just to keep the record straight, however, and to emphasize the point I have been trying to make today, I repeat what I said this morning, to the effect that the record indicates that the Board expects to maintain a force of 97 persons for informational service at a cost of over $233,000 annually; further, that the record shows that during a period of 6 months this informational service produced 160 press releases, 450 magazine articles, 180 speeches, 3 moving pictures, and 60 hours of broadcasting.

The position of the subcommittee on this general subject is clear. It is referred to in the committee report. I feel sure that the Social Security Board will do its utmost to bring its expenditure for informational service within the bounds of reason.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has recited the broadcasting, the magazine articles, and the speeches that have gone out from this agency for which the Government has paid during the last year. Now that the election is over, does the gentleman contemplate that there will be as many magazine articles, broadcasts, and press releases during the coming year in order to sell this thing to the public?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I certainly hope not.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Social Security Board, $1,000,000.

Grants to States for old-age assistance: For grants to States for assistance to aged needy individuals, as authorized in title I of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, $150,000,000, of which sum such amounts as may be necessary shall be available for grants under such title I for any period in the fiscal year 1937 subsequent to March 31, 1937: Provided, That payments to States for the fourth quarter of the fiscal year 1937 and for any quarter in the fiscal year 1938 under such title I may be made with respect to any State plan approved under such title I by the Social Security Board prior to or during such period, but no such payment shall be made with respect to any plan for any period prior to the quarter in which such plan was submitted to the Board for approval.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, what I am about to say upon this subject is not in criticism of the committee, because I think they have appropriated probably enough to carry out the purposes of the act; but it seems to me that now is the time to review the evidence that has been brought to the attention of Congress by the bill itself and by the printed hearings. Let me read you a few important facts from pages 499 and 500 of the hearings. We read that the Census advises us that on January 8, 1938, the estimated total number of persons 65 years of age or over in the United States will be 7,888,000.

The percentage of persons held eligible in the various States—that is, persons over 65 years of age—ranges from about 2 percent to more than 35 percent. Many States have large waiting lists of eligible applicants who have not as yet received assistance. At the present rate of increase in the number of recipients it seems entirely possible that 20 percent of the aged population will be receiving assistance by July 1938. Thus, to base the request upon the assumption that 15.7 percent will receive assistance seems conservative; just as we told you last year we thought $85,000,000 was a very conservative figure.

This question was asked by the chairman:

How many people would be receiving aid?

Mr. BANE. Approximately 1,600,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That figure of $19 per person per month includes both the State and Federal contribution?

Mr. BANE. Yes; that is the gross expenditure.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that under the present social-security plan that has been provided by this Congress a very limited number of people eligible to receive pensions will receive them at all. When they do they will receive on the average in the United States 63⅓ cents per day. I do not know what the plan of the security boards of the other States is, but I know in North Dakota, under the security board appointed by the preceding Governor, the aged of our State, although they have been able in the past years to save a moderate home, some of them even a shanty, are compelled by the Social Security Board to transfer title to the Board before they may receive any money at all. I want this Congress to understand from the evidence in this record on those pages from which I have quoted that before any of the aged in America can qualify to receive this pittance of 63⅓ cents a day they must make themselves paupers or hand their property over to the Social Security Board.

Mr. WOOD. That is governed by the gentleman's State law.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is controlled by your State law.

Mr. WOOD. The State law requires the recipients to turn their property over. That is not the Federal Social Security Board.

Mr. BURDICK. I say that under the provisions of this act we have made it possible for the State to determine who is entitled to and under what rules and regulations they shall receive the money. Of course, I prefaced my remarks by saying I did not know what the situation was in the other States except North Dakota.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. I introduced a bill last year to disqualify any State from receiving Federal aid if the State required the deeding of the home as a condition of payment of an old-age pension. There is nothing in the social security law requiring the deeding of the home. The Federal law says if the States do require the deeding of the home, they shall pay to the Federal Government 50 percent of the sum realized from the sale of such home.

Mr. BURDICK. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. When this act was perfected in this Congress, we made it possible for the States to determine absolutely and under what conditions a person might become eligible. We should have exercised some jurisdiction. You have heard it said in the last Congress, and even now, that this plan known as the Townsend recovery plan is fantastic; but I want to say to you that can be defended. You cannot defend a plan which makes paupers out of the aged of this country, as the Federal Security Act does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true also that the Social Security Board, which is a Federal set-up, has the power to decline approval of these State acts which have been referred to by the two gentlemen on the other side?

Mr. BURDICK. I think the hearings disclose the fact that while the Federal Government has jurisdiction over the States to see that they properly administer the act, the Federal Government has no control over who is eligible in a State.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true that the Social Security Board must approve these State acts before they can function and receive the grants and aids?

Mr. BURDICK. That is true; but after the States start to operate it is wholly within the power of the State to eliminate everybody, as some of them have excluded worthy applicants.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask this question, in all sincerity and without desiring to cast any reflection whatsoever: Has the gentleman had this matter up with his State legislature to correct the situation?

Mr. BURDICK. That is a long story. We had to change the whole administration out there in order to get anything done at all, but we did discuss that.

Mr. ENGEL. Does not the Social Security Act specify that if a State does require the deeding of the property it must pay 50 percent of the amount realized from the sale of such home to the Federal Government, and does not that fact constitute implied permission to the States to require the deeding of the home as a condition of the payment of a pension?

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is right. There is nothing in the Federal act to indicate that the States may perform a high-handed case of robbery as they are doing, but the Federal Government tacitly condones the act.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, the gentleman always believes in his home constituents. He has told us that time and time again. Here is a case where quite evidently his constituency is not in accord with the gentleman from North Dakota, because it is entirely up to the people of his own district and his own State to do the very thing he is objecting to.

Mr. BURDICK. No; the gentleman is misinformed about North Dakota.

Mr. MICHENER. No; the gentleman is not misinformed.

Mr. BURDICK. We had to change the whole administration out there and throw the previous one out and put a new one in in order to get anything. We will change our State social-security regulations if we can get rid of the present board. What I am speaking of in North Dakota is true in several States of the Union. In your own State there are glaring examples of injustice to the aged under your State security board with the apparent approval of the Federal Board.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but every State in the Union has the right to formulate its own plan.

Mr. BURDICK. That is true, but the whole Federal scheme of old-age insurance is based upon a system of doles to paupers. It provides no adequate, just, and honorable compensation for the aged of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, may I call the gentleman's attention to the testimony on page 942 of the hearings. This question was very specifically raised when Mr. Bane appeared before the Appropriations Committee. I asked him about that, because a similar law is on the statute books of the State of Illinois, and for the RECORD I want to quote his exact language. He said at that time:

> Where the Board has been consulted in the matter, we have consistently recommended that the inclusion of such a provision is not practicable or advisable.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Total, Tariff Commission, $945,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this pro-forma amendment in order to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question with reference to some tables appearing at page 572 of the hearings. At the top of the page there is a reference to the average wholesale price of sugar f. o. b. New York. May I ask the gentleman whether or not that is the duty-paid price or the price not including the duty, as appears in the columns headed 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936?

Mr. WOODRUM. The only information I have is contained in the table, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the middle of page 572 there is another table, which shows the average retail price of sugar in 51 large cities, as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Do these prices, as set forth in columns headed 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 show the processing tax which was included in the retail price of sugar under those dates?

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot answer the gentleman's question.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services: For all salaries and expenses of the Veterans' Administration, including the expenses of maintenance and operation of medical, hospital, and domiciliary services of the Veterans' Administration, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting war veterans", approved July 3, 1930 (U. S. C., title 38, secs. 11–11f), and any and all laws for which the Veterans' Administration is now or may hereafter be charged with administering, $94,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $3,500 of this amount shall be available for expenses, except membership fees, of employees, detailed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to attend meetings of associations for the promotion of medical science and annual national conventions of organized war veterans: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available also for personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including traveling expenses; examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, including actual expenses of subsistence or per-diem allowance in lieu thereof; for expenses incurred in packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other property, not exceeding in any one case 5,000 pounds, of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty and when specifically authorized by the Administrator; furnishing and laundering of such wearing apparel as may be prescribed for employees in the performance of their official duties; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; for passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, including purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of same, including not more than two passenger automobiles for general administrative use of the central office in the District of Columbia; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to utilize Government-owned automotive equipment in transporting children of Veterans' Administration employees located at isolated stations to and from school under such limitations as he may by regulation prescribe; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to expend not to exceed $2,000 of this appropriation for actuarial services pertaining to the Government life-insurance fund, to be obtained by contract, without obtaining competition, at such rates of compensation as he may determine to be reasonable; for allotment and transfer to the Public Health Service, the War, Navy, and Interior Departments, for disbursement by them under the various headings of their applicable appropriations, of such amounts as are necessary for the care and treatment of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration, including minor repairs and improvements of existing facilities under their jurisdiction necessary to such care and treatment; for expenses incidental to the maintenance and operation of farms; for recreational articles and facilities at institutions maintained by the Veterans' Administration; for administrative expenses incidental to securing employment for war veterans; for funeral, burial, and other expenses incidental thereto for beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration accruing during the year for which this appropriation is made or prior fiscal years: Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for the care and maintenance of veterans in hospitals or homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available for the purchase of tobacco to be furnished, subject to such regulations as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall prescribe, to veterans receiving hospital treatment or domiciliary care in Veterans' Administration hospitals or homes: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888 (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 134), as amended, for those veterans eligible for admission to Veterans' Administration facilities for domiciliary care.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Page 43, line 5, strike out "$94,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$96,000,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], in order that I may call his attention and the attention of this Congress to a matter in connection with this bill, not knowing whether my purpose can be accomplished here or in another measure.

At the veterans' facility in Minneapolis we have 185 orderlies, mechanics, and cooks who work in the hospital and its diet kitchen and in the hospital laundry. They are paid $70, $80, or $90 a month, from which is deducted each month from $22.50 to $32.50, which is called a Q. S. L. deduction for quarters, subsistence, and laundry, regardless of the fact that the employee does not receive any of the services under the Q. S. L. for which he is charged.

The fact of the matter is that these people are married men, most of them, and most of them are war veterans. They maintain a separate establishment for their own domicile, where they live with their families, and do not live at the hospital. This deduction of $32 a month by the Veterans' Administration is quite a hardship on these men and makes for starvation wages. I have taken the matter up with the Veterans' Administration and they say they have not enough money in their budget set-up to pay a living wage. The result is that at the veterans' facility at Minneapolis they are working 64 hours a week one week and 54 hours a week the next week, in staggered shifts, for the sum of $52 to $65 a month, which is not enough to keep a family on an honorable, decent American scale of living.

This is an abuse that should be corrected by this administration and is one of the idiosyncracies in the recovery program, and for this reason I have offered the amendment to increase the appropriation in order to put the issue before the House so that the situation may be corrected in this Congress by the appropriate committee if not here today.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the question raised by the gentleman from Minnesota was considered by the committee in the hearings of last year and the situation is this: It is necessary, especially at the neuropsychiatric institutions, and to some extent at all the institutions, that the type of personnel to which the gentleman has referred live on the station. Certainly, at the mental institutions, a large proportion of the orderlies and attendants have to live on the station because they are liable to be called on duty at any minute. When they accept employment they understand thoroughly that living quarters are provided for them at the station and that this deduction is to be made from their pay.

The situation to which the gentleman has referred has now arisen and there are undoubtedly many cases where men do not live on the station because they wish to live with their families, and yet the deduction is made.

The matter was called to the attention of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and in the appropriation bill of last year we provided a fund, and there are sufficient funds in this bill. The Administrator told the committee last year the matter would be taken up from an administrative standpoint, and wherever it was possible to grant the privilege to these people of living off the station without making any deduction that would be done. We were informed by him this year that some progress had been made. It is a difficult matter to handle for the reason that a person applies to the Veterans' Administration for a position as attendant and is informed of the circumstances and is told that he has to live on the station at a salary of so much a month with a certain deduction. He accepts the job and pretty soon he asks permission to live off the station. He is given permission to live off the station, and the next step is wanting repayment of the amount that is deducted from his pay.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from Minnesota stated that he was told by the Veterans' Administration that the reason they could not do this was because the money had not been provided. Is the responsibility upon their shoulders or upon the shoulders of the Congress in not appropriating sufficient money?

Mr. WOODRUM. The adding of any money to the appropriation would not affect the situation one way or the other, I can assure the gentleman. We have had the matter up with General Hines and no additional funds are necessary. It is strictly a matter of administrative policy. If they want to do this they have the money to do it, I am sure.

Mr. BOILEAU. It seems strange that the gentleman from Minnesota would be informed they have not the money and that they would be willing to correct the situation if they had the funds. If this is the case they ought not to give such an excuse.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman will find in the hearings last year that General Hines stated they would try to work it out, but it is a difficult problem.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has the matter of the shortage of nurses and orderlies and doctors been taken up and has the overtime they have had to perform during the last few years been considered by the gentleman's committee? There is a great deal of overtime work by the nurses and doctors and orderlies, and their service is being made very difficult as a result.

Mr. WOODRUM. We know that in all of these hospitals, and, in fact, in all the Government institutions, overtime work is being done, I may say to the distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts. If we eventually establish a policy of strict hours, then instead of 800,000 employees in the Government service the number will be that many again. This is a question of Government policy.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman will find that overtime is much greater among the nurses and the orderlies and the doctors than in any other group in the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. WOODRUM. The nurses in private hospitals work 12 hours a day.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It seems very unfair to the medical and nursing service, and the patients do not receive the care that they would otherwise.

Mr. WOODRUM. I believe the nurses have the same hours in private hospitals.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted, because the inclusion of additional funds would not affect the matter one way or the other, although I am sympathetic with the situation as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, 2 years ago when the independent offices appropriation bill was being considered in the Committee of the Whole, I offered an amendment to this section of the bill to the end that $500,000 of the proposed appropriation for the Veterans' Administration might be used for payments to State institutions caring for and maintaining veterans suffering from neuropsychiatric ailments who were in such institutions on the date of the enactment of the act.

A point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] was properly sustained for the reason that said amendment sought to amend basic law. However, in the course of the remarks made upon that occasion the gentleman from Virginia stated that he had conferred with General Hines and that the general was thoroughly sympathetic with the situation attempted to be reached by the amendment in question and that he would in no way interfere with the policy pursued for years which involved the general welfare of these veterans located in the hospitals at Elgin and Jacksonville, Ill.

Later the same facts were presented to the Senate. It is my understanding that the parliamentary procedure in the Senate is not so rigid as it is in the House. The merits of the proposal were not questioned, so it was passed and later agreed to by the conferees of the House and the Senate.

Two years have come and gone, and these neuropsychiatric veterans remain in these respective hospitals. As a means of permanent protection to them and to the State of Illinois responsible for the hospitals, I seriously doubt the advisability of the deletion of this amendment. However, it would be an idle gesture for me to present a similar amendment at this time, as it would be subject to the same point of order made 2 years ago while the matter was under consideration.

But, mindful of this strict parliamentary procedure, I communicated with the gentleman from Virginia to ascertain the viewpoint of General Hines, Director of the Veterans' Administration, with respect to the Government again making a contract with the State of Illinois for the purpose of keeping these neuropsychiatric veterans as wards of the State institutions on a per-diem basis rather than transferring them to Government hospitals. That letter was in turn transmitted to the Veterans' Administration for answer, and on January 21 my colleague, Mr. WOODRUM, received a reply thereto, advising him, in substance, that the situation regarding this matter had not changed, and that, after all, there was no real necessity for the inclusion of the amendment in the independent offices appropriation act, since the wording of an applicable veterans' regulation now in effect conveys any needed authority in the premises. It was further stated that the Veterans' Administration was paying the Department of Public Welfare of the State of Illinois for the care and maintenance of about 227 veterans now hospitalized in the hospitals at Elgin and Jacksonville, and that this payment would continue until there was an increase of available beds in facilities under the direct and exclusive jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration and it became possible to transfer these beneficiaries into the Government facilities. And Mr. WOODRUM was specifically advised that such a possibility was indefinitely in the future.

I sincerely hope the time will never come when the Government will attempt to enforce such regulation. At the risk of being charged with repetition, once again I remind the Members of the House that these hospitals at Elgin and Jacksonville, Ill., were constructed by a grateful State before the Federal Government instituted its program of Government hospitalization for this type of disabled veteran. These hospitals have all of the modern facilities and equipment to handle neuropsychiatric cases. The loved ones of the veterans live in and around these respective communities. There is no better or more interested personnel in any veterans' hospital in the Nation, and the veterans' organizations of these respective communities have with pardonable pride manifested a tremendous interest in these soldiers who are mentally ill. Yes, ladies and gentleman of the Committee, these hospitals are dedicated to their care and rehabilitation.

Moral and equitable justification frequently triumphs over a strict interpretation of a so-called infallible rule or regulation. And, Mr. Chairman, may I add this: That if the time ever comes when the Veterans' Administration seeks to rigidly enforce the rule or regulation by attempting to transfer these men from the only after-the-war home they have ever known I shall use all of the force and persuasion at my command, inadequate and feeble as it may be, to attempt to nullify such an order through proper legislative action on the floor of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. I desire to place in the RECORD a complete statement regarding the number of foreclosures about which discussion was had when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] had the floor. In addition to the paragraph that I read into the RECORD at that time. I call attention to a table on page 616 of the committee hearings, placed there by a witness for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which shows that the estimated number of foreclosures to be authorized by June 30, 1937, was 105,901, with an additional 55,000 to be foreclosed by June 30, 1938, or a total of 160,901; 135,863 of these they expect to complete and acquire the property by June 30, 1938.

> Up to November 30, 1936, the Property Management Division had in possession only about 17,000 properties, and only about 60,000 foreclosures had been authorized. But prior to the end of the fiscal year 1938 over 160,000 foreclosures are estimated to be authorized and foreclosure will have been completed, and the property will actually be in possession of the Corporation in the estimated number of 130,000 cases. During the fiscal year 1938 the Corporation will own more individual pieces of property than was ever in a single ownership before. * * * We estimate that the properties acquired will stand on the books of the Corporation at more than $600,000,000.

This means that 160,000 homes and 20 percent, as far as the amount of money is concerned, of the $3,000,000,000 loaned, will have been foreclosed by the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938. The 17,000 homes or mortgages that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] referred to were those properties which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation now have possession of, but nearly 161,000 foreclosures will have been commenced before June 30, 1938.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, to ask the chairman of the committee what recommendation General Hines made regarding hospitals.

Mr. WOODRUM. In what respect?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. In additions to hospitals and in repairs.

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee was given information that they expect to bring in about 3,200 additional beds by the end of the fiscal year 1938.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. With the money already appropriated?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. It will take care of the present list and the waiting list. Some mention was made yesterday that there were 28 neuropsychiatric beds that are under construction. That is not new construction, but remodeling.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think in certain areas the gentleman will find there is great need for diagnostic centers, and there is a shortage of general medical and surgical beds even for service-connected cases also in certain areas. Could some of that money be used for that purpose?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; we have money in the bill for additions to new facilities, but nothing for new facilities.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. In view of the statement just made by the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. WOODRUM, that no more hospitals are to be built, and in view also of the language in the next paragraph, which says that no part of the appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any site or toward construction of any new hospital or home or for the purchase of any hospital or home, I desire to make this observation: The War Department, due to an arrangement with the Veterans' Administration, has allocated beds in Army hospitals to veterans, including the William Beaumont Hospital in my own city of El Paso, and I express the hope that inasmuch as no more hospitals are to be built there will be a more liberal use made of Army hospitals where they are not entirely occupied by Army patients. The Army has a very fine modern hospital in my city known as the William Beaumont Hospital, which has a capacity of 602 beds, and today it has 100 vacant. Likewise, the veterans' hospital at Albuquerque, 259 beds, and today has 33 beds vacant, and the tubercular veterans' hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., has 450 beds, with 250 vacant. In addition to filling these veterans' hospitals, I feel that a more liberal policy should be used toward the use of vacant beds in Army hospitals. They all belong to the Government; they receive their money for support and maintenance from the same Treasury that the veterans' hospitals get theirs. Mine is a country of magnificent distances. There are a great many veterans, particularly the tubercular veterans, in my city, many of whom have lived there for a good many years and have families residing there. It is more than 250 miles to Albuquerque, N. Mex., and I contend that instead of the Veterans' Administration availing itself of the 50 beds in the William Beaumont Hospital, when there are usually a hundred or more unoccupied, they ought to at least avail themselves of the use of 100 of these beds for the reason that these are poor people, and it is not right to take the tubercular, and in some cases the mental, patients more than 250 miles, and frequently at the veteran's own expense, to Albuquerque, N. Mex., leaving his family residing there in El Paso, when there is a hospital in his own city with plenty of available beds. This would be economy as well as improve the veteran's mental condition, because he would be near his family and where he could see them often.

I want to express the hope that there be a more liberal policy in this matter. It is purely a matter of administration, because they have a financial adjustment each year between the War Department and the Veterans' Administration for the use of these facilities. Colonel Pipes, commanding officer at William Beaumont, has been very fine and considerate about it. He has, in fact, been generous about emergency cases. Today there are 63 patients in the William Beaumont Hospital, but there is no reason in the world why there should not be 75 or 100, because many veterans are begging to go in there. It is not right to send them off two or three hundred miles at additional expense, when there is a Government hospital right there in their own city, whether it is an Army hospital or a veterans' hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

May I ask the gentleman from Texas if the hospital at El Paso is a general hospital?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. That is a general Army hospital.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, this difficulty arises there, that the tubercular veterans would not be satisfied to be sent to a general hospital, nor do they have facilities to take care of them. They do not have facilities to take care of the mental cases. That is the difficulty we are having. They have plenty of available space for general cases, but it is the tubercular cases and the mental cases that require special places, special treatment, and special equipment.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I know they have mental patients at the William Beaumont Hospital, and I think tubercular patients, too. At Fort Bayard they have 250 vacancies. But the William Beaumont Hospital should take care of these people in El Paso, instead of sending them off up to New Mexico, 250 miles, at an additional expense, when there are plenty of vacant beds there. Our climate is specially adapted to the cure of tuberculosis. Many of our leading citizens have come there with the trouble and been cured. There would be no additional expense to the taxpayers. In fact, it would be wise economy. The facilities are not used to full capacity. I have several times urged the Veterans' Administration to let us have at least 75 of these beds, and I think 100 would not be too many. I am happy to be assured by the committee that my request will have just and fair consideration.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. EDMISTON. In the report of the investigation before the Veterans' Committee, I know it is true in my State of West Virginia that the greatest difficulty we have is with the mental cases. Is that true throughout the country?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is true throughout the country. We will have to build new hospitals for the mental cases, or equip some of the older hospitals.

Mr. EDMISTON. I know that our jails are accommodating some of the veterans.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. The patients that were being accommodated at the general hospital in Michigan we had transferred to the marine hospital when it was brought to the attention of the board.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good plan to have hearings before the World War Veterans' Committee regarding hospitalization in order that the Members might be heard and give their views as to the facts in their own districts?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think it certainly would give valuable information, but the gentlewoman from Massachusetts undoubtedly knows that the Veterans' Administration is making a very thorough survey and study of the problem right now.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But I find the individual Members know the needs in their own districts better than the Administration, and I do not see why the Administration should be the deciding factor on that.

Mr. WOODRUM. I think that is true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any site for or toward the construction of any new hospital or home or for the purchase of any hospital or home; and not more than $4,000,000 of this appropriation may be used to repair, alter, improve, or provide facilities in the several hospitals and homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration either by contract or by the hire of temporary employees and the purchase of materials.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I should like to ask whether the prohibition of the use of this appropriation for the construction of any new hospital or home would affect in any manner the construction of the proposed new veterans' hospital at Detroit?

Mr. WOODRUM. The prohibition here is that the funds appropriated in this bill are not available for new construction—that is, for beginning new construction.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the money which has been heretofore appropriated is now available for the construction of the hospital at Detroit?

Mr. WOODRUM. All contracts that are let, we have already appropriated the money for those projects. This does not stop that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not understand that the contract has been let for the construction of the hospital.

Mr. WOODRUM. But the money has been allocated out of a previous allotment. It is not involved in this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman meant when he said "the contract is let", that the money has been allocated and is still available for that use?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; that is true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

For the administrative expenses of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, established by the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of July 22, 1932 (47 Stat., p. 725), including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 821–833); printing and binding; law books, books of reference, and not to exceed $500 for periodicals and newspapers; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent outside of the District of Columbia; payment, when specifically authorized by the Board, of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Board; use of the services and facilities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation; and all other necessary administrative expenses, $1,140,000: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall not exceed (a) the receipts derived during the fiscal year 1938 from assessments upon the Federal home-loan banks, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, and from other sources, and (b) the unobligated balance of such receipts during prior fiscal years: Provided further, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the sale, issuance, and retirement of, or payment of interest on, debentures or bonds, under said Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof: Provided further, That, except for the limitations in amounts hereinbefore specified, and the restrictions in respect to travel expenses, the administrative expenses and other obligations of the Board shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of said act of July 22, 1932, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1421–1449).

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: On page 47, line 24, after the "$1,140,000", insert a comma and the following language: payable from assessments upon the Federal home-loan banks and receipts of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board from other sources for the fiscal year 1938 and prior fiscal years"; and strike out the language beginning with the word "that" in line 25, down to and including the word "further" in line 5 on page 48.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted this amendment to the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is simply a change in phraseology. It was discovered by the clerks of the committee. They took it up with the Budget. It is designed to accomplish the same effect, but it is a difference in phraseology. I have discussed the matter with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Not to exceed $30,000,000 of the funds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, established by the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (48 Stat., p. 128), shall be available during the fiscal year 1938 for administrative expenses of the Corporation, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 821–833); printing and binding; law books, books of reference, and not to exceed $500 for periodicals and newspapers; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; use of the services and facilities of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Federal home-loan banks, and Federal Reserve banks; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a force account, contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, protection, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property belonging to the Corporation or in which it has an interest, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof: Provided further, That except for the limitations in amounts hereinbefore specified, and the restrictions in respect to travel expenses, the administrative expenses and other obligations of the Corporation shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of said Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1461–1468).

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 48, line 19, after the word "exceed", strike out "$30,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$29,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of reducing this appropriation to last year's figures. This Corporation has $2,800,000,000 of mortgages as compared with the Farm Loan Administration mortgages of $1,900,000. The farm-loan banks are spending to service all their loans $11,010,000 per year. It is costing at the present time for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation much more in proportion than it is for the Farm Loan Administration. At the same proportion the Farm Loan Administration expenses would be about $18,000,000, and they are an active outfit taking new loans at large expense involved in connection with them. For instance, 17 percent of their whole work is for new loans. Now, it would seem to me with that situation they should be able to take a cut back at least to where they are operating today instead of having to have an increase for the next year.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, this matter was discussed earlier this afternoon when we started to read the bill. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation at the peak of its lending activities had 2,200 people on its pay roll. When they quit taking loans they reduced their personnel to 1,500.

The question of foreclosures has now come up. It has been discussed here, and there is no question about the fact that it is going to take a lot of people to handle these intricate matters of attending to the foreclosure proceedings.

The Budget made a very great cut in their request for appropriations, and the subcommittee made a further cut of $2,000,000, bringing it down to $30,000,000. I do not believe it is safe in order to protect the Government's interest and in order to give the service to the people who have loans, to cut this amount any further. I should be very glad to see all these expenses reduced, but I do not think it is safe. They need the personnel. They think they need the rest of the personnel, the other 1,000 employees; but I for one shall be very well satisfied if they get by without deficiency.

Now comes another unknown quantity, the great flood in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys. Undoubtedly it is going to cause the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to take over a great many properties in that area. The Corporation will have to manage these properties and handle them, so I do not believe it is safe to make any further cut.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman explain what additional expense there is to administering foreclosed properties? This expense is not chargeable against the Home Owners' Loan Corporation but is chargeable against the property, is it not? Under the law of almost all of the States it is a matter of charge at the time the sale is made which is added to the price of the property.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I do not think it is exactly as the gentleman stated it. I think in some of the States fees are regulated and fixed by statutes. When there is a default, foreclosure proceedings are started. Then the question arises about the laws of the particular State in which the foreclosure proceeding is to be held. Then papers must be drawn, attorneys must be consulted, the management must go to see the property, and there are a thousand and one details to be looked after. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I was of the opinion when I first began considering it that there should be very little expense in connection with a foreclosure of property under this act; but I was surprised to hear everyone, whose opinion I respect as greater than my own, say that it is very much more expensive to collect money than it is to lend it; and this seems to be the experience they are having.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. To be perfectly frank with ourselves, is not this additional appropriation necessitated by the fact that the Government is bidding in these mortgages at the sheriffs' sales?

Mr. WOODRUM. None of this money is for that purpose, not a penny of this $30,000,000 is for the purpose of purchasing any of the property.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Where is that money coming from?

Mr. WOODRUM. That will come from the revolving fund. They have the right to use their revolving fund for the purchase of property.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then none of the money carried in this bill would be for the purpose of buying in mortgages?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman explain, then, why the Government is put to the expense that a mortgagor would be put to under like circumstances?

Mr. WOODRUM. Because of the basic law that we passed, the foreclosure proceeding is at the expense of the Government. The Government ultimately becomes the owner of the property.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that if that were a private loan and there were a failure to pay taxes or interest it would be foreclosed immediately? Here they stay for a year or 2 years and see if they cannot compromise and prevent foreclosure. The gentleman should be in favor of everything to prevent foreclosure, and should favor the spending of money to make these investigations and compromises.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think most of the lawyers of the House have had some experience in the foreclosure of mortgages, either by representing the mortgagor or the mortgagee. If my memory serves me correctly, the laws of most of the States provide an inadequate attorney fee, but that the cost of the sheriff's sale, the publication, and all costs of any court proceeding are added to the indebtedness and are deducted by the sheriff before any excess over and above the mortgage indebtedness is returned to the mortgagor.

It would seem to me that there is not nearly the amount of the expense involved, therefore, to the Government in the foreclosure of this indebtedness as there was in making the original loan. We set up elaborate offices throughout the United States and employed, I think the records show, a peak of 22,000 of a personnel to make these loans. The personnel has been reduced, as the gentleman from Virginia stated, because there is not so much detail involved in the foreclosure of these mortgages as there was in connection with the granting of the mortgage in the first instance. This expense, instead of being chargeable against the Government, is, under the laws of a majority of the States, chargeable against the property where it should be charged. For the life of me I cannot see why the Government should add to its loss on these homes by paying exorbitant fees to lawyers or to agents in connection with the foreclosure of these mortgages.

I think the principle of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York in reducing the appropriations is right, and I will support it as a protest, if nothing more, to the unnecessary, unwarranted expense that the taxpayers of this Nation are put to in maintaining upon the pay roll of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation this exceedingly large personnel to foreclose mortgages. We will be called upon to maintain the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as an agency for the purpose of administering Federal-owned land and liquidating that land. All of us have had experience in connection with Government liquidation, and know how costly it is usually.

At the present time it is remarkable that the liquidators of so many of our small banks after 4 years of receiverships under the Comptroller of the Currency have been able to collect on assets only enough to pay their own salaries and the salaries of the clerks in the banks. In many instances as little as 2 percent in dividends have been paid to the depositors in these banks after 4 years of liquidation. We are approaching the same situation in respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. We will be compelled to maintain an agency for the purpose of administering these receiverships, if you please, until this property is unloaded. The time to unload this property is when the sale is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Not to exceed $9,500,000 of the funds advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Federal Housing Administration, created under authority of the National Housing Act of June 27, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 1246), shall be available during the fiscal year 1938 for administrative expenses of the Administration, including: Personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 821–833), except employees engaged in the inspection of property may be paid an allowance not to exceed 4 cents per mile for all travel performed by motor vehicle in connection with such inspection; printing and binding; law books, books of reference, and not to exceed $1,500 for periodicals and newspapers; not to exceed $1,500 for contract actuarial services; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; payment, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Administration; not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings concerned with the work of the Administration; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property of the Administration acquired under authority of title II of said National Housing Act, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof, and shall be paid from the mutual mortgage insurance fund created by said act: Provided further, That except for the limitations in amounts hereinbefore specified, and the restrictions in respect to travel expenses, the administrative expenses and other obligations of the Administration shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of said act of June 27, 1934, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1701–1723).

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Page 50, line 4, strike out "$9,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$9,250,000, provided that not to exceed $263,000 shall be expended for public relations and educational work."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it will be necessary for me to take 5 minutes with respect to this amendment. It is designed to accomplish with reference to the Federal Housing Administration the same purpose that the amendment previously offered was designed to accomplish in respect to the Rural Electrification Administration. The record indicates that the Federal Housing Administration intends to maintain a force of 120 persons at a total cost of $513,000 for public relations and educational work, which, of course, is another name for publicity.

The record also indicates that this service in the past has been responsible for no less than 126,000 radio broadcasts, and no less than 224,000 motion-picture showings. In response to a question which I asked the Chairman of the Federal Housing Administration when he appeared before the committee, Mr. McDonald stated that he thought the item of over $500,000 could be largely discontinued in another year.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment would simply cut this large sum for publicity purposes in half, leaving over $250,000 for that purpose for the fiscal year 1938 in the hope that Mr. McDonald's prediction may be realized at the end of that time.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Would you say that the purpose of this amendment to reduce the amount for publicity purposes is to bring about the old, old saying that by their deeds ye shall know them rather than by the propaganda they put out?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I agree with the gentleman that the functions of governmental agencies should be deeds and not words.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I am sympathetic with the general attitude of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] in trying to hold down the items in this bill for educational and informational services, and without a doubt the committee impressed upon each bureau or administration that came before us our attitude in this respect, and this is contained in the report. What has been said upon the floor here today, I am sure, will have its effect.

This is the first time these several agencies have been before the committee. They are using their own funds. This money is not coming out of the Public Treasury; and, so far as I was able to determine—and I believe the gentleman will bear me out in this statement—they are doing a good job and they have taken a terrific cut.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that this money comes out of funds that the R. F. C. has allocated to these people?

Mr. WOODRUM. Some of it has been allocated to take care of the work.

Mr. TABER. That is out of the Public Treasury?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Federal Housing Administration is making a good showing, and there is a very likely prospect that the Government will not lose very much because of the fine operation of the Federal Housing Administration. I expected them to lose money. I expected the Government to have an investment at the end of it, but they are doing a good job.

We do not pay for any radio time. Let me clear that up now. However, it has been necessary with several of these organizations to have a large force for informational and educational purposes. I wish you could see the volume of letters and inquiries that come to the Federal Housing Administration and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and one or two others seeking information and explanation. The Social Security Board is another agency which is in the same position. It has been necessary in order that the public may know what their rights are and what these services are offering that they spend what would appear to be large sums of money.

I hope the Committee will allow the appropriation to go as the committee has brought it in here at this time, and let us have a year's experience on it, and I can assure the gentleman from Massachusetts and the Committee that I shall be ready to cooperate in cutting it down as far as possible.

I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. None of the funds herein appropriated for any executive department or other executive agency shall be available to pay any compensation or other expense in connection with any investigation or inquiry under a resolution of either House of Congress, except it be a concurrent resolution of the two Houses; but this shall not be construed to prohibit or limit the authority or scope of action of any such executive department or other executive agency under substantive or appropriation law.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN and Mr. MAVERICK rose.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that section 4 is not in order.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order and shall offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 56, line 23, after section 3, insert:

"SEC. 4. None of the funds herein appropriated for any executive department or other executive agency shall be available to pay any compensation or other expense in connection with any investigation or inquiry under a resolution of either House of Congress."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered is designed to protect the appropriation acts of Congress.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, it is now too late to reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has begun and the gentleman from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. WOODRUM. You will recall that in the deficiency bill there was a provision somewhat similar to this section 4, and that provision is now before the other body for consideration in an effort to compose differences and work out some suitable language.

Here is what the amendment purports to do, and I believe it will certainly have the sympathetic support of the Members of Congress. We found in examining the estimates for several of the departments—for instance, one of the major departments of the Government for which we appropriate large sums of money to carry out very important public functions—that in 18 months' time $400,000 of the money we had appropriated for that Department had been used to pay full-time personnel who were working upon an investigation ordered by the legislative body at the other end of the Capitol. This agency was before our committee complaining that it did not have enough personnel to carry on its regular functions.

And yet the startling fact developed that there were 80 or 90 members of their personnel engaged in an investigation by another body in Congress.

I am not complaining as to the merits or demerits of any investigation, but it is my idea that investigations should stand on their own merits or demerits and carry their own pay checks along with them and not camouflage by offering a resolution and saying that it carries no appropriation and then take the personnel of a department to carry it on.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Chairman did not rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did rule and sustained the point of order.

Mr. MAVERICK. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAVERICK. If the Chair sustained the point of order, how could the gentleman from Virginia offer an amendment to a paragraph that did not exist? The section went out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee amendment was to the preceding section.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Did the gentleman offer an amendment to section 4?

Mr. WOODRUM. If the gentleman will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the morning, he will see what happened. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Well, you cannot expect me to be as wise and intelligent as the gentleman from Virginia. I asked a respectful question.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman made a point of order against the section and I conceded the point of order. I offered an amendment to the bill, and the Chairman sustained the point of order. I began the debate on the amendment and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania undertook to make a point of order which was too late, debate having been started on the amendment.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substitute amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be well if we could get this matter straightened out. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia that there ought to be something in the bill whereby we can have a conference with the Senate. The Senate will in all probability put on the same substitute that they put on the deficiency bill. I want to say that I am in sympathy with the compromise that they put into the bill yesterday. When that bill goes to conference, as it should be tomorrow or next day, is it not the gentleman's thought that whatever is agreed upon in conference should be the provision that should go into all of these appropriation bills?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. It seems to me that that is the way by which we may be able to settle this thing, without debating it every time an appropriation bill comes on the floor. The House and the Senate can agree on this provision, and then the matter can come back to the House and we can have a clear vote in the House.

Mr. WOODRUM. I concur in what the gentleman says, that whatever is finally worked out between the two Houses in conference as the appropriate provision on the deficiency appropriation bill should be the provision carried on all of the bills, but I do call attention to this: If I do not get something on the subject in this bill, then we will be powerless, in conference, to put such a thing in the bill, unless the Senate chooses to initiate it in the Senate and put such a provision on the bill there. Therefore I want to see this amendment get in the bill so that we will have something to work on.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not object to that procedure, because I think the House committee ought to have that leeway; but allow me to repeat, in order that I may not be misunderstood, that I am sympathetic to something similar to this, some compromise being worked out, because I know this to be the truth, that in investigations that have been conducted by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I was the chairman for 6 years, we could not have gotten the money, nor could we have gotten the expert help we secured from a commission like the Interstate Commerce Commission, and we could not have done the business we did; and for that reason I want to see something worked out.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. ELLENBOGEN: Page 57, line 2, after "Congress", strike out "except it be a concurrent resolu-" and all of lines 3 to 6, inclusive, and insert "unless the department or agency from whose staff such person is detailed or loaned shall render to the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives (according as the Senate or the House of Representatives shall have ordered such investigation or inquiry) a statement on or before the 10th day of each month of the number, grade, or status and monthly compensation of the persons so detailed or loaned from the staff of such department or agency during the preceding calendar month."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is obviously new legislation; and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. I call the attention of the Members of the House, and particularly of the gentleman from Virginia, to the fact that during the last session of Congress an investigating committee was appointed to investigate the activities of the American Retail Federation. I submit to you that if it had not been for the services of the employees of the Federal Trade Commission it would have been very difficult for us to start in that investigation. In other words, the Federal Trade Commission had the type of men that we needed for the purpose of assisting us in the examination necessary in that investigation. Their services were very valuable. Had the provision which the gentleman from Virginia has offered been in the law last year, the limitation upon the appropriation, those trained men would not have been able to help us.

I call the gentleman's attention to the necessity of being careful, so that we do not hamstring the committees appointed by the House and the Senate in carrying out these investigations. I think we should make available to the committee these trained men in the departments, and I do not believe that we should accept an amendment of this kind, although I do see some good reasons proposed by the gentleman from Virginia to put this into conference; and I hope that when the first appropriation bill comes back with this or similar language of this kind in the bill, we will have full opportunity to discuss the matter and decide upon a policy with reference to all the appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ELLENBOGEN) there were—ayes 68, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. This act may be cited as the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I simply rose at this time to say that at the end of section 4 I had intended to offer an amendment which I read to the House yesterday. That amendment would prohibit overtime work without time and half overtime pay. On looking up the parliamentary procedure in regard to germaneness and legislation on an appropriation bill, I could not find any way in which I could get this matter before the committee without it being subject to a point of order. I tried to draw up a limitation, but evidently it would not be a limitation. It would be legislation on an appropriation. However, I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. The gentleman from Georgia is also a member of the Committee on Labor. He is a great friend of labor and an advocate and a worker for labor, and as chairman of the Committee on Civil Service I know he is sympathetic with labor. He does not believe in people working overtime without being paid. From my conversation with the gentleman from Georgia I understand he will later bring in a bill to provide that these workers who work overtime will either be given leave to make up for the extra time or will be paid time and a half for overtime work. Last year he had similar provisions in a bill reported to the House. This bill passed the House, but those good provisions were stricken out in the Senate. This time I believe the Senate will be more liberal in their view of this question.

With that coming from the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service I will be glad to cooperate with him in every way possible to do away with this evil of overtime work without pay.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4064, the independent offices appropriation bill, and directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en bloc.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. WOODRUM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ELEVENTH INTERNATIONAL DAIRY CONGRESS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State, to the end that legislation may be enacted to authorize an appropriation of $10,000 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Eleventh International Dairy Congress, to be held in Berlin, Germany, in August 1937.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

PUBLIC WORKS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 140)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, and illustrations referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

During the depression we have substantially increased the facilities and developed the resources of our country for the common welfare through public works and work-relief programs. We have been compelled to undertake actual work somewhat hurriedly in the emergency. Now it is time to develop a long-range plan and policy for construction—to provide the best use of our resources and to prepare in advance against any other emergency.

In a previous message, I have suggested a permanent planning agency under the Chief Executive in order that, among other things, all public works proposals may filter from the many individual departments and bureaus to a central planning place and thence to the President.

I have also suggested to the Congress that following this course of planning the President will annually submit to the Congress a list of projects which have been studied and approved and, at the same time, inform the Congress, through the Budget, of the total amount of Federal funds which, in his judgment, should be appropriated for public works during the following fiscal year.

The list of public works submitted by the President in the Budget message would, of course, be wholly advisory, for it is within the discretion of the Congress to eliminate projects from this list, to alter the scope of projects, or to add other projects.

The report of the National Resources Committee on public works planning which I submit today should, of course, be read in conjunction with the recommendations for highways, bridges, dams, flood control, and so forth, already under construction, estimates for which have been submitted in the Budget, and also should be read in conjunction with other special reports, such as the report of the Great Plains Committee which I expect to submit to the Congress in a few days.

The National Resources Committee submits a 6-year program, based on selection and priority of public works. The period of 6 years is arbitrarily chosen and can, of course, be made to fit into annual future appropriations made by the Congress.

The report also contains recommendations on the timing of public works and division of costs in their relation to the necessary organization of future continued planning. I have already referred to this in my message relating to the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government.

As an example of the kind of reservoir of projects constituting the 6-year program, a drainage-basin study is included in the report. This summary list of projects involving the uses of water is not to be regarded as fixed or final, as the report itself notes, but rather indicates a great forward step in the development of the planning process, considering not one project alone but the relationships between a great group of projects dealing with water use and control.

Through the formulation and annual revision of a program of all types of construction, revision, and adoption of the program by Congress and appropriations under regular budgetary procedure timed in part in relation to economic needs, we can provide for the orderly development of our resources and the provision of needed facilities for our people.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY STRIKES

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report (H. Res. 96) from the Committee on Labor.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 96

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives all such information as he may possess, or which may be available in the Labor Department, and which will show or tend to show—

(a) The name, the location of any and all industrial concerns having to do with the production of motor vehicles (and any of the parts which go into the production thereof) which have been closed either wholly or in part, directly or indirectly, by so-called "sit down" strikers.

(b) The total number of employees in each plant so closed and the number of the "sit down" strikers in each of said plants so closed.

(c) The number of employees in each of said plants who desire to return to work.

(d) The number of workers in each of said plants who belong, respectively, to the Committee on Industrial Organization, to the United Automobile Workers, to the American Federation of Labor, and the number who are not members of any labor organization.

(e) The wage loss to the worker.

(f) The number of "sit down" strikers in Fisher Body Plant No. 1, Flint, Mich., who were formerly employed by that company.

(g) The number of such "sit down" strikers who were not so employed.

(h) The number of the "sit down" strikers in that plant who were not residents of Flint prior to the strike.

(i) The same information with reference to Fisher Body Plant No. 2, Flint, Mich.

(j) The number of pickets who are actively engaged in picketing in Fisher Body Plant No. 1, Flint, Mich.

(k) The number of pickets who were not employed in Fisher Body Plant No. 1, Flint, Mich., prior to the strike.

(l) The same information with reference to Fisher Body Plant No. 2, Flint, Mich.

(m) The number of pickets who are engaged in picketing the Briggs Body Plant in Detroit, Mich.

(n) The total number of persons who acted as pickets at any time at the Briggs Body Plant in Detroit, Mich.

(o) The total number of employees in said plant.

(p) The total number of pickets who are not residents of the State of Michigan.

(q) The total number of pickets who are not employees of said plant.

(r) The total number of persons who have been or who are receiving aid or relief from the Government and who were at the time of the strike dependent upon the motor industry for their livelihood.

(s) Whether the pickets at any of these closed plants previously by either contact or show of force prevent other employees of these plants from going into the plants to work.

(t) If the answer to the above is in substance that employees are prevented from working, under what provision of law, statute, Executive order, or opinion does the Department justify, if it does justify, the Government's failure to furnish protection under article 14 of the Federal Constitution?

(u) Are "sit down" strikers in possession of any industrial concerns in Michigan?

(v) If the answer be in the affirmative, under what statute, order, rule, or opinion of the Department of Labor are these "sit down" strikers in possession of such plants?

(w) Approximately how many persons who desire to work are deprived of employment by the "sit down" strikers, and how many of them will be given relief aid by the Federal or State Government?

(x) What sums, if any, are being paid to the "sit down" strikers in each plant while they are engaged in strike activities?

(y) What sums, if any, are being paid for pickets?

(z) By whom or what organization are such sums being paid, and from what source are they derived?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 96) requesting the Secretary of Labor to furnish the House of Representatives with all information available on the automobile strike, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The following letter from the Honorable Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, is submitted for the information of the House.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 2, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN CONNERY: I have your letter of February 1, 1937, and appreciate your calling my attention to House Resolution 96, which has been referred to your committee. The resolution directs the Secretary of Labor to furnish the House of Representatives such information as may be in my possession or which may be available to the Department regarding certain matters in connection with current and recent strikes of workers in various branches of the automotive industry, with particular reference to the labor dispute in the Fisher Body Plants at Flint, Mich., and the Briggs Body Plant at Detroit.

I hope that the House will not adopt this resolution, as it would seriously interfere with the efforts being made by the Federal and State Governments to achieve an equitable settlement of the current strikes and to lay the basis for stable labor relations in the automobile industry. This Department has no power to compel the giving of sworn testimony or to subpena books and records of any of the parties to the current dispute. Consequently, any information which I could give would simply be based on hearsay, which, as you can readily see, would be biased.

The Department of Labor is in no position to secure information on the number of sit-down strikers and pickets at any of the plants. This information can be secured only if the union saw fit to make such data public. Without interviewing each of the strickers and pickets it would be impossible to know which were residents of Flint or of the State of Michigan. In all probability, if the Department attempted to interview such persons, they would be unwilling voluntarily to furnish their names and places of residence to the Government.

Without knowing just how many of the workers are voluntarily out of the plants it would be impossible to estimate the wage loss to the workers as requested in the proposed resolution. In other words, there are many workers who consider themselves out on strike and it is impossible to distinguish such persons from the total number who are at the moment without employment. Data on the number of persons receiving relief are not available in the Department of Labor. The information requested on this point could be answered only by the local relief authorities, the State relief authorities, and the Works Progress Administration.

To determine "who desires to return to work" or who has been prevented from returning to work would be entirely a matter of speculation, and the guess of the Department in this matter would be no better than those that have been published in the press by both sides to the controversy.

It is also clear that this resolution tends to be one-sided since it proposes an investigation into union activities by asking about the relative membership in certain labor organizations (see (d)) and the expenditures and sources of strike funds (see (x), (y), and (z)), whereas there is nothing in the resolution which is designed to secure information about the activities of employers in these strikes, particularly to the extent which intimidation has been used. The resolution further makes no provision for securing information about the basic working conditions which underlie the existing industrial difficulty. For a Federal Government to be required to secure information about the activities of only one of the parties to a dispute would completely destroy its effectiveness as an instrument of mediation and conciliation.

There seems to be some misapprehension of the part played by the Federal Government in labor disputes. I refer particularly to paragraphs (t) and (v), which seem to assume that the Department of Labor has a regulatory function or is enforcing statutes which govern the relative rights of the parties. Neither the Secretary nor the Department of Labor have any jurisdiction to pass upon the legality of either picketing or the "sit-down" strike. The action which the Department has taken with respect to these strikes has been purely mediatory pursuant to the act of March 4, 1913, authorizing the Secretary of Labor to serve as a mediator of labor disputes and to appoint conciliators whenever in the judgment of the Secretary the interests of industrial peace so require.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot do that under the rules.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Will not the gentleman from Massachusetts be so kind as to yield me about 10 minutes?

Mr. CONNERY. I did not understand the gentleman desired time. My understanding was that I was to yield a few minutes to the author of the resolution, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]. If it is agreeable, I will yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], and 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. If this matter is brought up we certainly are entitled to some time in which to consider it. This has been a very busy day.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make a statement. This has been a very busy and strenuous day. It was represented to the Chair that if this matter were allowed to be called up it would consume at the utmost 5 minutes. With that understanding the Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, but that was the extent of the agreement made by the Chair.

If the disposition of this resolution is going to require additional debate or further consideration the Chair would prefer to take the matter up tomorrow. This will be the unfinished business tomorrow, because it is a privileged matter.

Mr. SNELL. That will be all right.

THE LATE FRANK GARDNER

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it is with profound sorrow that I announce to the House the passing of Judge Frank Gardner, of Scottsburg, Ind., a former Member of this House.

Mr. Gardner was a Member of the Congress three terms, viz, the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, and Seventieth Congresses.

He represented the old Third Indiana District, the district which I had the honor to represent in the Seventy-second Congress. Mr. Gardner was a lovable, honest, conscientious gentleman and will be remembered as such by many Members of this House who served with him while he was in Congress. He was a plain, unostentatious gentleman, dependable and loyal and ever alert to the interests of his home, his district, his State, and his Nation.

It is with deep regret and profound sorrow that I announce to this House the passing of former Congressman Frank Gardner.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech which I made yesterday over a national hook-up of the Columbia Broadcasting System on the subject of low-cost housing and slum clearance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I delivered last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech I made last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 60, as amended by House Resolution 106, the Chair appoints as additional members of the Select Committee on Government Organization the following: Mr. MEAD and Mr. KNIFFIN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. For the convenience of the Members I make this announcement of the business to be brought up within the next few days. After the disposition of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], which will be the unfinished business tomorrow, it is intended to devote the remainder of tomorrow and all of Friday to general debate on the reciprocal trade agreement bill, to adjourn over until Monday, if possible, which will be District day, and then on Tuesday to read for amendment the reciprocal trade agreement bill. This is the program as far as I know it.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BINDERUP (at the request of Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. FITZGERALD (at the request of Mr. CITRON), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. JARRETT (at the request of Mr. WOLFENDEN), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. CASEY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. DALY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. NICHOLS, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BULWINKLE, for 3 days, on account of illness.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on February 2, 1937, present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 81. Joint resolution to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Government Organization.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 4, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARING

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a continuation of the hearing before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. on February 4, 1937, on the long-and-short-haul bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

331. A letter from the chairman, Gorgas Memorial Institute, transmitting the report covering the work and operation of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory for the period from November 1, 1935, to October 31, 1936 (H. Doc. No. 46); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

332. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill providing for the repeal of the proviso clause of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 603); to the Committee on the Public Lands.

333. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a special statistical study made in accordance with the authority granted under the act of May 27, 1935 (Public, No. 74); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

334. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting the draft of a proposed amendment to the act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 487); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

335. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draft of a bill to amend section 4 of the act of May 31, 1933 (48 Stat. 108), enacted for the purpose of protecting the interests and welfare of Indians of the Taos Pueblo, N. Mex., in certain lands within the Carson National Forest; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

336. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to accept the cession by the State of Arkansas of jurisdiction over all lands now or hereafter included within the Hot Springs National Park, Ark., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. COCHRAN: Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. House Joint Resolution 131. Joint resolution for the payment of certain employees of the United States Government in the District of Columbia and employees of the District of Columbia for January 20, 1937; without amendment (Rept. No. 170). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mrs. O'DAY: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 3645. A bill for the relief of Francesco Kovach, alias Frank Kovach, alias Joe Kalister; without amendment (Rept. No. 169). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

ADVERSE REPORTS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. CONNERY: Committee on Labor. House Resolution 96. Resolution requesting the Secretary of Labor to furnish the House of Representatives with all information available on the automobile strike; without amendment (Rept. No. 172). Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3210) to place Harold Staats, formerly captain, Officers' Reserve Corps, on the emergency officers' retired list, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LORD: A bill (H. R. 4268) to divest certain activities of their interstate character; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LEMKE: A bill (H. R. 4269) to provide for a useful and comprehensive system for the impounding, storing, conserving, and making use of the unappropriated waters falling or emanating within the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. O'MALLEY: A bill (H. R. 4270) for the better assurance of the protection of persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 4271) to amend the Social Security Act to provide for aid to Indians; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HEALEY: A bill (H. R. 4272) to authorize the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 4273) to authorize the refund of amounts deducted from pensions of Civil War veterans and the widows and dependents of such veterans by reason of economy legislation; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: A bill (H. R. 4274) to provide for the completion of the 12-mile spacing of the horizontal control and the 5-mile spacing of vertical control surveys in the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. IGLESIAS: A bill (H. R. 4275) to correct United States citizenship status of certain persons born in Puerto Rico, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mrs. NORTON: A bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia", and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GREEVER: A bill (H. R. 4277) to provide for the extension of certain prospecting permits, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: A bill (H. R. 4278) to regulate the sale of admission tickets in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4279) providing that in all cases filed in an inferior Federal court the court shall pass upon both questions of law and fact with the exception that no inferior court shall pass upon the constitutionality of any act of Congress; and further providing that the Supreme Court in deciding any case on appeal shall pass upon both questions of law and fact with the exception that it shall not pass in such cases upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4280) to regulate the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CELLER: A bill (H. R. 4281) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to construct and maintain a Government radio broadcasting station; authorizing the United States Commissioner of Education to provide programs of national and international interest; making necessary appropriations for the construction, maintenance, and operation of the station and production of programs therefor; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 4282) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon common carriers engaged in interstate commerce by railroad by compelling such common carriers to maintain tracks, bridges, roadbed, and all permanent structures for the permanent support of way, trackage, and traffic, in safe, proper, and suitable condition; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 4283) to provide for the construction of a post office at Madison, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4284) to provide for the construction of a post office at Dunbar, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RIGNEY: A bill (H. R. 4285) to increase the salaries of letter carriers in the village delivery service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of the Rockford National Farm Loan Association, Rockford, Ill., asking the Congress to enact legislation providing for the continuance of the 3½-percent interest rate on Federal land-bank loans and to extend the 10-year Land Bank Commissioner loans to 20 years or more; to the Committee on Agriculture.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art ever near, to be gracious, looking, waiting, and loving men, we would be still and know that Thou art God! Bless the Congress assembled, all Governors and magistrates throughout our land. We pray that our citizens may live lives of industry, sobriety, and morality. May they cultivate self-restraint, becoming more free and aspiring to a more complete divine manhood. O Thou Master of Nazareth, bring men together by the common processes of Thy teaching; harmoniously relate them to the common life of man; keep them under Thy guidance. O King of the Eternities, sovereign in love and power, may we submit ourselves to Thee, that our joy may be fulfilled unto the glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3587. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to extend for a period of 2 years the guarantee by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed as members on the part of the Senate of the Joint Committee on Government Organization, provided for in House Joint Resolution No. 81, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved February 3, 1937, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. BYRD, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. NORRIS.

CREATION OF CAPITAL AUDITORIUM COMMISSION

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported favorably the bill (S. 974) to create a Capital Auditorium Commission with an amendment. The effect of the amendment is to increase the membership of the commission from three to five, adding the ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in each body of the Congress. I think there will be no opposition to this matter; and in the interest of dispatch of business, may I give notice that if I can get recognition in the House tomorrow I shall ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. I make this statement at the present time so that those interested may study the measure in the meantime. The bill provides only for an investigation and report by this commission, with no authority to act further.

CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 97

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, and continued under authority of House Resolution 44 of the Seventy-fourth Congress and House Resolution 11 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate the conservation of the wildlife resources of the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $7,500, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question? As I understand, this simply continues the appropriation and allocation as already made, and there is no new money recommended at the present time?

Mr. WARREN. It allows the gentleman from Virginia, as chairman of the select committee, 3 years to expend $7,500, and this renews it for the same amount.

Mr. SNELL. That is a pretty good record so far.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 108

Resolved, That until otherwise authorized by law there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives the sum of $1,740 per annum, payable monthly, as compensation for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee; and the sum of $1,740 per annum, payable monthly, as compensation to an assistant clerk to the Committee on Labor, to be appointed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I take it that probably the members of these committees made a pretty good showing before our Committee on Accounts or they would not have received this allowance. I think where they have a real need they should have it. I know the committee would not have made this recommendation unless it was sure of the need.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION ACT

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3587) making deficiency appropriations, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and request a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3587) making deficiency appropriations, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and request a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. TABER, and Mr. BACON.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in colloquy yesterday with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], reference was made to certain testimony given by Mr. Sidney Morgan, Secretary of the United States Tariff Commission, at the hearings before the Appropriations Committee on the independent offices appropriation bill. I had understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] was going to put this testimony in the RECORD in connection with his remarks. Evidently I misunderstood him, and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point certain of the testimony of Mr. Morgan in regard to sugar-tariff revenue and importations of sugar from Cuba.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUGAR REVENUES

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Do you know what the reduction in revenue amounts to as the result of the reduction in protection for Cuban sugar under the Cuban treaty?

Mr. MORGAN. Offhand, no, sir. I have seen that figure stated in some publication.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Can you put in the record a statement showing the amount of the reduction in that duty and what that amounts to in terms of revenue to the Treasury?

Mr. MORGAN. I will endeavor to get that for you and insert it in the RECORD.

"SUGAR REVENUES

"The amount of revenue collected in duties on imports of sugar from Cuba during the period of the trade agreement with Cuba compared with the computed revenue for the same period based on the rate of duty in effect immediately preceding the agreement:

	Revenue
	Aug. 3 to Dec. 31, 1934	Complete calendar year, 1935
Computed duty on basis of rate of duty on Cuban sugar under 1934 Presidential proclamation	$45,765,887	$60,698,730
Computed duty on present rate of duty	27,459,532	36,419,238
Difference	18,306,355	24,279,492

"Under the provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act the Cuban quota on sugar from 1936 was increased by 14.4 percent over that allowed for 1935. Assuming Cuba fills her quota allowance, the computed duties on these imports for 1936 would be as follows:

Revenue
Computed duty on basis of rate on Cuban sugar under 1934 Presidential proclamation	$69,439,347
Computed duty on present rate	41,663,608
Difference	27,775,739

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Do you know whether there has been any reduction in the price to the consumer since that other reduction was made?

Mr. MORGAN. Personally I do not know.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If you can get the information in answer to any of these questions, will you do that?

Mr. MORGAN. I will be very glad to submit answers.

"SUGAR PRICES

"The lowering of the rate of duty on Cuban sugar under the trade agreement probably has had little effect on the wholesale price of sugar or on the price to the consumer in the United States. The provisions of the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act restrict the imports from Cuba as well as shipments from other sources, and this limitation of the total supply to the United States market is, no doubt, the most important factor affecting domestic sugar prices. The Cuban Export Association, the official selling organization of Cuban sugar, sells its quota of sugar in the United States at prevailing prices, and the United States price fluctuates chiefly on the basis of the relation of the total domestic supply available under the quota provisions to the probable domestic consumption of sugar. The following table shows the monthly prices of raw and of refined sugar for the years 1933 to 1936.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming that there was a reduction in the amount of money paid into the United States Treasury from duties on sugar coming from Cuba, we must, must we not, take into consideration the fact that we sent millions of dollars' worth of products to Cuba from this country and those two amounts might balance each other, might they not?

Mr. MORGAN. These things are getting into a rather technical economic atmosphere.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is not that true, that one amount would balance the other?

Mr. MORGAN. I think there is some element of correctness in that statement.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If you could also furnish the figures showing what we have shipped into Cuba, and the value of it, under the agreement, that would be very helpful.

Mr. MORGAN. You mean the figures showing the increase in trade under the agreement?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I think we could get that for you.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Have you a list of the principal importers of sugar from Cuba?

Mr. MORGAN. I think we have.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will you furnish such a list as you may have in that connection?

Mr. MORGAN. For the RECORD?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes; for the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

(The statement above referred to is as follows:)

"SUGAR IMPORTERS

"The principal importers of raw sugar from Cuba are the United States refiners. The most important refiners are: The American Sugar Refining Co., New York City; the National Sugar Refining Co., New York City; Arbuckle Bros., New York City; Pennsylvania Sugar Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; Revere Sugar Refineries, Boston, Mass.; Savannah Sugar Refinery, Savannah, Ga.

"Importers of refined sugar from Cuba: Hershey Co., Hershey, Pa., and Lamborn & Co., New York City."

CHAIRMAN JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a red-letter day for the House of Representatives for honors. The Joint Committee on Printing, of which I have the honor to be a member, for the first time in the history of this Nation elected the gentleman from Thomasville, N. C., the ex-mayor of that town and one of our colleagues, WALTER LAMBETH, chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing. [Applause.]

WALTER LAMBETH is one of the finest men we have in the House of Representatives. He is honest, conscientious, and hard working, and I predict for him as chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing one of the best reigns as any chairman who has ever had that committee assignment, and I am sure you will be proud of the work he will do as chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing. The House of Representatives has honored him, and he in turn will be a great honor to the House of Representatives.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If I understand the gentleman correctly, this is the first time in the history of Congress that a Member of the House has been elected chairman of that committee?

Mr. RICH. This is the first time in the history of the Nation that a Member of the House of Representatives has had that honor. [Applause.]

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY STRIKES

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the report of the Committee on Labor, pending when the House adjourned yesterday, on House Resolution 96.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution (a resolution requesting certain information from the Secretary of Labor with reference to the strike at Flint, Mich.) was offered for the purpose of obtaining information and not for the purpose of obtaining an investigation.

The resolution was offered in an effort to obtain from the Department of Labor, whose Secretary has had representatives in the strike area almost from its inception, facts which would enable the Congress to determine for itself whether this strike was a strike of, by, and for the workers, or a strike incited by outsiders for some purpose other than the good of the workers, or whether the strike appeared at this particular time because of other conditions.

A disclosure as to the number of sit-down strikers who were, or who were not, employees of the company, of the number of pickets who were employees of the company, of the number of pickets who were not employees, of the number of strikers, of sit-downers, and of pickets who came from other States to take part in the strike or in demonstrations connected with it, would have at least some tendency to show whether the strike was the result of a disagreement between the employees and the employer, or whether it was a fight between labor organizations or was brought about by some other extraneous cause.

Such disclosure would throw some light on the question of whether this strike is an implement by and through which the C. I. O. expects to throttle the American Federation of Labor; whether it is a strike to guarantee to the laborer the right to work, to add to his personal right to work his property right to a job, or whether it is a fight to enable the minority, or even the majority, if it be a majority, to deprive the individual laborer of his right to sell his labor in the open market and to establish a dictator over labor.

Opposing this resolution, in her letter to the committee, Madam Secretary, after referring to the lack of power in her Department to compel the giving of sworn testimony, said:

> Consequently, any information which I could give would simply be based on hearsay, which, as you can readily see, would be biased.

In view of the fact that she has had observers upon the ground, that they are undoubtedly trained and skilled observers, it is more than remarkable that the information which she possesses or could obtain would be biased and unreliable.

She further states that the Department of Labor—

> Is in no position to secure information on the number of sit-down strikers and pickets at any of the plants. This information can be secured only if the union saw fit to make such data public.

This statement is absurd on the face of it. Her observers certainly can count and assuredly they must know the difference between a sit-down striker and a picket, and also between a picket and an innocent bystander. Nor is there any reason to believe that either the union or General Motors would refuse to give her this information did she request it in her official capacity; certainly not if she made it clear that she was acting for the President, as the President on at least one occasion in this controversy said she was acting.

Her statement—

> That this resolution tends to be one-sided since it proposes an investigation into union activities by asking about the relative membership in certain labor organizations and asking for no information about the activities of employers—

Is merely an excuse, not a reason, for denying a disclosure of the facts.

In the first place, the resolution does not ask for an investigation. It asks for information already obtained and I offered to have the resolution include a disclosure of any activities on the part of any employer.

Moreover, the Senate Civil Liberties Committee is now, and for some time past has been, making an investigation into the activities of the employers, and it is understood that, on February 8, officials of General Motors will appear before that investigating body.

It is encouraging to note the statement in her letter that—

> Neither the Secretary nor the Department of Labor have any jurisdiction to pass upon the legality of either picketing or the sit-down strike.

Newspaper reports would indicate that the Secretary has some very decided views as to the legality of the strikers' position.

A few days ago I called attention to the fact that hundreds of armed men had marched into Michigan from other States with the determination to close, and keep closed, these factories of Michigan, in which the vast majority of the workers have no quarrel with their employers.

The morning papers disclose that thousands, instead of hundreds, of such men are now in Michigan for the accomplishment of this purpose. The situation, instead of improving, has gradually grown worse, in that each side, had it been so inclined, had opportunity to increase the number of its fighters and the improvement of their armament.

Whatever the situation may have been, or may be, elsewhere, the evidence is conclusive that neither in Flint nor in Detroit has the motor industry brought in any considerable number of armed or unarmed outside men prepared to defend their property. Equally conclusive is it that the C. I. O. has followed a directly opposite course and that it has made preparations for a pitched battle.

After the question of the right to occupy these plants had been decided adversely by the circuit court, the sit-down strikers, in telegrams to the Governor, announced their intention of holding possession, this in defiance of the law.

The Governor says there must be no bloodshed, no violence. In substance and in effect, this means that the right to work, recognized by all, is forcibly denied a large percentage of the population of the city.

It further means that the Governor will not enforce the law. If the Governor said, and means what he is quoted as saying—that is, that troops would not be used to enforce the court's order—then the result is that, in Michigan, insofar as the Governor is concerned, neither the right of property nor the personal right to work will be protected by the State's chief executive officer.

This is anarchy; this is rebellion. It is receiving the tacit support, as effective in this case as active assistance, of the Federal and the State Governments.

Of what practical value is the oath to support the Constitution of either State or Nation if, by force and arms, the citizen may be deprived, first, of his property; second, of his right to work; and, last, of his means to support himself and his family; and the executive department of the two governments, by their actions, as they do in this case, sanction such procedure?

My only request is that, before a like condition comes to you and to your people, you give this situation a little thought—thought free from any political consideration—and then determine whether we are fulfilling our duty if we sit idly by until this rebellion covers the whole country.

I have called the situation to your attention. I have tried to induce action. The responsibility is yours as well as mine.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 18 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am not standing before you and addressing you in the capacity of Members of the House of Representatives. I want to talk to you individually for a few minutes.

Ever since this sit-down strike in the city of Flint occurred I have been waiting for somebody who knows something about that city and its people to take the floor and, in justice to the city, enlighten the Members with respect to the character of the people there.

Mr. Speaker, I want to give you a little picture of the type of people who live in the city of Flint and relate something about its development, so that you may judge the difficulty in which the people now find themselves.

At one time, like many other cities in that part of Michigan, the chief manufacturing of this city was wagons and buggies, but there came a time when there was an invention which we referred to then as the horseless carriage, and a plant was started as an infant industry in the city of Flint. As the horseless carriage became popular, the city grew by leaps and bounds. First, it was a small town of 15,000 people. Civic improvements could not keep pace with the city's industrial growth. The streets were unpaved and did not meet the needs of a growing city. The schools became inadequate. There were not sufficient park and recreational facilities. Men came from every part of the United States to this little growing town; they were anxious to work there and get the high wages paid. Workers even set up tents and lived in them until they could build some kind of structure to accomodate their families. The city grew from 15,000 to 25,000, 50,000, 75,000, 100,000, and 150,000.

The citizens were determined to have a real city and to achieve this end they decided to work together. So all classes of people, men, women, labor, industrialists, professional men, and merchants joined hands in 1916 and determined to make Flint a well-rounded, planned city. Laborers by the thousand joined the forces of the other citizens to improve and beautify Flint.

The citizens of the town met frequently. They met in church and in factory and everywhere to see what they could do to build up a beautiful, happy, and contented community. I question whether any city in this country has ever shown such a spirit of cooperation as was manifested there. Every person who had a suggestion to improve the city was listened to with eagerness by the other citizens of the community.

I recall that on one occasion a young man who was an employee in the Dort automobile plant approached some of the industrialists and said, "There is an old city dump here that is infested, unsightly, and a menace to public health. It has been used for the dumping of garbage and we who labor have to walk by it every day, and our wives wheel their babies by it, and it ought to be eliminated." They said, "What can we do about it?" and he replied, "First, we ought to clean it out and then build a stadium there where all the people of the city can meet." Businessmen went down with this young man and looked at the site.

There were eight houses on part of the land which it would be necessary to acquire if they were going to have a stadium. These men, upon the suggestion of this boy, obtained these eight houses and the land on which they stood for $18,000 and paid for it. They bought the old dump or gravel pit for $5,000 and also acquired an island in the river just opposite the stadium site. Then they said to the young man, "What do you suggest next?" He said, "Well, if the people were so careless as to make of this place a city dump on which to deposit the refuse of the city, it would be an excellent civic lesson if they had to shovel it out." They said, "All right, what is your next move?" He said, "We can organize and have a field day and have everybody work." He organized a field day and at 7 o'clock one morning 5,000 people, including the workers in the factories, were there with their shovels and spades and truck. They labored diligently all day. When night came they had cleaned out the debris; and, today, there now stands in the city of Flint, one of the finest stadiums to be found west of Harvard University. The people of the community have met there from time to time throughout the years to enjoy public functions.

A survey revealed a very large number of deaths of women in childbirth. To meet this problem a maternity hospital was proposed. The citizens went out on the street and canvassed for a fund to provide a hospital. While the deaths in maternity cases had formerly been very large, after the hospital had been in operation for 2 years, 2,000 cases were handled, and of this number only 2 of the mothers lost their lives.

The citizens wanted to raise funds for the Boy Scouts. Men and women canvassed the city for funds, and in 14 hours raised $100,000 in cash. I remember when they met and made a report. A laboring man came in with a canvas bag, and he said, "You are not playing fair. You did not ask us to contribute. We have boys. I have here $5,000 in this canvas bag which the workmen in the Buick factory have contributed."

The citizens built a million-dollar high school and two junior-high schools, each costing a million dollars. The son of a laboring man can get 2 years' college work in the high school and then enter the University of Michigan, receiving credit to apply on his university course.

Cooperation has made Flint a model city. Model workmen's homes have been built. They did not come to the Federal Government for aid. The city and the industries built the workmen's homes, the roof surface of which covers an area of 42 acres.

Everything was perfect contentment in the city of Flint and the citizens were proud of their city. Other cities sent commissions to Flint to find out how the citizens had developed such a city.

These commissioners went away inspired with what they had seen. The factories paid the highest wages of any city in the world. Labor was happy and contented.

In December I talked with a young farmer boy from my district who is now employed in an automobile plant in Flint. I said, "Son, how much are you paid?" He said, "Ten dollars a day." I said, "Is everything pleasant?" He said, "Yes; everything is fine."

When the depression came the Flint industries were the ones that had the courage to face the future, to help this country fight its way out of the depression.

What has happened in recent weeks to disturb the peace, quiet, and contentment in the city of Flint? The most un-American thing that has ever happened in America has occurred in Flint. A group of outside disturbers came into Flint and by their tactics soon had that city in a perfect turmoil. It is now an armed camp. Windows were smashed, property destroyed, people injured, and men willing to work were prevented from doing so. These disturbers were outsiders who came there to rule or ruin. I repeat that the sit-down strike is un-American and violates every principle of personal liberty.

Mr. Speaker, what has already happened in Flint can be reenacted in every community in the United States if this malignant disease fastens itself upon our body politic as a general coercive practice. It may not be long before gentlemen of this House will be here appealing to Congress for relief in the interest of their respective communities suffering from violence and disorder because of a sit-down strike. I have this criticism to offer to the action taken on the resolution of inquiry. This sit-down strike is serious. Last year there was appropriated $21,000,000 for the Labor Department. This year the Secretary of Labor will ask for $24,000,000. When Congress asks information from a Cabinet officer, supported by the money of the taxpayers, I say it is the duty of that department, when called upon by Congress, not only to have the information but to lay that information before the Congress so that the Congress can meet a situation such as I have described. The Congress is entitled to the official facts upon which to act. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to make it very plain to the House that to the best of my knowledge—and I know that I am speaking personally, but I think I speak for every member of the committee—not one of the members of the Committee on Labor endorses sit-down strikes. [Applause.] We do not believe that any man has a right to go on the property of another and then cease work, and say "I am going to sit in this plant and not work", that plant being the property of another. [Applause.] The report of the committee reporting this resolution was unanimous. There is no partisanship in it whatever. The committee felt that if we reported this resolution favorably it would be putting the Secretary of Labor in the position of being a partisan, because everything in the resolution requested information about the strikers, about the sit-down strikers, the pickets, all about the workers, and nothing was asked relative to the attitude and activities of the management. Certainly, that would put the Secretary of Labor in the position of being a partisan, and, the Secretary of Labor under the law of the United States is supposed to be a mediator, a conciliator. With the industrial situation as it is today—you have only to read the newspapers to realize the seriousness of conditions, and it will not be helpful in the settlement of strikes for the House to interfere without full knowledge of all the facts before it. We are hopeful that there will soon be a constructive settlement of the pending strike. A resolution now before us, if reported favorably at this time, would only serve to muddy the waters and interfere with the Department of Labor in its efforts to reach a peaceful solution of this strike. That is why the committee, by a unanimous vote—Democrats, Republicans, and Progressives—voted to report the resolution adversely.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman stated that his committee is not in favor of sit-down strikes. I do not think the gentleman wants to give the House or the country the impression that in reference to this particular controversy the gentleman's committee has made any investigation or study of the facts and circumstances surrounding the strike. I do not believe the gentleman wants to give the House the impression that the strikers are at fault.

Mr. CONNERY. We have not gone into the merits of this case. It was not the function of the committee to pass on this trouble. The committee did not consider the matter of this sit-down strike. I want the House to know that while the Committee on Labor is not in favor of sit-down strikes, it is in favor of collective bargaining and the right of the worker to strike to enforce his economic demands.

Mr. BOILEAU. The Committee on Labor has not taken any position on this?

Mr. CONNERY. No; not on the strike situation itself. We have reported this resolution adversely because it would make the Secretary of Labor seem partisan, and that we do not want to do.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman's committee doing anything to try to correct the evil going on in the city of Flint? What is the Labor Committee doing to prohibit the strike that is going on there at the present time?

Mr. CONNERY. It is not the function of the Committee on Labor to do anything about any industrial trouble until such trouble is referred to our committee by the House.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman's committee trying to do anything to stop these many strikes in our country?

Mr. CONNERY. The Committee on Labor has worked unceasingly for legislation that would bring about industrial peace, and the committee is at the service of labor and the American people to do anything through legislation which will eliminate the conditions which result in industrial strife.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman's committee make a study as to what should be done to correct that situation?

Mr. CONNERY. Our committee is considering labor matters day after day, and we will have plenty of suggestions later in the session to offer to this House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman said that the resolution calls for information as to the activities of one group. Is it not true that the Civil Liberties Committee has been investigating for weeks the activities of industrialists, and is it not true that the General Motors officials are to appear here on February 8 before that committee?

Mr. CONNERY. That may be true; but the gentleman's resolution did not speak about the General Motors or anything else concerning the activities of the management. It referred only to the workers in the automobile industry, and the committee felt that a favorable report would put the Secretary of Labor in a partisan position.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did not the gentleman think I had a right to rely upon the presumption that the Senate committee would get the information?

Mr. CONNERY. No. I think this House should stand on its own feet without regard to the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 96, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that there may be 10 hours' general debate, confined to the bill, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 96, and, pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that there be 10 hours' general debate upon the resolution, to be confined to the resolution, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to do so, I simply want to say that the chairman has been very courteous in arranging for a division of time. The minority asked for a longer time for general debate, but that request not being granted, of course, I am perfectly agreeable to the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from North Carolina, and am willing to withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in order to ask a question, I understood from the statement made by the majority leader yesterday that it is the intention to conclude this debate before the House adjourns tomorrow night, and then consideration of the resolution will be resumed on next Tuesday, but it will not come up on Monday?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. I think the House ought to know that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I would like to state, in response to the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] about the minority desiring further time, he and I do not have the same understanding about that. I suggested 8 hours. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggested 10 hours, and we consented to his suggestion. I understood it was perfectly satisfactory and that was all the time they wanted. That is my understanding.

Mr. TREADWAY. Let me add this one statement, Mr. Speaker: There is no intention of reducing the 10 hours' time by adjourning earlier tomorrow night before the completion of the 10 hours' debate?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, we hope to get through tomorrow night. We can run until midnight, as far as I am concerned, if it is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 96, with Mr. MEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the resolution will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 hour, or as much of that time as may be necessary to complete my statement.

Mr. Chairman, nearly 3 years ago I introduced in this body the reciprocal-tariff bill sponsored by the Roosevelt administration. That bill was passed by the House, and finally became law on June 12, 1934. The immediate purpose of that law was the expansion or recovery of foreign markets for the products of United States industry and agriculture. Naturally, this carried with it the implication that we would in turn reduce some barriers in order to increase trade in both directions. The increase in foreign trade was one of the means by which the administration has raised the standard of living, has increased employment, and has expanded the general purchasing power.

It will be remembered that at the time this bill was originally introduced, world trade had declined with striking rapidity, and the foreign trade of the United States had decreased even more rapidly than that of the other principal commercial countries of the world, or from a share of about 14 to less than 10 percent of the world trade. Total trade of the United States declined from more than $9,500,000,000 to less than $3,000,000,000 in 1932, or a decrease of about 70 percent.

So that evidences ample reason why it was necessary that something should be done with respect to restoration of our foreign trade, in order that recovery might be brought about.

I summarized the objectives of the original measure on March 23, 1934, as follows:

1. To round out the recovery program. This act merely gives the President the authority in foreign trade which the Congress had already vested in him in domestic commerce and trade. The recovery program cannot be fully effective without the execution of the authority granted to the President in the Trade Agreements Act.

2. To reopen the markets of the world to the products of American farms and factories, or otherwise face the prospect of adopting as permanent the policy of curtailing acreage and of reducing manufacturing capacity in many of our most efficient industries.

3. To exchange the surpluses which we have built up for surpluses which other countries have accumulated of commmodities which we do not produce in sufficient quantity to keep our industries going. Until channels of trade are developed so that these surpluses can move, normal recovery in America cannot take place.

4. To plan our commerce and industry so as to direct our labor and resources into the most profitable channels conducive to American standards of living and efficient and effective production.

5. To provide for the intelligent and enlightened application of the protective principle whereby the maximum opportunity of employment and production may be assured to our industries, large and small alike, as well as to agriculture.

In that connection I would like to read for the information of the House and for the edification of my friends on the minority side a statement contained in the Christian Science Monitor under date of January 13, 1937, and it should be good authority:

Farm report shows profit for first time in 12 years.
Farmers get more, pay less.
Price advance for agricultural products aids its victory. Two-point margin is established. Current farm prices highest since 1930.

Does that substantiate the contention of the opponents of this bill, that there has been nothing taking place under this administration which has been helpful to agriculture?

WASHINGTON, January 30.—For the first time since November 1925 the prices farmers receive have risen above the prices farmers pay. The increase, announced by the Department of Agriculture, was recorded for the month ending January 15. That date, therefore, becomes a turning point in post-depression history.

That should be very interesting to those who are interested in the welfare of agriculture.

For 4 years the Roosevelt administration has avowedly been striving toward this goal. Many and many a time, President Roosevelt has described in public speeches and at his press conference the narrowing gap between the two curves; the ascending curve of farm income, the sometimes descending curve of farm obligations.

Actually, the ascending curve of farm income has taken on a sensational spurt in the last 2 months, and passed an also rising curve of prices for the things farmers have to buy. The general index of prices paid by farmers stood at 128 in mid-January, the same as in December and six points above a year ago.

That shows the condition of the farmer under reciprocity as well as under other policies.

6. To provide for mitigation of those irritating restrictions contained in the Hawley-Smoot-Grundy Tariff Act which have antagonized the rest of the world to our serious injury.

7. To support the President in the only effective method for meeting the current international trade situation. Almost all of the nations of the earth have granted their executives authority similar to that granted the Executive of the United States. Only through reciprocity agreements can America participate in the commercial negotiations for the benefit of American agriculture and industry.

8. To rejuvenate world trade which will increase the purchasing power of foreign countries as well as our own people and thereby provide greater opportunity for the sale of American agricultural and industrial products.

For the most part these objectives are as sound today as they were when first propounded, and I recommend them for your consideration, in connection with the extension of the act.

As the President pointed out in his message to the Congress of March 2, 1934, in asking for authority to negotiate trade agreements, the loss of trade meant idle hands, still machinery, ships tied up to their docks, despairing farm households and hungry industrial families. I add that we were going through the worst epidemic of bank failures the country had ever known. Happily, these conditions have been greatly improved. We have seen our banking institutions placed on a sound and substantial foundation. We note that the prices of agricultural commodities have steadily increased and that agriculture is practically on a parity basis with other industries.

We have seen our industries resume production of the articles and commodities to which our own people and the people of the world have been accustomed. We have witnessed a steadily mounting increase in the purchasing power of the people through increased employment month by month and year by year.

The total national income of the United States has increased from $39,545,000,000 in 1932 to $60,000,000,000 in 1936. Gross farm income increased from $5,337,000,000 in 1932 to $9,530,000,000 in 1936. The foreign trade of the United States has increased from $2,934,000,000 to $4,872,000,000 between the respective years. With these notable gains in all phases of our economic system it should not be concluded that the task has been completed. In spite of the considerable improvement from the low levels of the depression, foreign trade lags behind general recovery.

This lack of complete recovery in foreign trade is not at all strange. The President realized that complete restoration of foreign trade would be a time-consuming procedure because so much ground was lost during the depths of the depression. He spoke the language of a prophet when he commented upon the procedure which he proposed to follow, with the authorization of the power granted in the act. He then said in part:

I would emphasize that quick results are not to be expected. The successful building of trade without injury to American producers depends upon a cautious and gradual evolution of plans.

Notice how cautious he proposed to be:

We must depend upon a cautious and gradual evolution of the plan.

The charge cannot be substantiated that there has been reckless or undue haste. The President said in the beginning that we must depend upon cautious procedure in order that American agriculture and American industry might be properly safeguarded.

The disposition of other countries to grant an improved place to American products should be carefully sounded and considered; upon the attitude of each must somewhat depend our future course of action. With countries which are unwilling to abandon purely restrictive national programs, or to make concessions toward the reestablishment of international trade, no headway will be possible.

In other words, with those nations which are not willing to lower their tariff walls and restrictions, it would be impossible and a useless waste of time to endeavor to negotiate trade agreements.

The exercise of the authority which I propose must be carefully weighed in the light of the latest information so as to give assurance that no sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed. * * *

Inasmuch as there is considerable recovery ground to be regained, the mechanism or procedure under which we have accomplished so much ought to be continued without interruption. In asking the House to consider the extension of the Trade Agreements Act there is no question as to whether or not this should be done; rather I take it that this is the occasion to give an accounting of the past 2½ years of the program under the act. In this connection I wish to call your attention to the fact that a considerable part of the emergency legislation for overcoming the worst economic depression this country has ever experienced has been extended during the present session of Congress. I refer to the extension of such acts as the Recontruction Finance Corporation, strictly a domestic measure, and the extension of the Gold Devaluation Act on the international side. In a recent letter to me regarding the extension of the Trade Agreements Act the President noted that the present act expires on June 12, 1937, and indicated, in a general way, the progress which had been made under the authority granted to him on June 12, 1934, as follows:

Through the exercise of that authority, foreign trade agreements have been concluded with 15 nations. Improved opportunities for our trade have been secured in such important markets as those of Canada, Cuba, Brazil, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland, and Sweden. Through our policy of demanding and granting equality of treatment we have obtained removal of discriminations where they existed in the trade-agreement countries and guaranties of equal treatment in the future. At the same time our policy has served to reduce discriminatory practices in many other countries. * * *

In other words, it has been a good example, a splendid lesson, which other countries have emulated. I refer to the things we have accomplished in the case of those nations with which we have negotiated trade agreements.

Although the President pointed out in that letter that substantial and gratifying results had been accomplished by the trade-agreements program, he stated that the task was by no means complete. He stressed that emergency conditions still existed in the field of foreign trade, that barriers operating against our trade were still excessive in other countries, and that the reduction of such barriers continued to be an essential requirement for "full and balanced economic recovery." That is what we now desire most. The extension of this law will be an important step in that direction.

There is one phase of this measure which was not stressed at the time the bill was originally passed. The Secretary of State, who has a great responsibility in carrying on peaceful relations with the world emphasized this phase of the program before our committee.

I have recently received, and I suppose each Member of the House received, a letter from the National Peace Conference, signed by 1,000 leaders throughout the country, strongly recommending that the Trade Agreements Act be extended.

The President in his recent letter to me touched upon the relationship of the program to world peace in the following language:

The development of liberalized trade practices has another effect which transcends in importance even the material benefits conferred by trade improvement. Economic strife, resulting from inordinate or discriminatory trade barriers, is one of the most fruitful sources of political animosity and military conflict. A policy designed to reduce excessive trade barriers and to establish equality of trade rights is a powerful instrument of economic appeasement and stability. It thus serves to strengthen the foundations of world peace.

SECTION 11—RESULTS OF THE PROGRAM

No one claims that all trade gains between the United States and foreign countries in the last 2 years have been the result of trade agreements; other phases of the recovery program of the Roosevelt administration have contributed to these gains. Some of it has undoubtedly been brought about as a result of the trade-agreements program. I desire to submit some figures on trade between the United States and the countries with which agreements have been negotiated, but I do not intend to go into any considerable detail in my remarks. Anyone wishing details may obtain them from the Departments of State, Commerce, Agriculture, and the Tariff Commission. Many details may also be found in the testimony of the hearings before the committee and in the committee report.

If you are not satisfied with the merits of the proposed legislation extending the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, but desire full information and will take the time, read the hearings before our committee carefully and then read the majority committee report, and I think you will then be fully satisfied that there is every reason why this proposed bill should be enacted.

I wish to comment briefly on the trade with Cuba, because this agreement has been in effect the longest period—over 2½ years. There have been consistent gains in the trade between Cuba and the United States since the agreement went into effect. From September 1933 through August 1934 the preagreement year, exports to that country were $35,452,000. During the first agreement year, September 1934 through August 1935, exports to Cuba from the United States had increased to $56,296,000, and in the second agreement year, September 1935 through August 1936, this had increased to $64,196,000. Our opponents appear unmindful of the substantial increase in exports to Cuba since the agreement went into effect, but have taken every occasion to publicize the increases in imports from Cuba which have necessarily accompanied our increase in exports to Cuba. The purpose of the program was to increase trade, and it is axiomatic that to accomplish an increase in exports we must expect some increase in imports, too.

In other words, in the case of those countries with which we have negotiated trade agreements there has been a stimulation, an increase, of both exports and imports to a larger degree than is the case with those countries with which we have not negotiated trade agreements. It should not be forgotten, furthermore, that there have always been large importations of sugar.

Our opponents complain in the minority report, and so expressed themselves in the hearings, that the increase in imports was larger than the increase in exports. That is a matter of no serious consequence, so we increase our imports of those things which we lack—sugar, rubber, and things that are needed by our citizens in their domestic and industrial life which they can get only through importation. The increase in imports has been chiefly in coffee, rubber, sugar, and those things, none of which we produce in sufficient quantities to meet the demands of the American people.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. KERR. An increase of exports enables this country to control the balance of trade. It would not be so if the imports exceeded the exports, would it?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is true, of course. In order for any trade to be mutually profitable, beneficial, and helpful, its benefits must extend in both directions. A treaty which benefited but one of the parties to the transaction and was injurious to the other should not, of course, be consummated. I take it that we all realize that those who have been charged with the administration of this law—the President of the United States, the Secretary of State with his intelligent staff, Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, the Tariff Commission, the Treasury Department, all taking a part in the consideration and negotiation of these trade agreements—have sufficient patriotism, sufficient intelligence, and sufficient detailed facts and information to take care of the interests of the people of the United States. No one can state that they have not done this and support his statement by facts.

Furthermore, it should not be forgotten that there have always been large importations of sugar; and apparently no one appeared before our committee contending that the sugar interests of this country had been injured by this program, that they had suffered any injury. They would, of course, have appeared before our committee and made protests had they been injured; but no one representing the sugar interests of the country appeared to offer a word, a line, or a sentence of testimony that they had been injured in any way by these reciprocal trade agreements and by the large importations of sugar which have come into this country to supply the needs of American domestic consumption.

There have always been large importations of sugar and other tropical products from Cuba, because we cannot, under any reasonable circumstances, produce enough for our own consumption. The reduction in the sugar duty was related to the Jones-Costigan Act, under which domestic producers have apparently prospered. It is worth noting that no one representing the sugar producers appeared before the committee protesting against the extension of this act.

Exports to Canada for the first agreement year increased by about $50,000,000. This increase includes agricultural products—pork, lard, fruits—as well as products of industry. Here, too, we have heard much of the increase in imports. The air has been filled with exaggerations, but there is no positive evidence of serious injury to domestic agriculture and industry.

The studies which have been made show that the increases in trade of commodities on which tariff concessions have been granted have been greater than on nonconcession items.

And it is to be remembered that in the agreements thus far negotiated are some of the most important customers of the United States, as well as some of the most important suppliers of raw materials necessary for our domestic industries. Canada occupies first place as a supplier and is second only to the United Kingdom as a market for our products.

A number of witnesses before the committee represented specialized branches of agriculture. I was very much interested in some of their contentions regarding the effect of agreements on specific agricultural products. A careful examination of the facts, however, fails to disclose that trade agreements have substantially injured any particular branch of agriculture or industry. The testimony before the committee clearly shows that witnesses—and the number appearing against the extension of the act was surprisingly small—were more concerned over what might happen in the future to certain branches of agriculture.

There was no evidence before our committee. Some did appear in opposition to the resolution, but their contention was an apprehension that in the future, peradventure, some injury might be done some legitimate American industry, either agriculture or industry.

The studies which have been made show an increase of trade on those commodities on which tariff concessions have been granted.

There was no complaint whatever that agriculture as a whole had been injured. On the other hand, the evidence tended to show conclusively that agriculture as a whole had been greatly benefited; but certain branches claimed not so much that any damage or injury had come to them as an apprehension that in the future perhaps some serious injury might be done. That was the main contention of those who opposed the reciprocity program and who asked for certain amendments to the resolution.

A careful examination of the facts, however, fails to disclose that the trade agreements have substantially injured any particular branch of American agriculture or industry. On the other hand, it was generally admitted that every branch of agriculture was selling more produce today, at better prices and under better economic conditions, than before the trade-agreement program was initiated.

Concessions have been obtained on agricultural products in every one of the 15 trade agreements thus far concluded. For example, the report of the committee shows that concessions on pork products have been obtained in nine of the agreements.

In other words, nine countries have lowered their tariff walls against pork, which is, of course, one of our export products, as everyone should know. Concessions of importance have been received on scores of other agricultural products, such as citrus fruits, apples and pears, potatoes, tomatoes, wheat and wheat flour, rice, canned fruits and vegetables, tobacco, and other agricultural products. We have heard a lot about alleged injury which Florida vegetable growers had suffered as a result of the Cuban agreement. On the other hand, one opposition witness stated:

> There has also been the beneficial effect on Florida vegetables and California citrus fruits.

The opponents do not seem to get together.

An examination of the trade with the 15 countries with which agreements have been concluded reveals that concessions have been obtained on farm products representing nearly two-thirds of our normal exports to these countries. About one-third of our total farm exports to these countries has received the benefits of tariff reduction, ranging from nominal decreases up to 50 and 60 percent, and in a few instances resulting in complete removal of duties, liberalization of import quotas, and other barriers, all of which make it easier to enter those markets than it was before. The other third consists of products for which we have obtained bindings of existing free entry or favorable treatment against increases in rates.

Agricultural exports to a number of agreement countries have expanded as a direct result of such concessions. There have been striking increases in shipments for a wide range of agricultural products to agreement countries on which concessions have been obtained, including fruits and vegetables, pork products and lard, and on various grains and grain products.

The witnesses in opposition did not seem to be in accord, but stated that the producers of Florida vegetables had been benefited rather than injured by this reciprocal trade agreement program. The opposition does not seem to be together on this subject.

In some instances the increases in exports have taken place in spite of marked shortages of supplies resulting from the droughts of 1934 and 1936.

As a result of the droughts in 1934 and 1935, in some lines of agriculture there was not the normal surplus that usually occurs; therefore there was not the amount of exports there would have been had production been normal. In some instances farmers have not been able to take full advantage of all of the concessions obtained for their benefit. When agricultural conditions return to normal these potential benefits may be taken advantage of by American agriculture.

Studies show that, in general, the items on which reductions in duty have been obtained are leading the way for recovery of foreign trade. Of course, opponents can and will find exceptions to this statement. They will quote the increases in imports of agricultural products; they do not draw any distinction between raw materials, such as crude rubber, raw silk, cocoa beans, and other products not produced in the United States and which enter free of duty, and competitive items.

There have been large increases in the imports of those commodities not produced in the United States, but of which we are consumers and therefore necessary to maintain a proper standard of living for the American people.

Some have gone so far in their efforts to mislead as to classify lumber, paper, and pulpwood as agricultural products. In their generated fears for agriculture, opponents of expanded foreign trade do not mention that 40 to 50 percent of such imports are noncompetitive with domestic agriculture. Many of the largest items of imports of raw materials are responsible for keeping our industrial machinery in operation and give employment to many American workers. The whole truth ought to be told about the so-called agricultural imports. The imports of raw materials in greater quantities is one of the best evidences that our industries are getting back to normal—that the depression has been licked.

They classify lumber and paper, for instance, as agricultural commodities, showing to what desperation the opponents of this bill were driven in order to have a base upon which to sustain their claims.

When the trade-agreements bill was originally introduced into Congress the tactics of the opposition were to oppose it with a campaign of fear. During the hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means we heard "the gospel of fear and death." This has been their text, their sermon, and their song since the program got under way.

They tried to alarm some by saying what might perhaps be the future effect of this legislation, not what had been done or what had taken place up to this time.

The opponents of the trade-agreements measure have endeavored to convince the people that placing such power in the hands of the President would mean the destruction of our industries. They continue to make outrageous charges that the Roosevelt administration is going to "destroy", "cut down", "ruin", "sacrifice", "slaughter", "place American industry on the auction block."

There has been a great advance in farm prices, and I say every line of agriculture, as well as industry. We have bettered the condition of the farmer in every way, which completely refutes that argument.

The minority report in 1934 bristled with such expressions. The Washington representatives of certain industries, in order to hold their jobs and make themselves appear more important, have been truly "dispensers of discord." They thrive on creating fear; they perpetuate themselves by such tactics.

I endeavored in the recent hearing before our committee to pin these calamity howlers down to specific instances in which American industry or agriculture had been ruined or sacrificed. For the most part, this "drummed-up" opposition to the program dodged my questions; when asked to specify instances of lower production and prices resulting from the trade-agreements program, our critics had to fall back on the fear of what "might happen in the future."

In every instance they have fallen back to what might possibly take place in the future.

Again they filled the road with ghosts. "Wolf! Wolf!" continues to be their cry. However, they had to admit that during the period in which the program had been in operation conditions in practically every phase of our economic structure had greatly improved.

No one would deny the fact that every phase of both agriculture and industry have materially and substantially improved.

All of the witnesses coming before the committee, with possibly one exception, declared in favor of trade agreements through bargaining tariffs, but many had some favorite amendment which, if adopted, would practically kill the measure. They favored reciprocity in theory, but desired to sabotage it in practice. The minority report this year is not opposed to "reciprocity", so it states. This seems slightly different from their report in 1934, which referred to going after foreign trade as "on a wild goose chase."

I wish now to consider briefly some of the proposed amendments. The elimination of the unconditional most-favored clause was suggested by a number of witnesses. I believe, however, the minority report now favors equality of treatment; at least, they leave that impression.

At this point I should like to quote from two reports. Here is what the minority said in the report of 1934:

> Admitting our foreign trade has declined sharply, as has the rest of the world, should we scuttle our domestic program by a wild-goose chase in search of markets which do not exist?

They say they are in favor of reciprocity. Why are they in favor of reciprocity if no foreign market exists? I should like to have that explained. They say they are in favor of some kind of reciprocity, but not the kind we propose. What foundation is there for taking that position now if no foreign markets exist?

In the last minority report on this bill it is stated:

> In opposing the joint resolution, we wish it to be distinctly understood that we are in no way criticizing the doctrine of genuine reciprocity with foreign nations. The Republican Party has actively espoused this policy in previous measures, notably the McKinley tariff of 1890 and the Dingley tariff of 1897. * * * We yield to none in our earnest desire to expand the foreign trade of the United States, whether by reciprocity or otherwise.

They yield to no one in their desires to expand it, but how can they expand it if no foreign markets exist and we are on a wild-goose chase for markets which do not exist? I should be glad if my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, would explain this apparent inconsistency when he makes his brilliant statement, which he will doubtlessly make later. This is not clear in my mind.

THE UNCONDITIONAL MOST-FAVORED-NATION CLAUSE

The unconditional most-favored-nation clause is a well-recognized international legal principle which represents the absence of discrimination in the commercial relations of countries. This clause is better known as the equality-of-treatment principle. It means simply that when reductions of duty are made in a trade agreement with the principal or a main supplier of an imported product, such reductions are extended to all other nondiscriminating countries. This extension on reduction in trade barriers is a reciprocal and mutually beneficial procedure. It is not a one-sided affair, as has been claimed by opponents of the trade-agreements program. As a matter of fact, in their testimony before the committee both Secretary of State Hull and Assistant Secretary of State Sayre pointed out that the unconditional most-favored-nation policy as applied to imports has involved the generalization by the United States of concessions affecting roughly $30,000,000 worth of trade. As applied to exports, they stated that this principle has safeguarded and benefited at least $265,000,000 worth of trade, a ratio of slightly less than 9 to 1 in favor of the United States. That is a point worth emphasizing. It would be a short-sighted policy to jeopardize so much of our trade by the elimination of this principle.

Much has been said in the minority report that when we negotiate a trade agreement with one country the benefits accorded that country are accorded to all countries, but that is not so unless the other countries do not discriminate against us. The benefits extended to other nations, other than the nations with which the reciprocal trade agreement is made, are not for the benefit of nations which discriminate against us.

It is through this arrangement that removal of restrictions in trade agreements is safeguarded against later preferential treatment given to third parties. This principle is not strange to American commerce. It has long been the commercial practice of the United States, as well as of other countries. Equality of treatment is a common-sense rule of conduct between individuals as well as between nations. In fact, this principle is the foundation of the administration of justice.

It has been pointed out time and again that this plan was first adopted by the Republicans, following enactment of the Tariff Act of 1922, and was formally announced by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who was then Secretary of State, as the American policy. We have given the Republicans credit for this rule of commerce between nations, but now when the Democrats improve upon the principle our friends seriously object to their own plan. Those opposed to the trade agreements program, administered under the principle of equality, do not object when it is applied to increased rates of duty by the United States. Last year, when the Tariff Commission made an investigation of certain cotton textile goods and the President increased the rates of duty as a result of such investigation, I did not hear our good friend, TREADWAY, object because the increased rates applied to the imports of all countries. This was the equality-of-treatment principle in the Tariff Act of 1930. In that instance Japan was the principal supplier of the particular kind of cotton cloth. However, similar imports in some quantities were being received from the United Kingdom and from Switzerland. In the flexible provisions the costs of production are found for the chief supplying country, but changes upward or downward apply to all countries alike. Of course, the opposition saw that most of the rates of duty were increased while they were in power. The principle was made to work in their political favor, and they, therefore, did not object.

It was the American policy when adopted by the Republicans, but it is a ruinous foreign policy to the American people when we follow their example.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. When a trade agreement is entered into, does the State Department then determine and designate the nondiscriminating nations which may participate on the same basis, or how is that matter determined?

Mr. DOUGHTON. As I understand it, when they negotiate a trade agreement with a foreign country we do that only on such commodities as that country is the chief source of supply. That takes care to a large extent of the other countries, because we negotiate trade agreements with countries which are the chief suppliers and do not negotiate the treaties in sufficient amounts to jeopardize American agriculture or American industry. As I understand it, it automatically applies to other countries which do not discriminate against us.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Under the most-favored-nation clause in the tariff agreement, when we let down the bars to one nation in a trade agreement, what about the other nations that come in under the plan or under the most-favored-nation clause? Do they not come in and secure certain benefits without giving us any equivalent or any consideration?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have just explained that. We do not negotiate trade agreements with any nation that is not the chief supplier of the commodity; but, of course, that same agreement, whatever it is, is applicable to other countries which do not discriminate against us.

If they have discriminatory laws against us and do not extend to us the same benefits that they accord other nations then, of course, it does not apply to them.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It would be hard to pick out some commodity that was just supplied by one nation. For instance, take cattle. When we open our markets to cattle from one nation, we let them in from Mexico and Canada also.

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; not at all.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Well, take some other illustration, using some other product produced in a half dozen nations. If we make a favorable agreement with one nation, what is to prevent the other nation that gives us no consideration at all from coming in under that agreement?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am very sorry I am unable to make the gentleman from Idaho understand me.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from California. Perhaps the gentleman can throw a little more light on the subject for the gentleman from Idaho than I have been able to do.

Mr. BUCK. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it is not a fact that the President, by Executive proclamation, ascertains and declares what countries, if any, are discriminating against the products of the United States; and this having been established by proclamation, thereafter any reduction of duties extends to all other nations with which we have the most-favored-nation agreement?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is a correct statement, and the one which I endeavored to make plain to the gentleman from Idaho. The gentleman from California has amplified my statement with respect to the President's issuing an Executive proclamation. Of course, the President is assisted by the Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of State, the Tariff Commission, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Treasury Department, the Secretary of Agriculture, and they avail themselves of all the information possible, especially whatever information any one department has special knowledge of, and, of course, the President ascertains all the facts before these trade agreements are finally negotiated.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The point of my question is whether the provisions of the most-favored-nation clause are in operation under these trade agreements.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In some cases they are and in some they are not; and as I have just endeavored to explain as best I could, they are in operation with respect to those nations that do not discriminate against us.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In the early part of the hearings we heard a lot of clamor about the consideration given to nonagreement countries as a result of the trade agreements with other countries, or the so-called equality treatment; but is it not true that after it was disclosed that in the trade with the nonagreement countries we imported substantially $30,000,000 annually from them, while in the same period we exported $265,000,000, we did not hear much complaint about that phase of the matter?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is a correct statement. The imports from those nations with which we had not negotiated trade agreements were so negligible in these special commodities as not to be worthy of consideration. There has been no one claiming—and there was no evidence before our committee, I will say to my friend from Idaho—that any serious injury had been suffered by any American industry from the most-favored-nation clause.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. I will say to the gentleman from Idaho, with respect to the favored-nations clause, that where they all participate they are governed by the quota, as in the case of Canadian cattle. In the filling of the quota of 156,000 cattle, Mexico participated with Canada in filling the quota; but when the 156,000 mark was reached, then, of course, the duty went back to the normal rate.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from North Carolina will yield there, it might be well to say that it took 10 months of the year to reach the 156,000 cattle quota.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; in fact, most of the cattle that came into the United States were cattle desired by the American cattle raisers themselves on account of the drought and the shortage of cattle. As the gentleman knows, thousands and hundreds of thousands of cattle were slaughtered as a result of the 1934 drought and the cattlemen in the West wanted to restock their farms and, of course, they needed more cattle.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Is it not a fact also that in order to encourage this importation from Canada and Mexico we reduced the tariff from 3 cents to 2 cents?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. To the extent of 156,000 cattle; and I may say that the 156,000 cattle figured out to be about three-fourths of 1 percent of the domestic slaughter. The more important matter in connection with the 156,000 cattle, from the viewpoint of the trading country, or with reference to Canada, for instance, is that it amounts to some 15 percent of their production, but, so far as domestic slaughter is concerned, it is about three-fourths of 1 percent.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. And is it not true in that same connection that during the calendar year of 1936, under the Canadian reciprocity agreement, there were three times as many cattle imported from both Canada and Mexico as there were during the calendar year 1935?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have not the exact figures, but it would be very easy to get the figures with respect to that comparison.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But the fact remains it took 10 months of the calendar year 1936 to get the 156,000 cattle into this country, and the 156,000 cattle imported amounted to three-fourths of 1 percent of the domestic slaughter.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. But does not the fact remain that the tariff has been reduced 1 cent a pound on cattle?

Mr. DOUGHTON. On a certain class of cattle.

Mr. FULLER. Not on Mexican cattle.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. It is interesting to observe that it was not prime cattle that were brought in. It was the lower grades, indicating that they were needed by the farmers because of the impairment of their herds due to the depression.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It was reported that the market in Portland was crowded with prime fat Canadian cattle, and the same is true of Spokane; that is two industrial centers in which it is reported that those fat cattle were crowding the market. I do not know what happened in Mexico, but I do know what happened in the West.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEVER. May I say that there was no tariff reduction on cattle weighing between 175 pounds and 700 pounds.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is right.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. On cattle weighing more than that there was a reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents.

Mr. FORD of California. It was the duty on prime cattle that dropped. There was a great need for a large volume of prime cattle due to the depression.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The cattle market fluctuated from week to week and from day to day as much as 2 or 3 cents.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me that the comparison should be made during the time of comparable prices. Of course, no one is going to import cattle or hogs or any other commodity into a 2- or 3-cent market. If you are going to compare the import charges, you should go back to the time when the prices were about the same. I am wondering if the gentleman has any comparison in the imports last year, and the imports from years before, when the prices of cattle or commodities were about the same as last year.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know that I have any statistics, but I can get them and put them into the RECORD.

Mr. JONES. I think that would be a very good thing to consider, and that is the only fair way to consider it. Of course you can kick tariff walls down completely on, say, hogs, and you would have no imports on $2.75 hogs, which we had in 1932 and 1933. On the other hand, if the price of the commodity gets up then naturally there will be some importations, so it seems to me that the discussion should be based on periods of comparable price structure.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. The highest price ever received in America for cattle outside of during the World War was in 1929, and they imported from Canada that year three times as much as they did last year.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes. Of course, so far as the importation of Canadian cattle is concerned, people get alarmed about it; but when you analyze it and compare it, it is negligible.

Mr. JONES. The only way to stop importations entirely is either to have an embargo or to run the price structure down to nothing, and if imports are stopped by running down the price level, the domestic producer is ruined as well. No one in this country wants to run prices down below a living level in order to stop importations.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We had that experience once, and we know what it is.

Mr. JONES. In negotiating these trade agreements has there been any effort, as shown by the testimony, to sacrifice agricultural products and livestock at the expense of building up our commercial export trade, or what was the testimony on that?

Mr. DOUGHTON. On the other hand, all of the testimony is exactly to the contrary. The interest of agriculture has been carefully safeguarded at every turn in the negotiations.

Mr. JONES. That, it seems to me, is the real point to be considered. I do not think that concessions should be made that would unfairly deal with agriculture or with livestock in negotiating a trade agreement; but certainly, going back to the other point—and I have had occasion to go over these figures—at previous times, when prices were anything like those of last year, our imports of all those commodities were much greater than they were last year.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. MASON. Does the gentleman from North Carolina maintain that the increased price of cattle and the betterment in the position of the farmer during the last year or two is the direct result of the reciprocal-trade treaties?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No. It is the result in part, and largely the result of the policies of this administration. Of course, the gentleman will admit that if the opposite party were in power and conditions had been when they came in as they were when we came in, and the wonderful change had come about, his party would take the credit for the advance and the betterment of business conditions, agricultural and industrial.

Mr. MASON. One more question. In following that up, there was a question about no world market to go after in 1934.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. MASON. Our conditions here, however, improved tremendously in the last 2 years for some reason.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. MASON. Perhaps now there are world markets to go after that were not there in 1934.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MASON. And perhaps that is the reason that we may want to push our world trade.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; and perhaps the world might possibly come to an end tomorrow, but we hope it will not. You can prove anything by perhapses. Perhapses will not get you anywhere.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Is it not a fact that one of the largest contributing causes to the advance in these cattle prices during the last 2 years was the drought and the killing program which was put on by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not think so at all. How does the gentleman account for the advance in every other line?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Admitting that prices are very fair today to the cattlemen, is it not likely that if American production of cattle returns to normal, under the present Canadian agreement you will probably see a big reduction in the price of cattle?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not on the class of cattle provided for and with the limitation as to the number that can be imported. I do not think the gentleman should have the least fear.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Did the testimony on the treaties negotiated for dairy products indicate that only such dairy products were to be imported from foreign countries as were produced under the same sanitary conditions as our products are produced in our country?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I think there was contention by one witness who appeared in the interest of the cheese industry or some branch of the dairy business, that perhaps the sanitary regulations in other countries were not as rigid as they should be. He offered no evidence. Of course, he had no facts and he did not know.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is it not a fact that none of the other countries produce their dairy products under sanitary conditions such as prevail in the United States?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know, and I do not believe the gentleman does, or anybody else.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. Is it not a fact after February 1929, before the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff, the highest that has ever been, finished beef steers in Chicago were selling for $11.92 per hundred, whereas after the high tariff that the gentleman speaks of had been in force for about 2 years those same steers on that same market brought $4.80 per hundred?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes. It practically broke every cattleman in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 1 hour.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed to the conclusion of his remarks, or use such further time as may be necessary for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

CHARGE OF STAR-CHAMBER PROCEEDINGS

Mr. DOUGHTON. No reference to trade agreements by the opposition is complete without mentioning the so-called star-chamber proceedings. Here again the present method of negotiating trade agreements is not dissimilar to the procedure followed by the United States Tariff Commission and other quasi-judicial bodies, such as the Federal Trade Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission, and other agencies discharging the functions entrusted to them by Congress. It is essential to bear in mind that the power granted in the Trade Agreements Act are strictly circumscribed by the Congress.

We found out to the best of our ability, by questioning the witnesses before the committee, that all interested parties have had an opportunity to be heard under the present method of tariff adjustment, just as they have in congressional or Presidential tariff making under the flexible tariff provisions. As pointed out above, the present procedure is very similar to that under the flexible provisions. Once the public hearing is over no one is supposed to know what action the Tariff Commission has recommended to the President or what action the President will take until the announcement is made to the public. Why have not the Republicans made the charge of secrecy in the operation of this Republican measure?

It might be noted that those engaged in the negotiation of trade agreements are quite as competent, and have the interest of the country as much at heart, as those making investigations under the flexible provisions of the tariff act. As a matter of fact, some of the same personnel is involved in both procedures. Furthermore, they are just as capable of representing the interests of the United States as are the negotiators of foreign countries in representing the interests of their nationals. Certainly they have the interest of the country as much at heart as the tariff lobbyists, who have been parasites of the Republican Party for so many years.

Of course, in negotiating trade agreements it is not possible to take the American producers or their Washington representatives into actual negotiations. The process of discussion over concessions and the gradual shaping of agreements, however, is not greatly different from the congressional practice, where much of the detail is worked out in committees or finally settled in conferences between Members of the House and Senate. Such conferences are held in the absence of "interested parties."

I do not see why anyone should claim that, with all these agencies of the Government taking part—the State Department, the Department of Commerce, those who belong to the Tariff Commission, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture is represented in these negotiations and makes a very careful study of every trade agreement that is proposed which in any way affects or relates to agriculture. Mr. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, is a highly intelligent man. No one can claim that he sells the interests of agriculture down the creek, or that he is not at all times trying to safeguard and protect American agriculture. Of course, in legislative matters you have to consider all the interests involved; the welfare of all the people, rather than just what might peculiarly affect one special section or one small industry at one particular time. We legislate too much on that basis. In my judgment, one of our greatest dangers is group control or the endeavors of certain groups to get certain special benefits from the Government without any regard whatever as to whether it is fair and just to other industries or other sections of the country. That is one of the greatest difficulties with which we are beset in matters of legislation, in my opinion.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The Denver stockyards are the largest west of Kansas City. We also have the largest sheep market in the world at our Denver yards. There has been considerable apprehension expressed by our people about the proposed Argentine treaty, lest the foot-and-mouth disease may come in. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether there is any relaxation in the quarantine laws or the sanitary regulations in these treaties?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, certainly not; certainly not. The opponents say, "But, oh, we have a chance when it goes back to the floor." I know of a number of instances in past tariff legislation where those affected did not have a chance to do anything about it after the conference committee had decided on the rates.

The late Thomas Walker Page, an outstanding tariff authority, as Chairman of the Committee for Reciprocity Information, said recently in a public statement, and his opinion has considerable weight:

> In the preparation of these trade agreements there has been less secrecy and there has been more opportunity for interested parties to present their views than there has been in any tariff revision for more than 100 years.

SENATE RATIFICATION

The constitutionality of the act is involved in the question of Senate or congressional ratification. I shall pass over this phase of the agreements and leave it to lawyers to argue and the courts to settle. Some witnesses before the committee recommended that trade agreements should be ratified by the Senate.

We all know how impractical that would be and how impossible it would be to accomplish anything. You might just as well leave the law as it is.

On questioning them, it was generally found that they were in truth interested in killing the program. The hearings of the committee give full and complete details as to the failures of reciprocity when dependent upon congressional ratification.

Trade agreements ought to be worked out through long and careful consideration by technical and other experts who are able to devote their time to the problem. In spite of the flattering compliments paid to us during the committee hearings by representatives of certain interests, you and I know that we do not have time to consider the minute details of tariff adjustment of this nature. The careful way in which the 15 agreements already negotiated have been worked out, as testified by those who are in a position to know, and the results of such agreements, fully warrant the continuance of the present procedure.

The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should not be primarily a partisan issue. It has been pointed out from time to time that outstanding Republicans have supported the program. I should like to refer to the expressions of a few of these.

First. Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, of New York. Of course, the opposition will probably say he is an international banker and wants to increase imports so that interest may be received on foreign loans. He said, regarding Secretary Hull's policy:

> It is a wise and sound policy.

He explained:

> I am myself a firm believer in the principle of the protective tariff.

It might be noted that he is the son of former Senator Aldrich, whose name was attached to the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act.

I have already referred to Chairman O'Brien, of the Tariff Commission. He has repeatedly expressed his convictions as to the value of trade agreements. He proposed a plank for the recent and lamented Republican platform favoring them.

He appeared before our committee when this legislation was first enacted and again when this bill was under consideration, and gave unqualified endorsement to it as the best method, under present conditions, with which to deal with the tariff question.

The Honorable William S. Culbertson, former Ambassador to Chile, who has recently written a book on Reciprocity, stated:

> We should therefore support as a measure of sound national policy the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 * * * If I had the time I could demonstrate that all the principles of this measure were first employed in the Republican Tariff Acts of 1890 and 1897 and applied by various Republican Secretaries of State.

It is well known that Mr. Stimson, last Republican Secretary of State, was in favor of the Trade Agreements Act and made a Nation-wide broadcast in its favor. His Under Secretary of State, Mr. William Castle, at various times has publicly complimented the Secretary of State on the program. A number of prominent Republican editorial writers, such as David Lawrence and Walter Lippmann, have repeatedly supported the program. Some of the ablest members of the Republican Party in the other Chamber have supported it.

As Mr. O'Brien pointed out before the Committee on Ways and Means, a number of important Republican papers have continuously supported the trade-agreements program. For example, the New York Herald Tribune of May 4, 1936, in commenting on the French agreement, stated:

> But for all its limitations the Hull reciprocity program remains about the only practical contribution now being made in the world towards the amelioration of trade entanglements, and as such its influence is of greater value than the specific concessions suggest.

The Washington Post for July 19, 1936, stated:

> The program is based upon a sound conception of trade as an exchange of goods. It is, as Mr. Hull says, "essentially economic, created by national necessity, and it has been so treated by more than two-thirds of the American press and by outstanding statesmen, regardless of party."

Another editorial from the Herald Tribune of May 24, 1936, stated:

> With Secretary Hull's desire to increase our foreign trade and to remove as many as possible of the obstacles to a greater flow of trade throughout the world we have always been in sympathy. Where most other trade leaders in the administration have been visionaries or followed false doctrines, Secretary Hull has consistently fought for a sound trade policy.

The Hartford Courant, on October 9, 1936, in the heat of the campaign, said that Republican opposition to the trade-agreements program caused the Kansas City Star, the Omaha World-Herald, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and the Baltimore Sun to express their disappointment in the then Republican Presidential candidate. The Courant said that a result of the program had been—

> The better feeling that has been created within the past few days in Europe as the result of the impetus given to trade by the realignment of currencies and the reduction of tariff barriers of the world by Mr. Hull, the effect of which will not be lost on the pacific-minded farmers of the Northwest.

There are other Republican papers, such as the Boston Herald, which support the program.

There is not any doubt but that that was one of the factors that contributed to the overwhelming defeat of the Republican candidate for President, because that was one of the issues that he accentuated, as well as the spokesman of his party.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I had the honor to represent the old McKinley district at one time, and I was a great admirer of Mr. McKinley. I find in his later speeches he always referred to tariff agreements. He was a great advocate of tariff, but he realized the benefits from it had really reached their very highest point. The last speech I think he made before he was unfortunately shot was in favor of reciprocal tariffs.

Mr. DOUGHTON. My recollection of the great statesman referred to by the gentleman is that one of the last statements he made, as stated by the gentleman, was to the effect that these high barriers of trade between different countries should be lowered; that we should cultivate and establish a more friendly policy in the matter of trade relations with other nations. I think that was greatly to his credit.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CULLEN. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman's statement, but in that connection the late President McKinley sent to the Senate 14 trade agreements.

Mr. DOUGHTON. How many of them were ratified?

Mr. CULLEN. I think all of them were lost, and he refused to send in the fifteenth.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That shows the futility of leaving the ratification of trade agreements to Congress or the Senate. After negotiating those trade agreements, McKinley found they could not be ratified.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman made reference to McKinley's speech at Buffalo. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to read an excerpt from that speech.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will not the gentleman do that in his own time?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; but I should have liked to have gotten it in at this point.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina may be extended until he completes his statement.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the chairman of the committee already has that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. DISNEY. According to Mr. Sibley's testimony before the committee, he announced that he was a very good Republican as well as being president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and he said also that he was the biggest corn farmer in the United States.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; that is what he said, that he was the largest corn farmer in the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. May I quote from his testimony?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Briefly.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Sibley said, answering a question by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] as to whether the droughts of 1934 and 1936 had had the effect of increasing prices, that they had. Then he referred to corn and said he got $1.08 a bushel for it where he got formerly 60 cents; in 1933, 80 cents; and in 1934, 90 cents. He seemed to be in favor of this legislation and the way it has been carried out by this administration.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I wish to indicate other organizations or institutions backing the extension of this act. Mr. Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, appeared before the committee advocating the extension of the Trade Agreements Act. His organization for the past few years has been a strong supporter of the program. I quote from his statement as follows:

> As a reflection of the world-wide approval and influence of the trade-agreements program of the United States, it is further significant that among the specific recommendations made by the Council of the International Chamber of Commerce, in the light of the studies made by the joint committee of the Carnegie Endowment and the international chamber, were the following three recommendations that parallel very closely the underlying principles of the legislation of June 12, 1934:
> The conclusion of bilateral treaties consciously used as an instrument for the reduction of trade barriers.
> The deliberate inclusion in all such treaties of the most-favored-nation clause as a means to realize that purpose.
> The general use of the most-favored-nation clause in its unconditional form, with the possible withholding of the benefits in the case of countries which even after the restoration of more orderly currency conditions would continue to practice discriminatory quotas or foreign-exchange regulations.

In a recent book, the Recovery Problem in the United States, published by the Brookings Institution, we find the following statement regarding the program:

> The trade agreements thus represent a sizeable break in the multitude of trade-diverting and trade-destroying restrictions which arose out of the disorganization produced by the depression. It is, of course, too early to appraise the effects upon the American economic system as a whole. But there can be no doubt that the substantial reductions in trade barriers which are being effected are reopening the channels of international trade. At the same time the reassertion by the United States of the unconditional most-favored-nation principle is laying the foundation for a return to a regime of equal treatment in international commercial relations on the basis of which international trade had in the past attained its greatest and most fruitful development.

The National Lumber Manufacturers Association filed a brief with the committee, in which, among other things, it said:

> An efficient industry may provide a product acceptable and a service satisfactory to its potential foreign customers. But, however efficient, it is helpless to withstand the effects of discriminations. These are imposed by public authority. They may be removed by public authority. There is no practical answer to that problem except through the action of government. I am not seeking to pass judgment on details of policy and administration when I express the opinion that the effort under way by our Government under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act to secure a general restoration of international commerce is not only a good way but the best way, and, I am inclined to think, the only practical way.

Such are samples of the various individuals and business organizations supporting the extension of the Trade Agreements Act, which we have made the order of business.

Finally, I wish to call your attention to the conclusions of the majority members of the committee. First, the policy pursued by our Government, under the Trade Agreements Act, has served to strengthen our influence in establishing and maintaining the conditions of peace. This has been done by helping to remove some of the most dangerous economic causes of war; second, in the field of international commercial relations there is an urgent need of effective action along the lines thus far followed with marked success in the application of the Trade Agreements Act; third, foreign-trade agreements have demonstrated their effectiveness in reviving our foreign commerce and in further safeguarding it from discriminations by foreign countries; fourth, the administration of the act has been done with care and caution and with scrupulous regard for the best interests of the Nation, as expressed in the authorization to the Executive for negotiating trade agreements with foreign countries.

Mr. Chairman, I feel like apologizing to the Committee for taking so much time, but I do not feel quite satisfied to conclude without referring to some expressions made by my friend the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who in a speech on June 20, 1936, among other things said:

EXTRACTS FROM MR. TREADWAY'S SPEECH OF JUNE 20, 1936

The Republican platform of 1936 calls for the repeal of the New Deal trade-treaty legislation under which our rich domestic market is being surrendered to foreigners. I have advocated this ever since the law was enacted. I bitterly fought its enactment. It has worked out just as I prophesied, namely, to the great detriment of the country as a whole.

I cannot close this reference to the tariff more appropriately than by quoting the following passage from my remarks of June 14, 1934:

"In the coming elections the Democrats will have to justify their votes in giving the President this unconstitutional and dictatorial authority over the tariff and over all domestic industries dependent upon tariff protection. They will have to answer for giving him this power to say what our people shall produce at home and what they shall buy abroad. They will have to explain by what principles of fairness and justice one industry may be destroyed in order to benefit another. They will have to demonstrate by what economic laws the importation of foreign agricultural products can rid our farmers of their surpluses, how the importation of more industrial products can reopen our own factories, and how the displacement of American by foreign labor can reduce the army of the unemployed.

"The Republican Party awaits with expectancy the opportunity to meet the issues raised by this bill before the American people in November. Having adhered to our traditional position of preserving the home market for American industry, agriculture, and labor, we are confident of the outcome."

Again quoting from his speech of June 20, 1936:

I am confident that next November the people will decide that they have had enough of the New Deal and that they wish to restore the system of government established by the fathers under a businesslike and progressive administration. Let the slogan be "Off the Rocks with Landon and Knox."

Thus spoke the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who, more than any other human being, has day in and day out raised his voice in opposition to the reciprocal trade agreement program of President Roosevelt and the Democratic administration. The RECORD discloses that on 33 different dates the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] entertained, or detained, this House on the subject of reciprocal-trade agreements.

"Off the Rocks with Landon and Knox" was his slogan in the past campaign, to which the people of his district replied in no mistaken terms. Two years ago our friend from Massachusetts received a plurality of approximately 16,000 votes, and last November his constituents took him so seriously that he was returned to Congress with a majority of only 167 over all of his opponents; and I have heard it whispered that the gentleman from Massachusetts, in order to keep off the rocks with Landon and Knox, flirted with and embraced the economic theory of those advocating the payment of $200 per month to all persons 60 years of age and over.

Instead of being off the rocks with Landon and Knox they went on or under the rocks with Landon and Knox. In order to escape the wrath and indignation of his own people by a narrow margin, as I am informed, my good friend TREADWAY was compelled to flirt with and throw bouquets and kisses to the Townsendites. [Laughter.]

How many speeches did he make against the Reciprocal Tariff Act? Only 33. Frequently, when our committee would be in session considering important legislation along other lines, the gentleman from Massachusetts would absent himself in his great zeal and enthusiasm for the American producer, American consumer, the American manufacturer, and the American farmer and workingman, and would hie himself over here and regale the House for hours at a time, inveighing, roaring, and cavorting against the policies of this administration, more particularly so far as the reciprocal-tariff law was concerned.

The result of the last election should teach the gentleman and his party a lesson. If the election of 1932 did not teach them a lesson, and if the election of 1934 did not teach them a lesson, certainly the election of 1936 should not go unheeded, but if it should, after the next election they may not have even Maine and Vermont, or be fortunate enough to have sufficient Members in this body even to call the roll will be their fate.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Just one question: Having saved the United States for the Democratic Party and all that in the course of the gentleman's discussion, and forgetting for the moment the fact that we have reciprocal-trade agreements, I am wondering whether the gentleman is satisfied with all the agreements that have been made all the way through.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In the main, most assuredly.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Not being so familiar with this subject as is the gentleman, I have in mind the agreement with Canada whereby, according to what figures we have, cattle imports into the United States from that country have been greater than they were before. In other words, we have imported more agricultural products than we have exported. So far as the agriculturist is concerned, therefore, it would not seem that these agreements are satisfactory.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I think on the whole they are not only satisfactory but that they have been highly beneficial. I am speaking as a cattleman. What little of this world's goods I possess is mostly invested in cattle lands, and my chief business down home is growing cattle.

Mr. REES of Kansas. What is the gentleman's opinion so far as agriculture is concerned—that it is being helped or injured by these agreements?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not have any doubt about it, viewing the agreements as a whole.

Of course, the gentleman thinks because the shoe might possibly pinch sometime in the future it may be a bad thing. He forgets the fact before these trade agreements were negotiated, and before this administration came into power, agriculture in this country, one of our greatest industries, was barefooted, figuratively speaking, and walking over frozen ground with bleeding feet. Today it is comfortably clothed, well fed and well shod. Because the shoe might sometime in the future pinch in some possible way, the gentleman imagines we are ruining the entire country.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman does not believe that the things he has just mentioned have come about by reason of these reciprocal agreements we made in the last 18 months?

Mr. DOUGHTON. In part, and, of course, due to the entire policy and program of this administration. Some mistakes have been made. You cannot fight fire without wasting water and you cannot measure water when the city is on fire. Taking the policy of this administration as a whole together with the wonderful things accomplished, and the benefits that have come to American agriculture, American industry, in fact to all occupations, all callings and all professions, if it does not convince the gentleman of the wisdom of the policies of this administration and its salutary effect upon the country, the gentleman could not be convinced should one arise from the dead and proclaim it. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF THE TRADE AGREEMENT ACT

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, before beginning my remarks, I call attention to the way in which this bill comes before us for consideration. I am not making a point of order that the Ramseyer rule has been ignored, because we are perfectly willing that the majority should have the responsibility for the way and the manner in which measures are brought before this House for consideration.

Rule 13, clause 2–A, known as the Ramseyer rule provides:

Whenever a committee reports a bill or joint resolution repealing or amending any statute or part thereof it shall include in its report or in an accompanying document—

(1) The text and the statute or part thereof which it is proposed to repeal; and

(2) A comparative print of that part of the bill or joint resolution making the amendment and of the statute or part thereof proposed to be amended, showing by stricken-through type and italics, parallel columns, or other appropriate typographical devices the omissions and insertions proposed to be made.

I call attention to the fact that in no way does the report or any accompanying document comply with the Ramseyer rule.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I prefer not to.

Mr. COOPER. I should think the gentleman would not after that.

ELECTION NOT BASED ON ISSUES INVOLVED

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, evidently passed me some flattering bouquets of a sarcastic nature in the latter part of his speech. I did not hear all of them, but I appreciate the fact he was quoting from some remarks I may have made which proved to be a false prediction as regards the last election. However, there is a little paragraph in the hearings, on page 79, that perhaps I might well call to his attention when he talks about the election being based on the actual questions before the country.

Why, Mr. Chairman, was the platform of either party considered by the electorate? Absolutely not. There was only one question before the American people, and that was, "How much can be gotten out of the Public Treasury?"

Mr. Chairman, that was the real question involved, and it was gratitude, if anything, on the part of the American people which rolled up the Democratic vote that we recognize as all powerful. That appears in the hearings.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], one of our distinguished Members, was interrogating Mr. O'Brien, this great member of the Tariff Commission who has been quoted, and of whom I will have something to say a little later.

Mr. CROWTHER said:

The reason there are so few Republicans here is that the people in this country were for a bigger and better Santa Claus.

That is a recognized fact. Even the Constitution was sneered at and described as outmoded and threadbare. The chairman of the committee admitted it is a pretty good Santa Claus who put the farmers in this country back on their feet and where they make profits.

Of course, this was not done, but he added:

It is a pretty desirable Santa Claus.

Mr. Chairman, the main issue before the American people was the extent to which Santa Claus was going to be kind to the voters of this country.

If he wants to discuss issues, that is another question.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I decline to yield. I have so much material here that unless I proceed in an orderly way I will not get around to all of it. I do not intend to take an hour and 29 minutes. I want some of my colleagues to have part of our time.

VIEWS OF CHAIRMAN DOUGHTON ON DELEGATING TARIFF POWER TO THE PRESIDENT

Let me quote from the remarks that the gentleman himself made in connection with certain authority given to the President of the United States, and that is all this bill accomplishes. We turn over for 3 years more our right to legislate. They want to do that; we do not. What did the distinguished chairman say when this sort of thing, in less drastic form, was considered a few years ago?

The fathers who framed the Constitution, wisely in my opinion, left to Congress the initiating and enacting of laws raising revenue. The flexible tariff provision giving the President the power to raise or lower tariff rates to the amount of 50 percent renders nugatory in spirit and practical effect this provision of the Constitution. If this bill is enacted into law he will have the power of life and death over industry and all manufacturing enterprises and complete autocratic power affecting agriculture. My friends, this is too dangerous and alarming to contemplate.

And so on through this same speech that the honorable gentleman from North Carolina rendered very effectively in the House. This is absolutely contrary to the position he takes here today or took 3 years ago when this bill was first up for consideration.

Now, if there is anything more inconsistent in any remarks I ever made on this floor than these remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina, tell me what it is.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I am obliged to yield to my chairman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman criticizes me now for having taken that position, but did not the gentleman then take exactly the position I am taking now?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not know what the gentleman is driving at. If the gentleman will get down to details and ask some questions, I will try to answer them, but do not take all my time in gesticulating at me.

Mr. DOUGHTON. My question is whether the position the gentleman took then was not exactly the position he is now criticizing.

Mr. TREADWAY. I favored the flexible provisions of the tariff act as provided under the Smoot-Hawley Act and previous Republican bills, which the Supreme Court has upheld. I do not favor any arbitrary grant of power such as the gentleman now advocates and no such grant was in that bill, yet the gentleman opposed it. You are making the President's authority 100 percent complete under your Hull-Sayre-O'Brien trade-treaty law, whereas under the flexible tariff the President had no legislative discretion whatever.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman realizes——

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I do not realize anything. [Laughter.] Do not put a speech in my mouth. Ask me any question, and if it does not take too long I will stay with the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course, if the gentleman is going to decline to yield to anyone——

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I yield for a question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That speech was made before the depression and when there was no emergency confronting us, because conditions then were normal.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, the flexible provision of the tariff act was a useful thing and did not give the President any legislative discretion; but the gentleman from North Carolina did not even want to give that power to the President of the United States as provided in that act. Let me ask the gentleman to put side by side the flexible provision of the Republican tariff act and this authority that you are granting to Mr. Hull under this extension and then see how your parallel columns will look.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman can do that himself. The gentleman was for this proposition then and he ought to be for it now. The gentleman is no more consistent than myself. The gentleman finds himself in the same category. The gentleman is against it now, whereas he was for it then. I was against it then and am for it now.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not know that I understand the gentleman's question, but I am sure I have a complete answer for almost everything the gentleman may have in mind in the remarks I have here, if I get a chance to use them; and therefore I shall ask an opportunity to proceed without interruption for a while.

TRADE AGREEMENTS NOT IN INTEREST OF AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the continuance of the Trade Agreements Act for another period of 3 years because, in its present form and as administered by the State Department internationalists, it is not in the interest of the American people.

It permits the lowering of our tariffs without reference to domestic production costs, and thereby jeopardizes all American agriculture, labor, and industry; undermines the American wage level, which is by far the highest in the world; and threatens our American standard of living.

ACT HAS FAILED TO ACHIEVE PURPOSE

The Trade Agreements Act has failed to achieve the object for which it was supposedly intended, namely, the expansion of the foreign market for the products of the United States. When the measure was originally under consideration 3 years ago we were told that unless the President were given blanket authority to enter into trade agreements with foreign countries it would not be "practicable or possible for the United States to pursue with any degree of success the proposed policy of restoring our lost international trade."

EXPORT TRADE WAS RECOVERING BEFORE AGREEMENTS BECAME EFFECTIVE

Reference was made to the low point to which our export trade had fallen in 1932, when it amounted to $1,611,000,000. But I call attention to the fact that in 1934, before the trade-agreements program began to operate, our exports had already risen of their own accord to $3,133,000,000, or some $500,000,000 above the depression figure. Now let us see to what extent our exports have risen since that time.

I find that, according to figures just released by the Department of Commerce, our total exports in 1936 were valued at $2,453,000,000. This is $320,000,000 in excess of the 1934 figure, but this increase is much less than the amount of recovery in our foreign trade in the 2-year period prior to the trade-agreement program. Moreover, it is not all due to increased trade with the countries with whom trade agreements have been entered into. Our trade with the whole world has been on the increase since 1932, and in many instances our increased trade with nontreaty countries has exceeded that with those with whom we have trade agreements.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES GAIN MOST UNDER TRADE TREATIES

The important thing about our increased foreign trade is that under the administration's program imports are increasing much faster than exports. This proves the contention made by the Republican minority in 1934, that this program would result in greater advantages to foreign countries than to our own people.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this point a table showing the extent to which trade treaties have benefited certain foreign nations more than they have the United States. I offer the table without reading. It is based upon official Department of Commerce statistics.

The table is as follows:

Table showing extent to which trade treaties have benefited certain foreign countries more than the United States

	Exports of United States merchandise to—	Imports for consumption from—
Cuba (treaty effective Sept. 3, 1934):
September 1935–August 1936	$63,525,000	$115,176,000
September 1933–August 1934	34,993,000	48,306,000
Increase	28,532,000	66,870,000
Belgium (treaty effective May 1, 1935):
May 1935–April 1936	59,342,000	45,389,000
May 1934–April 1935	46,657,000	28,696,000
Increase	12,685,000	16,693,000
Sweden (treaty effective Aug. 5, 1935):

The countries referred to in this table are the major nations with whom trade agreements have been in effect for any appreciable period of time. The figures shown prove conclusively that the trade-agreement program, as being carried out by the free-trade-minded officials of the State Department, has sacrificed more of the domestic market in the interest of foreign producers than it has gained of the foreign market in the interest of domestic producers—in other words, that the advantage is all on the side of the foreign nations concerned.

CUBA HAS BIG ADVANTAGE

Let us consider the case of Cuba. The table shows that in the second year under the agreement, as compared with the 12-month period immediately preceding the agreement, our exports to Cuba increased twenty-eight and one-half million dollars. But in the same period our imports from Cuba increased by $67,000,000, or two and one-third times the amount of our increased exports to Cuba. In the first year under the agreement the advantage in favor of Cuba was five to one.

Under the Belgian treaty the advantage also was in favor of the foreign country, although the margin was not quite so great. Nevertheless, we still gave up $4,000,000 more in the way of increased trade than we received.

The actual operations of the Swedish treaty in the first year showed an increase of only four and one-half million dollars in exports to Sweden as compared with an increase in imports from that country of over $11,000,000. A fine example of Yankee trading, I must say.

ADVERSE EFFECT OF CANADIAN TREATY

In the first 11 months under the Canadian treaty our increased imports from Canada were $29,000,000 more than our increased exports to that country. Again the advantage was against us.

But here is the most interesting thing about the Canadian treaty: Our farmers were particularly hard hit by the reductions which the State Department made in favor of Canadian agricultural products, but the administration contended that American agriculture would be greatly benefited by the concessions which we had received in the Canadian market and that these concessions would more than offset the advantages which Canadian farmers gained in our market.

Our experience under the treaty has been just the contrary. According to the administration's own figures published in the Department of Agriculture document, Foreign Crops and Markets, for December 28, 1936, our increased exports of agricultural products in the 10-month period ending October 1936, were only $8,000,000 as compared with a twenty-one and one-half million dollar increase in agricultural imports from Canada. That is how our farmers have "benefited" under the State Department's reciprocal bargaining.

The next treaty referred to in the table is that with the Netherlands. Here again the benefits are one-sided in favor of the foreign producer and against our own people.

In the first 10 months under the treaty with the Kingdom of the Netherlands, our exports increased less than five and one-half million dollars as compared with a twenty-six-million-dollar increase in imports. Another fine example of shrewd bargaining by the State Department.

In the case of the Swiss treaty we have the rather remarkable showing of an actual decrease of $300,000 in exports under its operations for the first 10 months as compared with a four-and-one-half-million-dollar increase in imports from that country. I am sure the State Department is not very proud of these results. I am also sure that our domestic producers, particularly those engaged and employed in the watch-manufacturing and cheese-producing industries, find no solace in these figures.

Although Assistant Secretary of State Sayre, in his testimony before the committee, declared that it was too early to draw any conclusions from the results of the operations of the trade agreements, he, nevertheless, proceeded to point out every little item that showed increased exports under the various treaties. I think it entirely proper, therefore, that I should have referred to the other side of the picture, as I have done, and shown the increased imports, which more than offset the increased exports to which he refers, not all of which are the result of the trade treaties. While it may be too early to draw any final conclusions about the effect of the trade treaties upon our foreign trade, it is not too early to discern the unmistakable and consistent trend of greater imports than exports in connection with our trade with the treaty countries. This, of course, can only result in a net disadvantage to American producers and American workingmen. It certainly is not too early to draw conclusions from the operation of the Cuban treaty, which has now been in effect for more than 2 years, and which, as I have pointed out, has resulted in much more benefit to Cuba than to the United States.

TRADE CONCESSIONS EXTENDED TO WHOLE WORLD

Of course, it must be remembered that the duty reductions which this country makes under trade treaties with particular countries are extended by the State Department to all but two of the seventy-odd nations of the world without requiring them to make equivalent concessions to us and in spite of the fact that many of them actually discriminate against our commerce. This policy of generalizing our tariff concessions thereby amounts to the same thing as a horizontal tariff reduction, and has the effect of accelerating foreign imports into this country without necessarily benefiting our export trade.

IMPORTS INCREASING FASTER THAN EXPORTS

As the result of the administration's tariff and trade policy our total imports have been increasing faster than our total exports. From 1934 to 1935 imports increased by $392,000,000, or 24 percent, as compared with an increase in exports of only $149,000,000, or 7 percent. From 1935 to 1936 the increase was $372,000,000, or 18 percent, in the case of imports, and $171,000,000, or 7½ percent, in the case of exports.

INCREASED IMPORTS MOSTLY COMPETITIVE

The administration alleges that although imports have increased faster than exports most of the increased imports have been of noncompetitive products. This argument is also advanced by the Democratic majority in their report on the pending measure. They fail to prove their point, however. If we examine the whole picture, we find that the situation is just the reverse to what they contend it is.

By and large our free imports consist almost entirely of noncompetitive products, while our dutiable imports are of a competitive nature. If we compare the increase in free, or noncompetitive, imports with the increase in dutiable, or competitive, imports, we find that the latter have actually increased more than the former, both in percentage and in dollars and cents.

From January through November 1935 and 1936 our competitive imports increased by $173,000,000, or 23 percent, as compared with an increase of only $149,000,000, or 14 percent, in noncompetitive imports. Thus the administration's contention is completely disproved.

If specific examples of increases in competitive imports in 1936 are desired, they can readily be found in the publication of the United States Chamber of Commerce, entitled "Our World Trade, January-September 1936", in which are listed the 50 chief imports according to value. Here are some of the increases shown in that document: Cane sugar, 11.6 percent; distilled liquors, 78.2 percent; wheat, 95 percent; tobacco, 23 percent; fish, 17.4 percent; meat and meat products, 28.7 percent; industrial chemicals, 30.6 percent; sawed lumber, 51.7 percent; cattle, 37.7 percent; cheese, 18.8 percent; cotton cloth, 44.6 percent; manganese ore, 97.9 percent, and so on.

FAVORABLE BALANCE OF TRADE DECLINES UNDER TREATY PROGRAM

The fact that under the administration's foreign-trade policy our imports have increased much faster than our exports has resulted in shifting the position of this country from that of an export nation to that of an import nation. Ever since 1894 we have without exception had a favorable balance of merchandise trade, or, in other words, an excess of exports over imports.

Since the administration's trade-treaty program has been in operation, however, our favorable balance of trade has constantly declined until now it is almost at the vanishing point. In 1934 we had a favorable balance of merchandise trade of $478,000,000. In 1935 this favorable balance declined to only $235,000,000. At the end of the calendar year 1936 it had dropped to the negligible total of only $34,000,000.

STATE DEPARTMENT INDIFFERENT TO LOSS OF FAVORABLE TRADE BALANCE

The strange thing is that those in charge of the trade-treaty program are not at all concerned about the increased ratio of imports to exports, which has resulted in our losing our favorable trade balance. They are not in the least worried by the fact that as a nation we are about to import from abroad more than we sell abroad. They see no harm to domestic producers in giving up more of the home market than we gain of the foreign market. Assistant Secretary of State Sayre not long ago made a speech in New York in which he said that increased exports with a diminishing export balance were an "omen of sound recovery." By what strange mental process he arrives at this conclusion I am unable to say. I for one cannot see any net benefit in buying more than we sell, nor can I see any net benefit in hurting a large group of American producers to benefit a few others engaged in export trade.

When the attention of Secretary Hull was directed to the increased imports and our vanishing trade balance he would not even enter into a discussion of the matter. I had always thought that questions relative to imports and exports, the balance of trade, and so on, were pertinent to a hearing on a tariff measure, but it seems that Secretary Hull did not think so. He said that those who asked such questions were diverting him from the "broad, twin objective of peace and economic well-being, which this program proposes", and indicated that he was not interested in whether "there are a few dollars more today of imports than of exports."

If a drop in our favorable balance of trade from $478,000,000 in 1934 to $34,000,000 in 1936 does not interest the Secretary of State and his colleagues in the State Department, I will say to him that it does interest me and lots of other people in this country. I do not recall that the Secretary was opposed to talking about imports and exports when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in 1934 to advocate the enactment of the measure which it is now proposed to extend for another 3 years. He was perfectly willing then to talk about the decline in our foreign trade during the depression, although he seems to have overlooked the fact that it was increasing rapidly at the time he urged the passage of this measure as a means of dealing with what he termed the existing "great emergency" in our international trade.

TRADE TREATIES NOT RELATED TO PEACE

In 1934 we were told that this measure was necessary to restore our export trade. Now that the administration has failed to accomplish this purpose, we are told that it is necessary at this time to bring about world peace. I wonder what excuse for its continuation will be given 3 years from today, when an attempt probably will be made to make the Trade Agreements Act permanent.

There is no nobler object than seeking to bring about and preserve peace throughout the world, but there is some question in my mind as to just how much relation trade treaties have to peace. European nations for years have had commercial agreements with one another, but these trade agreements do not seem to have been much of a factor in keeping peace over there. Moreover, in spite of the fact that this country has entered into 15 trade treaties in the last 3 years, the peace of the world has been increasingly threatened during that time.

I have never heard of any nation which was likely to declare war on us because it objected to our tariff rates. Neither have I heard any sentiment in this country for declaring war on any other nation because of its tariff rates. The Secretary of State apparently wants to buy the good will of the world with the American market, but it is not likely that he would be any more successful with this venture than we were in buying the good will of the allied nations during the war by helping to fight their battle and loaning them billions of dollars, which they have never repaid.

I do not agree with Secretary Hull that by lowering our tariffs and destroying our own industries in favor of foreign producers we would thereby lay the foundations for world peace and dissipate the clouds of war. The American market is too important to our own people to let the Secretary of State gamble it on an idealistic but impractical gesture.

Secretary Hull seems to have contradicted himself during his testimony before the committee when he said in one place that our trade-treaty policy had played a part in "softening and mellowing the minds of statesmen" who had been pursuing a policy of retaliation and discrimination in foreign trade, and then later declared that the reason the world was in such an awful condition today was that not much progress had been made along this line. Judging by the type of argument they are putting forward, I am inclined to think some present-day American statesmen have undergone a "softening of the mind" which is not related to problems of international relations.

INTERNATIONALIST VIEWS OF STATE DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS

I have always regarded the matter of regulation of our tariffs as a purely domestic affair, but under the new doctrine of the State Department it seems to be a matter in which the whole world should have a say. Not long ago Dr. Henry F. Grady, until recently in charge of the Trade Agreements Division of the State Department, said in an address in California:

> This new policy, as I have said, coming in this period of strong isolationist sentiment, is of an importance that can hardly be exaggerated. This policy departs from the old by accepting the principles that our tariff rates are a matter of concern to other countries—> that our tariff rates are a matter of concern to other countries.

This is the new doctrine that has been evolved by the State Department. Although the Constitution of the United States gives Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign countries and to lay and adjust tariff duties, this function has now been transferred to a small group of internationalists down at the State Department, who sit around a table with representatives of foreign governments, in secret, star-chamber proceedings, and determine what shall be the tariff policy of this country; what the rate of duty shall be on this article and that article; what American industry shall be sacrificed in favor of some foreign industry; and what the American people shall be allowed to buy at home and what they must buy from abroad.

These foreign representatives who sit with the State Department officials in writing tariff rates actually have more to say in the matter than the elected representatives of the people in Congress, who are supposed to have the exclusive power to deal with the tariff. These foreigners help write our tariff schedules, while the House and Senate have absolutely nothing to say about them. Congress does not even have an opportunity to approve or reject the rates, once the foreigners have helped write them. That is the condition in which we find ourselves under the operation of this internationalistic doctrine.

In the same speech to which I previously referred, Dr. Grady also said:

> We are, to a greater degree than ever before, meshing our domestic economy into world economy.

This is just more of the same internationalist doctrine. We are frankly told just where the trade-treaty program, as at present administered, is taking us. Perhaps it is a back-door entrance into the League of Nations. Who knows?

In the course of a study of the history of the tariff which I made 2 years ago, I found that in the early history of our country, John C. Calhoun and Henry Clay both supported the cause of protection for American industries on the ground that the economic independence of the United States from Europe was essential for real political independence from Europe. Both of these great statesmen later served their country as Secretary of State. It is a pity that the present incumbent of that great office is so blind to the great truth which two of his illustrious predecessors uttered a century or more ago. Instead he follows in the path of internationalism, forgetting the lessons we have learned in the past.

ADMINISTRATION NOT INTERESTED IN GETTING EVEN BREAK UNDER TREATIES

Not since the days of Woodrow Wilson have the internationalists held the upper hand in Washington. Today they are all powerful. They utterly disregard the real purpose for which the Trade Agreement Act was passed. Assistant Secretary of State Sayre, in a pamphlet published by the World Peace Foundation entitled "America Must Act", sets forth in some detail his views regarding the trade-treaty program. He says its purpose must be broader than mere "horse trading"; adding:

> What matters is not selfish trade advantages gained by individual nations over their competitors, but the gradual liberalization of world trade through the adoption of similar programs by other nations.

It is not hard for us to understand why we have come out on the short end of every trade treaty negotiated thus far, when the man who is immediately in charge of the treaty negotiations comes out with a statement like that. He cares not whether we get anything out of the deal, so long as we set an example for the world to follow in reducing our tariffs. The injury to our domestic producers is of no consequence. We are simply to show the world the way in the hope that it will follow. It is a good thing that Dr. Sayre is not Secretary of War, or he would try to lead the way to world disarmament by disbanding our Army, sinking our Navy, and throwing away our arms and ammunition in the hope that the world would also follow suit.

SECRETARY HULL SILENT ON PRACTICAL ASPECTS OF TRADE-TREATY PROGRAM

It was absolutely impossible during the hearings to get the Secretary of State to talk about the practical, everyday bread-and-butter aspects of the trade-treaty program and its effect upon our people. He actually resented being asked about trade figures, and indicated that he wanted to deal exclusively with the "peace side" of the controversy "rather than lower the whole inquiry to a level of local tariff controversy." He did not wish to stoop to the point of talking about competitive imports or American wage levels and living standards.

At one point during the hearings I asked the Secretary this question:

Do you feel that if we endeavored to protect our own industry we would be creating a hostile commercial policy?

He replied:

The question of tariff protection per se does not arise here.

Then I asked:

Can we compete with foreign countries that have lower living conditions unless we lower our living conditions to those standards?

Again the Secretary did not reply directly to my question. He simply said:

The repetition of your question in just slightly different form only calls for repetition of the statement I have made here repeatedly, that this program calls merely for dealing with excessive, unreasonable, and trouble-breeding restraints and restrictions on trade.

DUTY REDUCTIONS NOT CONFINED TO ALLEGED EXCESSIVE RATES

Mr. Chairman, what is an "excessive" or "unreasonable" tariff rate? We hear a lot of talk about "unconscionable" rates in the 1930 tariff law, but no one ever points out any. However, we may assume from what the Secretary said that every tariff rate that he has reduced thus far was an excessive or unreasonable rate, in his opinion. Let us see what some of them were.

I note that some 88 reductions have been made in the agricultural schedule of the tariff act, including such important farm products as cattle, cream, cheese, poultry, corn, apples, cherries, potatoes, and tomatoes, to mention only a few. The reductions have been as high as 50 percent below the rate fixed in the 1930 tariff act. The Secretary apparently deemed these rates to have been excessive, and he has reduced them, with the approval of the President.

I wonder if American farmers are going to forget the statement made to them by Mr. Roosevelt in 1932 as a candidate for office. Speaking in Baltimore, he said:

Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. * * * I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

If the farm tariffs levied by the Tariff Act of 1930 were not excessive and if the Secretary of State is only concerned with reducing excessive tariff rates, then I would like to have him tell the farmers of this country why some 88 reductions were made on farm tariffs under the trade treaties negotiated to date, not counting the reductions under the agreement with Cuba. The fact is that he is not confining his operations to reducing excessive trade barriers, because if he were the number of reductions would not be very many, whereas to date he has made 448 reductions, which have been extended to every nation in the world, with two exceptions. One hundred and thirty-three of these reductions have been in the amount of 50 percent; 59 were from 40 to 50 percent; 90 were from 30 to 40 percent; 122 were from 20 to 30 percent; 32 were from 10 to 20 percent; only 2 were less than 10 percent; and 10 were indeterminate.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. In just a moment I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

The Secretary of State apparently thought the duty on cement was excessive, so he reduced it from a mere 6 cents per hundred pounds to 4½ cents, with the result that cement imports have increased from 98,000,000 pounds in 1934 to 547,000,000 pounds in the first 11 months of 1936.

He apparently thought the duty on watches excessive, so he reduced the watch rates by as much as 50 percent in some cases, although foreign importers already had obtained half the domestic market and had forced all but four domestic watch factories out of business, with a consequent loss of employment to those engaged in this industry.

He apparently thought the duty on Cuban sugar was excessive, so it was reduced from 2 cents to nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound. By that reduction a cash donation out of the United States Treasury of some $45,000,000 was made to the Wall Street interests which own the Cuban sugar industry, without any consequent reduction in the price of sugar to the American housewife.

And so I could go through the entire list of concessions and point out reductions for which no justification could be shown.

I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has covered the point I was going to make, that according to the figures there have been 88 breaches of faith with the American farmers since this administration took office.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes to use in my own way and whatever extra time I may have I shall use by yielding to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I just want to ask the gentleman if it is not correct to say that in respect of sugar the reciprocal-trade agreements did not enter into that. The sugar rates were handled under a separate act of Congress establishing the quotas.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is not true. The President first reduced the Cuban sugar duty under the flexible tariff from 2 cents to 1.5 cents, and then under the Cuban treaty, which followed shortly, a further reduction was made to 0.9 cent.

But even if they were effected by the quotas, the quotas were arranged so our people could not produce additional sugar while Cuba could raise additional sugar and bring it in here in competition with our own sugar.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The only point I wanted to make——

Mr. TREADWAY. Will not the gentleman please use his own time?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman, certainly, would not want the House to think that the reciprocal-trade agreements——

Mr. TREADWAY. I want the House to understand what I am saying distinctly and positively and I am standing back of that. If the gentleman does not like what I am saying, let him answer in his own time.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I wanted to help the gentleman tell the truth.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I resent a man saying I am not telling the truth, and he cannot accuse me of not telling the truth in this House. I resent the gentleman's remark.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I wanted to help the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will tell the truth and I do not ask the gentleman to tell me what the truth is.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I was trying to help the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; the gentleman was not trying to help me. Do not try to get away with any nonsense like that, and do not accuse me of not telling the truth.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I will again say that I was trying to help the gentleman.

TRADE-TREATY LAW PERMITS TARIFF REDUCTIONS WITHOUT REFERENCE TO DOMESTIC PRODUCTION COSTS

Mr. TREADWAY. This brings me to a discussion of what I conceive to be one of the most fundamental objections to the Trade Agreements Act in its present form, namely, that it permits the reduction of our tariff rates without reference to domestic production costs. There is no standard or yardstick set up in the act to guide or control the treaty negotiators in making tariff concessions. They can and do reduce tariff rates far below the amount which is necessary to give domestic producers a fair and equal basis of competition with foreign producers in the domestic market. To my mind, no rate is excessive which merely places foreign competitors on an equal competitive footing with domestic producers in the home market, and that is all the rates in the Tariff Act of 1930 purport to do. If, after investigation by the Tariff Commission, any of those rates are found to be excessive from the standpoint of equalizing foreign and domestic competitive conditions, they can be reduced to the proper level under the so-called flexible tariff provisions of the 1930 act. A definite legislative formula has been laid down by Congress for that purpose.

If the administration is only concerned with reducing alleged "excessive" tariff rates, it certainly can have no valid objection to an amendment to the act, such as I propose to offer, which will prevent reductions from being made which have the effect of giving foreign producers an advantage over domestic producers in the home market. I offered such an amendment when the bill was originally under consideration 3 years ago, but it was opposed by the Democratic majority and consequently was not agreed to.

During the hearings on the pending measure the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] appeared before the committee and pointed out how under the treaty with Cuba the tariff had been reduced on every major commodity produced in his district, in each case far below the difference in cost of production of the domestic and foreign product. He proposes to offer an amendment to the bill, and I think rightly so, to protect his people from being further crucified by unreasonable tariff reductions on agricultural or horticultural products. I would, of course, support his amendment as far as it goes, but it seems to me that the same justification for protecting agriculture against unjust tariff reductions also applies to our manufacturing industries and the workers engaged therein, who furnish the greatest market for the American farmer.

There is no reason why we should seek only to prohibit unequal and unfair foreign competition in the case of agricultural products and continue to allow it in the case of industrial products. Aside from the injustice of it, agriculture and industry in this country are so interdependent that if one is stricken down the other will fall with it.

It is no argument to say that the determination of what is a fair or reasonable rate will so impede the progress of the treaty negotiations as to virtually nullify the whole program. Several months are spent in the actual negotiations in any event, and it will take no more time to determine whether a rate is "reasonable" than it now takes the treaty negotiators to determine that, in their opinion, it is unreasonable or excessive. But regardless of this fact, there is no reason for quibbling about time when American industries and the jobs of American workingmen are at stake.

The fact is that those in charge of the treaty negotiations are more interested in their internationalist doctrines than they are in the protection of American industries. They have the same detached interest in the livelihood of our people that a scientist has in the life of a guinea pig on which he is experimenting. If their experiment fails and there is already unmistakable and conclusive evidence that it is failing, the only loss, in their estimation, is the economic life of another guinea pig.

UNFAIR METHODS OF NEGOTIATION OF TREATIES

I now turn to the method of negotiation of the trade treaties, which, to my mind, is absolutely indefensible. Here is what happens: The State Department, as required by the act, first issues a notice of intention to negotiate a treaty with a particular country. Interested parties are then permitted to appear before a body known as the Committee for Reciprocity Information, which has been created by the President to hold hearings prior to the actual negotiation of the treaty. Heretofore it has been necessary for American producers to give their testimony and file their briefs without any indication whatsoever as to what items would actually be considered in the treaty negotiations. They have, therefore, had to "shoot in the dark", so to speak, covering every item of trade between the United States and the other country.

Recently the State Department issued a notice saying that prior to the hearings on the proposed treaty with Ecuador a list would be issued of the items that would be considered in the negotiations. This, of course, is a step forward and, at the same time, it is a confession that past procedure in this regard has been indefensible. However, American producers will still not know until after a treaty is approved by the President and thus made effective, so far as this country is concerned, whether their product will actually be affected. Moreover, there is no assurance that after the treaty with Ecuador is negotiated there will not be a return to the former methods.

HEARINGS NOT HELD BY BODY WHICH CONDUCTS ACTUAL NEGOTIATIONS

Be this as it may, the most fundamental objection to the whole negotiation procedure still has not been corrected. The committee for reciprocity information, which holds the hearings, is not the body which conducts the actual negotiations with the foreign country. This is done by an entirely different group, in secret, star-chamber proceedings. American producers never have an opportunity to appear before those who do the actual negotiation. This is the feature to which I most strongly object. It is as if the House Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers would hold hearings on a tariff bill prior to the actual drafting of the bill by the Ways and Means Committee.

Of course, it is said that those who conduct the actual negotiations have the benefit of the hearings which are held by the committee for reciprocity information, but this is not altogether true, since the hearings are "briefed" before they are presented to the treaty negotiators, and this means that they miss a great deal of the testimony. Moreover, there is no indication that the abbreviated copies of the hearings receive any attention once they are in the hands of those in charge of the negotiations. No doubt many domestic producers have presented what they considered to be an unanswerable argument for the retention of the present duty on their product, only to find later on that their evidence had been entirely disregarded. There is absolutely no sense in going through the motions of holding hearings if the testimony does not reach the ears of those primarily responsible for the negotiations, nor is there any sense in presenting testimony if it is not going to be considered when it does reach their ears. The whole proceeding, to my mind, is farcical, and denies to American producers an adequate and fair opportunity to present their views to the proper parties.

The most indefensible part of the whole proceeding is from the time the treaty negotiators begin their work until the completed treaty is approved by the President. This part of the work is carried on behind barred doors by the secret trade-agreements committee of so-called experts, who sit down with the representatives of foreign governments to decide upon the actual concessions to be made on both sides. American producers have no intimation of what goes on behind these closed doors. They are not admitted. Not a single Member of Congress can gain admittance to this star-chamber proceeding, although Congress has the exclusive power under the Constitution to regulate tariff rates. No information is permitted to leak out concerning the actual terms of the trade treaty until it has been completed and the President has approved it. Then, of course, it is too late for any changes to be made.

FOREIGN LEGISLATIVE BODIES HAVE RIGHT TO APPROVE TREATIES BUT CONGRESS DOES NOT

No hearing is ever held on the treaty after it has been agreed upon; nor are the treaties subject to approval by either the Senate or House of Representatives. Congress has no opportunity whatever to pass upon them, no matter how ruinous they may be to domestic interests. But while the American Congress is denied this right, the legislative bodies of 13 of the 15 countries with whom treaties have been negotiated have been given an opportunity to approve or reject the treaties. Think of that! We who are charged by the Constitution with regulating tariff duties must sit idly by and let foreign representatives help the so-called tariff experts in the State Department write our tariff rates and then have foreign legislative bodies approve their schedules without giving us the same right. That is how far those who are responsible for the drafting of the Trade Agreements Act have strayed from the principles of representative government. This is the act which we are being asked to approve today by extending it for 3 more years.

I know the answer that will be made when I offer an amendment to the act providing for ratification of the treaties by the House and Senate. It will be said that this will mean delay and uncertainty. Reference will be made to the fact that few past treaties which have required congressional ratification have ever been approved. But this is no answer. Congress is in session 6 months of the year, and at least half the treaties negotiated could be presented for approval during that time. The others would not be delayed for more than 6 months and not all of them for that length of time. Many of them have to be approved by foreign legislative bodies in any event.

So far as the record on past treaties is concerned, that is unimportant. If they were not in the interest of the American people, they should have been defeated. Under the Constitution ratification of a treaty by the Senate requires a two-thirds vote; and, of course, it will be said that those opposed to a treaty can always muster the necessary one-third to defeat it. However, the administration contends that the agreements which are being negotiated under the Trade Agreements Act are not treaties but Executive agreements. If such is the case, they would not require a two-thirds vote for approval. My amendment provides that they must be approved by concurrent resolution of the Congress, which means that a simple majority in both Houses is all that is required for ratification. I have provided for House approval concurrent with the Senate because these trade agreements set aside rates of duty which Congress has fixed in pursuance of its exclusive constitutional duties and responsibilities. Moreover, these trade treaties or agreements affect the revenue, and under the Constitution all revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives. Another reason for House ratification is that the treaties vitally affect the economic welfare of our whole people, and their elected representatives in Congress should have some authority in the matter.

ACT DENIES AMERICAN PRODUCERS RIGHT TO LITIGATE MATTERS ARISING UNDER TREATIES

Without going into any extensive discussion of the legal aspects of the Trade Treaty Act, I want to answer a few statements that have been made in defense of its constitutionality. In the first place I want to refer to a question asked of Secretary Hull by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON]. It is as follows:

> Could the Secretary inform us whether any court has ever dared to hold this action unconstitutional in respect to its not including the submission of the trade agreements to any legislative body?

Note the use of the word "dared."

The Secretary, of course, replied:

> It has not been dealt with adversely by the courts.

What was not brought out was why it had never been dealt with adversely by the courts. The fact is that those who drafted the original act were very careful to take precautions against any such contingency. By a very innocent-looking provision in the act, which merely makes the provisions of section 516 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 inapplicable to duty changes under the trade treaties, the administration has very effectually prevented any constitutional challenge from being made. This provision was not in the bill when it was before the House, but was added in the other body. When it was offered, a Member called attention to the fact that by this amendment American producers were being divested of their right to litigate matters arising out of the treaties. Here is the reply made by the Member in charge of the bill:

> That is what we intend to do, since we want no interference or delay from domestic interests.

This shows how far the administration has gone in denying constitutional rights. This provision of the act reminds one of the methods used in certain other countries to put down opposition. It is indefensible, un-American, and an outright confession of the unconstitutionality of the whole set-up.

POWERS OF CONGRESS UNCONSTITUTIONALLY DELEGATED TO PRESIDENT

Reference is made in the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to the reciprocal agreements made under the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890. It is said that they are a precedent for the delegation of authority to the President under the Trade Agreements Act. This I deny. Under that act the President was merely empowered to negotiate with respect to certain articles, and Congress specified both the articles and the rates of duty that should be imposed. That is entirely different from giving the President the power to specify both the articles and the rates of duty, as the Trade Agreements Act does. In the first instance, the legislative powers are fully exercised by Congress, and the President merely performs an administrative function. This was the holding of the Supreme Court in the case of Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649), in which the constitutionality of the McKinley reciprocity provisions was upheld. But in the case of the authority conferred under the Trade Agreements Act, Congress unconstitutionally delegates full legislative power to the Executive.

The so-called flexible tariff provisions of the 1930 Tariff Act have also been cited by the majority as a precedent for the authority conferred under the Trade Agreement Act. The flexible provisions were upheld by the Supreme Court because Congress had laid down a formula—the difference in foreign and domestic production costs—to which the President was required to adhere in increasing or decreasing duties. The Court said that in this case the President merely performed an administrative function, and that Congress completed its legislative function when it provided the standard by which the President should be governed. In the Trade Agreements Act, however, no such standard or formula is laid down. The President's authority is both arbitrary and complete. He in fact exercises the legislative powers of Congress in fixing tariff duties, contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation case, involving the authority given the President in connection with the Chaco arms embargo, has been cited by the majority as authority for giving the President the power to make "such international agreements as do not constitute treaties in the constitutional sense." Of course, such Executive agreements cannot set aside statutory law. The trade agreements actually set aside the tariff rates fixed by Congress.

It is also contended that the Curtiss case lays down the general proposition that in the international field, the President must be accorded "a degree of discretion and freedom from statutory restriction which would not be admissible were domestic affairs alone involved." This has no application to the Trade Agreements Act, since the adjustment of tariff duties is, under the Constitution, a specific and exclusive function of Congress, and is not strictly speaking a matter which comes within the field of international negotiation. Even if this reference were applicable, the extension of broad authority in the field of actual negotiation would not foreclose the right of ratification by Congress.

VIEWS OF DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS ON DELEGATION OF POWER TO PRESIDENT

It is of course a waste of time to talk about the Constitution in this body. Therefore I will base my argument for congressional ratification of the trade agreements upon another consideration. Several years ago, when the matter of giving the President his present authority under the flexible tariff provisions was under consideration, a number of gentlemen made very persuasive arguments against giving the delegation of any powers over taxation to the Executive, even though in that case such powers were circumscribed by the formula laid down by Congress. These same gentlemen today are asking this House to give to the President, for another 3-year period, far greater powers than they opposed giving him a few years ago.

I have already referred briefly to what the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], said about this matter of delegating power to the President. However, I will include his full statement at this point:

> The fathers who framed the Constitution wisely, in my opinion, left to Congress the initiating and enacting of laws raising revenue. The flexible tariff provision giving the President the power to raise or lower tariff rates to the amount of 50 percent renders nugatory in spirit and practical effect this provision of the Constitution.
> • • • • • • •
> If this bill is enacted into law he will have the power of life and death over industry, all manufacturing enterprises, and complete autocratic power affecting agriculture.
> My friends, this is too dangerous and alarming to contemplate. With all this power vested in the President of the United States he becomes a colossus. It is too much power and authority to lodge in any man who ever has been, is now, or ever will be President of the United States.
> It seems that the more power men are given the more they are obsessed with a morbid gluttony for increased power. My friends, it is time to pause and call a halt, to stop, think, look, and listen before we go over the yawning precipice just ahead of us.

Now that is a remarkable statement by the gentleman who is now asking the House to continue the Trade Agreements Act, which vests far greater power in the President, for another 3 years. Of course, the gentleman will say that conditions were different now than they were then; that the Trade Agreements Act is an emergency matter. I deny that there is any emergency, but that is aside from the point. The gentleman did not say that he was opposed to granting this power to the President "except in emergencies." He made his statement unqualifiedly. Moreover, the Constitution of the United States does not say that Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce with foreign countries and to levy and adjust tariff duties "except in emergencies." It gives Congress this exclusive power at all times.

The Secretary of State, both as a Member of this body and as a Member of the other body, had very definite views on the subject of delegating power to the President. He said that the flexible tariff provisions were "subversive of the plain functions of Congress" and that they were an "unjustifiable arrogance of tariff-making authority to the President." He further said that the flexible tariff practically vests in the President—

> • • • the supreme taxing power of the Nation, contrary to the plainest and most fundamental provisions of the Constitution—a vast and uncontrolled power, larger than had been surrendered by one great coordinate department of government to another since the British House of Commons wrenched the taxing power from an autocratic king.

That, of course, is a very strong statement, yet this same gentleman came before the Ways and Means Committee and asked that complete and arbitrary authority in the President over tariff and excise rates be continued in the President for another 3 years.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] is one of the principal advocates of the Trade Agreements Act. He will undoubtedly address the House in the course of this debate and ask us to continue this law which gives the President the discretionary power to fix tariff rates. Yet here is what he said in connection with the delegation of the flexible tariff powers to the President:

> We do not advocate autocracy and bureaucracy, yet there are men who permit their growth in the name of expediency. • • •
> The fathers who wrote the Constitution never contemplated the placing of the power to fix rates in the hands of the President.

Today, in the name of expediency and in the name of an alleged but nonexistent emergency, the gentleman from Kentucky asks us to place the power to fix rates in the hands of the President. Consistency, thou art a jewel!

USELESS FOR OPPONENTS OF TRADE TREATIES TO RAISE THEIR VOICES

I wish now to make a few brief comments concerning the hearings on the Doughton resolution before the Ways and Means Committee. The minority will be twitted because so few persons appeared in opposition to the bill. There is no use in beating around the bush in connection with this matter. Industry has suffered so much at the hands of the administration and is being so intimidated and regulated so much that it is simply afraid to voice its opinion. I have in my files letters to prove that statement. Moreover, industry realizes that whether it objects or not, whatever the administration advocates will be supinely adopted by this House, and therefore there is no use taking the trouble and going to the expense of coming to Washington to interpose any objections.

VIEW OF UNITED STATES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

I am not insensible to the fact that the United States Chamber of Commerce was represented at the hearings by a witness who, in speaking for the foreign commerce department of that organization, expressed approval of the reciprocal trade program of the administration. However, I call attention to the fact that none of the resolutions of the chamber, as adopted at its annual meetings in the past few years, have expressed unqualified approval of the present trade program. In 1935 the resolution adopted by the chamber of commerce pointed out—

> The importance of our Government establishing some formula, as a guide to the negotiators, to assure that no important American industry, whether it be agriculture, manufacturing, mining, or forests, be menaced by destructive foreign competition.

I call attention to the fact that no such formula is laid down in the act.

In its 1936 resolution the chamber of commerce said:

> In our tariff legislation there should be recognition of the importance of encouraging our export trade. For this purpose the negotiation of reciprocal trade provisions of agreements, so far as consistent with reasonable protection for American industries, and having regard for existing treaties, should be supported.

This resolution also fails to express unqualified approval. There is nothing in the act to require the trade treaties to be negotiated with due regard for reasonable protection for American industries. The gentleman who appeared before the committee representing the chamber was not an American producer but one who was engaged in foreign trade. He admitted that he was a vice president of the American & Foreign Power Co., which had large investments in utilities in foreign countries. Of course, he was in favor of the trade treaty program. So are the international bankers, who want to collect the private loans they have made abroad, even though it be at the sacrifice of some domestic industry.

INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE REPRESENTED AT HEARING

The president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Harper Sibley, also appeared before the committee in behalf of the trade-treaty program, but not in his capacity as an official in that organization. On the contrary, he stated that he was appearing for the purpose of presenting the views of the International Chamber of Commerce, which he described as a federation of businessmen and business organizations of 45 countries throughout the world. Of course, these foreigners and internationalists are for the trade-treaty program. We did not need to be told that. I, for one, resent any suggestions from foreigners as to how we should legislate for the benefit of the countries which they represent. It was a privilege for me to inform Mr. Sibley that some of us, at least, thought it was in very bad taste for the representatives of business organizations abroad to undertake to advise Congress. Evidently Mr. Sibley, in presenting the views of the International Chamber, was acting under the new doctrine enunciated by the State Department that foreign countries have an interest in our tariff rates.

COMMENTS ON TESTIMONY OF CHAIRMAN O'BRIEN, OF TARIFF COMMISSION

In any serious and important hearing as that on the extension of the trade treaties it is well to have the monotony relieved by a bit of levity. This was provided by that supercomedian, the Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, Hon. Robert Lincoln O'Brien. He devoted his time principally to assuring the committee of his Republicanism and his vote for the Republican ticket, although, of course, he is now holding office under a Democratic President.

Mr. O'Brien offered much gratuitous advice similar to that which he gave the committee when the reciprocal-tariff bill was first before Congress. It was also along the same lines as the advice which he tried to give the Republican Party last June, without much success. He placed a value on his services to the Tariff Commission of a dollar a year, and I am inclined to think he is right, especially with the functions of that body under the flexible tariff provisions absolutely nullified under the present policy of reducing tariffs under the trade treaties and no upward adjustments even when necessary.

While protesting his Republicanism—he is so designated as a member of the bipartisan Tariff Commission—he nevertheless admits that he is not in agreement with Republican principles as enunciated in the party platform. He referred to several noted gentlemen as having declared themselves in favor of the Hull reciprocal tariff policy, but perhaps he is as far wrong in quoting from some of these as he was in quoting from Hon. William R. Castle, former Under Secretary of State. I have a letter from Mr. Castle in which he distinctly repudiates Mr. O'Brien's representation of his views.

In his letter to me, Mr. Castle refers to a conversation he had with Mr. O'Brien before the trade-treaty program was put into effect, in which he expressed general approval of the principle of reciprocity, but said that he was opposed to the delegation of sweeping tariff-making powers to the Executive. After the trade-agreement program had been in effect for a time he had another discussion with Mr. O'Brien, and I should like to quote his letter referring to that second discussion:

> Sometime later I discussed the matter again with Mr. O'Brien, and at that time said that I considered it infamous that interests, the very lives of which might be jeopardized, were not given effective public hearings; in other words, that I hated star-chamber proceedings; that I was beginning to be very doubtful whether it was possible to reconcile the most-favored-nation principle with the principle of reciprocity through trade agreements, as at the time I understood it was injuring the country; that I felt more strongly than ever that the agreements should all be referred to Congress for its approval through joint resolution or otherwise. I said that I did not want to see the tariffs lowered indirectly through these trade agreements; that if they were too high, the fact should be frankly admitted and that they should be lowered by Congress.
> Apparently what Mr. O'Brien remembered in making his statement is that I am in favor of reciprocity. This remains true, but it does not in the least follow that I am in favor of the present undemocratic method of making reciprocity agreements.

Sometime ago Mr. O'Brien indicated that Hon. Ogden L. Mills was one of those favoring the Hull method of reciprocity, but I have in my possession a statement from Mr. Mills repudiating any such thought.

Mr. O'Brien said during the hearings that he was already aware of his "failing mental powers", and in my opinion he is as far wrong in his ideas about the present methods of tariff reciprocity as he was about the views of some of the men whom he purported to quote.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE SAYRE AN INGENIOUS WITNESS

In referring to the witnesses who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, I feel I should extend my congratulations to the Assistant Secretary of State, Dr. Francis R. Sayre, who is the most ingenious and best-informed witness I have heard in many years. If trade treaties become a permanent policy of this Government, foreign countries should erect a monument to him while he is still in the flesh in order that he himself may realize to what extent he has contributed through his genius and ability to the tearing down of American industry and agriculture.

I wish also to pay my respects to the able corps of assistants which Mr. Sayre and other Government witnesses had at their sides to supply supplemental information and documents. This same compliment can be paid to all the administration employees who favored us with their presence both on the rostrum, where the committee sits, and in our anteroom, where private telephones are located and which were so generally monopolized by these assistants that at times it was impossible for committee members to receive telephone messages. It may be perfectly in keeping that experts from the State Department, the Tariff Commission, the Department of Commerce, and the Department of Agriculture should constantly furnish members of the majority with memoranda suggesting questions to be put to witnesses while hearings are in progress, but certainly at the recent hearing this was carried on to uncalled-for extremes.

FAVOR M'KINLEY TYPE OF RECIPROCITY AS OPPOSED TO HULL TYPE

In conclusion I want to point out that I have today said nothing against the general principle of reciprocity which underlies the trade-treaty program. As is stated in the minority report on the pending measure, the Republican Party has sponsored reciprocity measures in the past. Reciprocity is an old Republican doctrine. But there are all kinds of reciprocity and the present method is unlike any other that we have had in the past.

It is an unconstitutional method. It is an un-American method. And it is a method which is inimical to the best interests of the American people.

I am for the type of reciprocity that was advocated by the greatest exponent of genuine reciprocity which this country ever had, the late lamented martyred President, William McKinley. In his view, reciprocity and protection for American industries were perfectly consistent with each other. He was a great protectionist and a great expounder of the doctrine of reciprocity. He did not advocate the type of reciprocity that requires the transfer of the tariff-making powers of Congress to the Executive. He did not seek the removal of every tariff duty that tended to limit the amount of competitive foreign products that could pour into our domestic market. Nor did he seek to kill off one domestic industry in what might be a vain attempt to help the export market of another.

M'KINLEY RECIPROCITY RETAINED PRINCIPLE OF PROTECTION

In his inaugural address of March 4, 1897, President McKinley set forth his views on reciprocity. He held that the end in view was always to be—I quote:

> • • • The opening up of new markets for the products of our country by granting concessions to the products of other lands that we need and cannot produce ourselves and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people, but tend to increase their employment.

Now that is an admirable statement as to the purpose of real reciprocity. It contemplates the exchange of mutually beneficial tariff concessions with foreign nations, but it very definitely does not contemplate the removal of protective duties on the articles which we can and do produce in the United States in commercial quantities. I am for the McKinley type of reciprocity as distinguished from the so-called Hull type, as evidenced in the trade treaties that have been negotiated under the measure now being considered.

TRADE-TREATY LAW NOT AN ISSUE IN ELECTION

Just a word in closing about the trade-treaty law as an issue in the last election. It has been suggested that the Republican minority are in no position to oppose the continuation of the Trade Agreements Act since it was passed upon favorably by the people in the 1936 election.

I think we know pretty definitely that the election was not decided on the basis of the vital issues existing between the two major parties, of which reciprocal trade agreements were one. Other considerations, which I need not mention, were primary factors.

PEOPLE WILL NOT BE FOOLED BY FALSE ISSUE OF PEACE

Hence it is idle to say that the people have endorsed the present trade treaty program. They have not, and if we are ever again permitted to hold an election in this country on the actual issues involved they will very clearly show their adverse attitude.

The American people know when they are being "sold down the river." They will not be fooled by the State Department internationalists, who seek to hide the real issue by raising the cry of "Peace! Peace! We must seek peace by allowing foreign competitors to supply our markets." Our people fully realize that their well-being depends upon the preservation of the protective-tariff system, and they will not allow American agriculture, labor, and industry to be destroyed through the injection of this false issue. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN].

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, before I proceed with my 5-minute statement as to the general good of this reciprocal resolution I should like to direct the attention of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who, to use a stock phrase, I have great love and affection for, to the fact that he took the floor and at the beginning of his remarks said among other things that the Ways and Means Committee had brought into the House this reciprocal trade extension resolution without complying with the Ramseyer rule; that it had not abided by the law providing that an amendment to the tariff act shall be set out in the report.

We have not violated the rule in regard to the tariff law.

This has absolutely nothing to do with the tariff law. The Ramseyer rule says under a tariff or any other statute we must amend specifically or directly. We are doing neither in this case. We are not amending the statute, we are not repealing a statute, but we are creating something, so that I hope the gentleman will leave that out of the RECORD, for the preservation of the reputation of the committee of which he and I are members. I know he does not want that there, because I think some day it may come back to plague him.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], stood on his feet here for 1 hour and a half explaining this resolution, and he gave a lucid explanation of it, so much so that any Member here who was paying attention to his explanation could not fail to understand the statement and what the resolution proposes to do. I do not intend to go into a complete analysis of what the resolution does, but I shall content myself in giving a general statement of what benefits we have received since it has been on the statute books and since the President has exercised the power given him 3 years ago.

A little less than 3 years ago President Roosevelt's first administration asked and obtained from Congress emergency powers to enter into trade and tariff agreements with foreign nations, unhampered by the normal requirement of obtaining specific legislative approval for the agreements so made, or for the tariff reductions made under them.

Today we are considering a resolution to extend that authority for a further period of 3 years. In my judgment, such an extension is highly desirable for the best interest of the country.

Upon the passage of the Smoot-Hawley law in 1930, barriers were raised against the free flowing of foreign trade. Since the operation of the reciprocal-trade agreements our trade has increased tremendously. There has been a general expansion in both exports and imports, and this has been instrumental in bringing our shipping back to life. The increase of our foreign trade had had a very beneficial effect upon our domestic welfare. Employment has increased, and will undoubtedly continue to increase. American industry and agriculture has already profited from our growing exports.

If this present arrangement is continued the President will be able to act as an umpire, as it were, and recommend decisions in favor of national rather than sectional interests and take action which will create the greatest number of jobs for the greatest number of our people. This policy has the advantage that it stresses as its goal the improvement in foreign trade of the United States with not just one or two countries but with the entire world.

Ten hours has been set aside for general debate on this bill. The benefits that we have received under its operation is positive proof of the good that it is doing for the entire country. In my opinion, this legislation is so meritorious that we should pass it in an hour.

It developed at the hearings that no individual or organization lodged any strenuous opposition to the extension. As a matter of fact, such organizations as the chamber of commerce and other prominent civic organizations, who opposed the legislation when originally introduced, have changed their viewpoint after realizing the benefits which have accrued. In fact, they now advocate the continuation and have recommended a further extension of 3 years.

I have a letter here from the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, which, with the permission of the Committee, I shall include as a part of my remarks, which letter endorses it very strongly.

BROOKLYN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Brooklyn, N. Y., January 28, 1937.

Hon. THOMAS H. CULLEN,
Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN CULLEN: There is now before your committee House Joint Resolution 96, introduced by Mr. DOUGHTON.

This bill would extend the so-called reciprocal trade agreements law (ch. 350, Tariff Act, 1930, Public, 316, 73d Cong.) for an additional 3 years.

This legislation was carefully considered by the executive committee of this chamber. We feel that by the method provided in the reciprocal trade agreements law the artificial barriers erected against our foreign trade are being gradually removed. Although, unfortunately, world conditions have perhaps prevented our reaping the full benefit of the negotiations thus far completed, there is no doubt that our foreign trade has been improved. The work, however, has but begun. The extended period is necessary to its completion.

We urge expeditious consideration and favorable report.

Respectfully yours,

CARY D. WATERS, President.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DOUGHTON] has given a complete and thorough explanation of the benefits of this legislation. Under the circumstances there is very little that I can add to emphasize my reason for favoring the further extension of these agreements.

This is no time to listen to those who advocate the doctrine of economic isolation. But this is the time to pass such worthy legislation, which will bring to our country a return of prosperity and a rejuvenation of our merchant marine. Furthermore, the policy pursued by our Government has served to strengthen the bonds of friendship between ourselves and other countries.

The Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means were unanimous in reporting the bill, realizing and appreciating the importance of extending the authority for the continuation of this splendid program. Through the extension of our foreign-trade agreements we will witness the continuation of our domestic recovery and an economic standard that will go a long ways toward bringing about permanent peace. The accomplishments of these twin goals will be an achievement that all of us can be proud of. Therefore, it is my conviction that such a sound and sensible proposal should pass the House unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, this House is again asked to abdicate its constitutional authority and to turn over to the Executive the important duty of writing the tariffs of America. Arguments adroitly and skillfully presented have been advanced for the extension of this great power, but they are without foundation in honest economics or sound nationalism.

THE TARIFF OF 1930

One of the oft-expressed reasons why this delegation of power should be made is the claim that the Smoot-Hawley tariff had disastrous effect upon the export trade of America. It is stated that this tariff was so high that it brought retaliatory action and embargoes from foreign countries. The truth is that before the echoes of the last shot fired in the World War had died away England, France, Germany, Italy, and even communistic Russia started building tariff walls. Before that tariff was passed England had abandoned its ancient free-trade policy and become a protectionist country. France immediately sought to be self-contained, and Germany did likewise. The claim as made by the proponents of this measure—that the Smoot-Hawley tariff caused a policy of aggression from the rest of the world—has no foundation in fact. It is the patter of importers and internationalists who desire to exploit America to their own ends. When Secretary Hull and Professor Sayre make this statement they are displaying either a pretended or actual ignorance of the internal and external policies of Europe, as shown by recent history. I urge that the Members of this House exercise intellectual honesty in considering this question and not be led afield by reasons not founded on fact.

The proponents of this measure are also vigorously circulating the conventionalized fiction that the falling off of our foreign trade was due to the tariff of 1930. Every Member of this House whose mind is not submerged by departmental propaganda knows that in 1930 we had a world-wide depression. At that time European countries had no money with which to buy our agricultural or industrial products. Between 1922 and 1929 the American people, on the urging of the international bankers, had loaned Europe $12,000,000,000 of American money. After 1929 the international bankers found that the American people were not going to be led to slaughter any longer, and we then stopped furnishing Europe with buying power.

If the Members of the House on the other side of the aisle will permit their high intelligence to have full play they will recognize the specious character of this argument. Every intelligent economist knows that the loss of buying power in Europe was not due to our international or tariff policy. That contention is not only unsound but it is likewise mendacious.

UNIVERSAL PEACE

There is a third ground urged for the delegation of the tariff-making power to the Executive, namely, that it is America's first duty to insure the peace of the world by turning over the American market to various foreign nations. Secretary Hull and Professor Sayre, who are the chief spokesmen for this program, no doubt honestly believe that they can insure world peace by giving all the nations of the world what they want in the way of tariffs. Both these officials have repeatedly stated that world peace will be obtained if we permit the foreigner to write our tariffs—at least, to write such a tariff as they desire. They believe that if we will but blend our economic destinies with all of the other nations of the world that war will cease to be and the lion will lay down with the lamb.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. For a brief question, because I have been cut down very closely.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman please tell us where we can find a verification of the statement that he has just made with reference to Secretary Hull and Mr. Sayre?

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman give me a little time on that question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Plenty of time.

Mr. CULKIN. Very well. I shall give the House a concrete illustration of that very fact. Last week Mr. Runciman, the president of the Board of Trade of England, was here at the White House conferring with the President. The distinguished chairman of the committee knows that there is a trade agreement pending or suggested with the British Empire; that is, with England and her colonies. Mr. Runciman, according to the well-informed writers of the press, stated to the President that the trade agreement in question was dependent, if you please, on this Congress writing a proper neutrality act. So I say to the gentleman and to the House that through the operation of this policy, the scope of which the distinguished gentleman does not know, this House does not know, the Senate does not know, we are being definitely intertwined with the affairs of Europe.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I think I have answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is that an answer to my question?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; I think it is a fair answer.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman has not touched within 100 miles of it.

Mr. CULKIN. That is a characterization.

When the President sought and obtained the power to make trade agreements without the concurrence of the House and Senate, of necessity he delegated it to the Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull. I yield to no man in my admiration for the high character and ability of our distinguished Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull. When, however, Mr. Hull gets into the realms of tariff and international-trade agreements he becomes a mystic and a dreamer. He is an avowed free-trader.

Placing these treaties under his auspices is like giving the command of the Army to an avowed pacifist or giving a Quaker the command of the Navy. Nor is that all of the story. In turn, Secretary Hull delegated the mechanics of this treaty trading power to the Assistant Secretary of State, Prof. F. B. Sayre. Again the destiny of agriculture and industries passed to the control of an internationalist, who was born and bred in an international atmosphere. To Professor Sayre's mind, any treaty is a good one provided the other country is happy. I listened with great interest to his ingenious presentation of the case of trade agreements to the distinguished Ways and Means Committee. He is the man behind the gun and has the mechanics of these treaties in charge. I have said that he is an ardent internationalist. Let the Members of this House read his book Experiments in International Administration. Professor Sayre has been the recipient of more foreign decorations than any man I know of, for foreign governments thus recognize his loyalty to the principles of internationalism.

Here is the list: Created Phya Kalyan by the King of Siam, 1924; awarded the Grand Cross of Crown of Siam, 1924; Grand Cross of White Elephant (Siam), 1925; grand officer, Order of Orange-Nassau (Netherlands), 1925; knight grand commander, Chula Chom Klao (Siam), 1926; commander, Order of the Danneborg, first class (Denmark), 1926; Grand Cross, Royal Order of Isabel in Catolica (Spain), 1926; Grand Cross of Order of Christ (Portugal), 1926; commander, Order of St. Olav, first class (Norway), 1927; Grand Cross, Order of Crown of Italy, 1927; Grand Officier de Legion d'Honneur (France), 1929.

The fact is that through his speeches and writings he gives America's case away before the actual treaty making begins. The foreign economists and the foreign embassies know his disposition and intent, and the shrewd Frenchman, the able Canadian, and the realistic representatives of other powers take him into camp without difficulty. The significant feature of his appearance before the Ways and Means Committee was that he appeared disguised in the role of a national. His true nature and his basic beliefs are apparent when he speaks before a congress of importers or a group of internationals.

CONTEMPT OF CONGRESS

Both Professor Sayre and Secretary Hull have a complete contempt for Congress.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Briefly.

Mr. COOPER. I challenge that statement.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman does challenge it. He may.

Mr. COOPER. About the distinguished Secretary of State who served with great distinction for 24 years in this body and 2 years in the other body.

Mr. CULKIN. I yielded for a question. I did not yield for a self-serving declaration. The gentleman knows that is not parliamentary procedure. I do not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. COOPER. When the gentleman yields it is not within his province to say what I shall say.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman cannot make improper statements.

Mr. COOPER. Nothing I have said is improper, and it is not within the province of the gentleman to tell me what is proper or improper.

Mr. CULKIN. That is the same bulldozing tactics that went on before the gentleman's committee. It was a shameless performance.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is not a member of the committee and knows nothing about it.

Mr. CULKIN. I was present during the hearings.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman did not yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman press the point of order?

Mr. MILLARD. Not now. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULKIN. Secretary Hull formerly served in this House and should have a sympathetic view of the problems of Congress. But he is impatient and unmannerly under fire and seems to regard Congress as a logrolling venal body, incapable of intelligent action. If the Members of this House will obtain copies of his speeches, they will see what I mean. For myself, having an unshaken belief in the processes of popular government, I resent this.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Briefly.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman served in this House with Secretary of State Hull?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. And most of his speeches were for free trade?

Mr. CULKIN. He appeared here and made those speeches. They smelled of the lamp. They were brilliant and able.

Mr. MILLARD. But always in favor of free trade?

Mr. CULKIN. Always for free trade. Secretary Hull's attitude is reminiscent of the statement of Mussolini—that liberty is a stinking corpse. It is reminiscent of the statement of Hitler—that the whole performance of constitutional government, particularly in the legislative end, is venal and unworthy. For myself, I would rather trust this great Committee than confide the destinies of our Nation to the white-spatted group who are in the Department of State. During our history our Department of State has rarely been outstanding or noteworthy. We had a few years of Jackson, Seward, Blaine, and Olney, but this Department has never been healthful or vigorously national in its conception of the dignity and purposes of America. An invitation to play tennis on the courts of the British Legation, properly placed among the young men who are making over the patterns of America, might well overturn any tariff schedule. This House should remember that the nations of Europe not only hate us but they hate each other with complete abandon. Europe today is a powder keg, and one spark will engulf the whole world in war. What Messrs. Hull and Sayre do with these trade agreements will have no more effect on the future peace of the world than a last year's bird nest.

It is a historical fact that wars have never occurred over trade, but only when territorial aggression threatened. Wars from time immemorial have been for territory or colonies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

DISASTROUS INTERNATIONALISM

Mr. CULKIN. I make bold to call the attention of the House to the results of our last excursion into internationalism. Twenty years ago we entered the World War intent upon saving the world for democracy. In this process we spent $40,000,000,000 and thousands of American lives. Through the influence of our numbers and vast resources the Allies were successful. We took nothing from the world as a result of our participation in the war. We received no territory and asked for nothing save the perpetuation of popular institutions. The result is history. Look at Europe today. Popular government and democracy are wiped out except in England. The dictators of Europe refer to popular government as a sham and delusion. There is no free thought, free press, or freedom of expression over the greater portion of Europe. Then an attempt was made to involve us permanently in the affairs of Europe through the League of Nations. Thrice this policy was rejected by the American people. Europe today owes us $30,000,000,000, the payment of which they have repudiated, with the State Department either silent on the issue or apologetic when it is mentioned. We have no friends today among the nations of the earth, but we have many bitter enemies.

That is all we have accomplished by nearly two decades of insistent meddling into the affairs of the world. Except for this measure under consideration today, "we are back from our crusades, richer perhaps in experience, but poorer certainly by upwards of $30,000,000,000." Thus far, thank God, we are free from entanglements. But if the purposes of Secretary Hull and Professor Sayre are achieved, we will be again up to our necks in the European debacle.

THE FOUNDER'S CONCEPT

If I had my way, I would compel the Secretary of State and his assistant, Professor Sayre, to read daily the concentrated wisdom contained in Washington's Farewell Address. I would make this duty mandatory upon the State Department and all of its branches everywhere in the world. I was somewhat shocked when I heard Professor Sayre quote the historic address in order to sustain his position on these trade agreements. His was a lawyer's plea, but nevertheless, with his beliefs, Sayre profaned this great state paper by its application to this principle.

I am going to include in my remarks several extracts from the familiar address, which are as pertinent today as when they were uttered. The stateliness and power of this address make it a fit compass for our present course. The extracts are as follows:

> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens), the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government.
> The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.
> Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.
> Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, and caprice?

I wish to discuss briefly the volume of the foreign market as compared with our national production.

The size and character of the export market on which the proponents of this policy lay such great stress is nominal. We have not been an exporting nation as compared with the other great powers of the world. For example, the percentage of exports of national production among the world powers is as follows: Great Britain, Germany, and Japan, 20 percent; France, 22 percent; Belgium, 55 percent; Italy, 15 percent; Argentina, 34 percent; and Cuba, 65 percent.

In strong contrast to these percentages is that of the United States, which during the period of our greatest trade amounted to a mere 6 percent of our national production. These figures are challenged by an expert authority, who states that if intercompany relations were eliminated the figures would not amount to more than 3 percent. The Sayre-Hull group and their accompanying cohorts of importers and international bankers ignore the fact that we are almost self-contained. These earnest gentlemen, so intent upon playing international chess with the European dictators, ignore this salient fact. It will interest this House to know that during the time of our greatest prosperity our home market reached the stupendous sum of $90,000,000,000, while the international trade of the entire world amounted to less than $72,000,000,000. To my mind, America has an economic and cultural destiny all its own. America educates its sons and daughters through its high schools and colleges to an outstanding degree. In Europe education is for the few. Creature comforts and cultural advancements are general in America during average times. It is the destiny and function of America to advance the lot of the common man to a point far beyond that sought or achieved in other countries.

The European viewpoint on this is different from ours. There wages are nominal, hours long, and education in the higher branches is lacking.

WILL DESTROY AMERICAN STANDARDS

It is my opinion that the effect of these trade agreements as negotiated by the State Department, will break down and level American standards to the European concept of life.

Carried to their finality, they will defeat what I conceive to be the destiny of America, where the lot of the common man, however humble, is secure. When Professor Sayre prates of international peace and good will, he knows that this can only be accomplished by lowering American standards of living.

PROPAGANDA OUTFITS

Let us call the roll and see who is for these treaties besides Secretary Hull and Professor Sayre. The majority members of this committee are, for once, proud and eager to quote the representative of the United States Chamber of Commerce. Who controls the chamber of commerce? The chamber of commerce is like an army. It travels on its belly. I am creditably advised that two-thirds of the fund of the chambers of commerce are contributed by the automobile industry and by the importers. In this type of organization, the outfit that pays the shot controls the policies. It is significant that big business is no longer interested in tariffs. The small industrialist, who is really the backbone of America, takes a different view.

Through the instrumentality of the international bankers, the big American manufacturers have established plants abroad in practically every country. There they manufacture under low-cost conditions, paying starvation wages, and sell the products so produced in these foreign lands. I wonder, does Professor Sayre know about that and the extent to which it has gone? The English, German, French, and Italian manufacturers stay on their home ground when they manufacture for the world. They are loyal to the localities and states where the industries were originally created. Adequate laws in Italy, Germany, and England, prevent the flight of domestic capital to foreign countries for the purpose of establishing such plants.

The American manufacturers who have plants abroad, are now completely indifferent to the question of tariff. They enjoy the American market of 120 million people and manufacture for that market here in America. The foreign market is cared for as I have stated. We should take a leaf from the book of these foreign countries and forbid the flight of capital from America for the purpose of building up a foreign manufacturing business. I confess that I do not know the formula for this, but the distinguished and able gentlemen on the committee of both parties who have given this subject so much thought, should initiate legislation to that end. It will, I am sure, have the hearty support of all thinking Members of Congress. He who runs may read that these treaties have had a detrimental effect on American exports, while they have stimulated to a marked degree the importation of foreign commodities, and manufactured products.

Assistant Secretary of State Sayre, before the committee, made this admission, but gave as an alibi, that the treaties had not yet had sufficient time to establish their effectiveness, "The proof of the pudding is in the eating", and the said chamber of commerce through its publication, the Washington Review for January 11, 1937, establishes my point.

I quote from that report:

> The foreign trade of the United States for the first three quarters of 1936, was marked by an expansion of exports and is still more pronounced in increase in imports, its total reaching $3,500,000,000, the largest since 1930. * * * The quantity of exports was 10 percent greater than in 1935 and was 7 percent above the 5-year average. The value of imports for the three quarters of 1936 was $1,767,000,000, and exceeded the 1935 9-months' figures by 17 percent and the 5-year average by 38 percent.

Thus unwittingly does the publication of the chamber of commerce establish the failure of these treaties, and no amount of pious declarations about world peace can alter these figures.

I have no hesitancy in saying that every American influence for these treaties was characterized either by star-eyed idealism or tarred with self-interest.

AGRICULTURE IS OPPOSED

I wish to call as witness on these treaties organized American agriculture. May I remind the House that in the 1932 platform of both parties, repeated in 1936, was the promise to give agriculture parity with industry. I was one of those who voted for the A. A. A. on the theory that agriculture should be given its place in the sun. May I state that the condition of agriculture in America and the low price which was received was due to surpluses. May I say further, that every single treaty that has been made by the State Department will add to agricultural surpluses in normal years. The State Department having nothing else to trade, traded American agriculture, particularly the dairying group. Ample figures have been presented here during the course of debate substantiating that statement. Organized agriculture in America is ably represented in Washington, and while I do not claim to be a technician in this field, I am glad to take the statistics and economic calculations of such men as Fred Brenkman, representing the Grange, and Charles Holman, representing the National Dairy Products Cooperatives. I will not tire you with a discussion of figures, but will emphasize the point that organized agriculture and farm organizations are united in the protest against all or some of the phases of this trade-agreement law. I was particularly impressed with the protest of the representatives of dairymen against the procedure adopted in all of these treaties, of tieing the hands of the United States on sanitary laws and regulations. In the cause of international peace, President Roosevelt's reciprocal trade treaty writers have tendered to foreign nations joint power to legislate on American sanitary food regulations. This action tosses to the winds the American dairyman's effort to provide American childhood with a pure and healthful supply of dairy products. To this splendid cause, Federal and State Governments to date have contributed $270,000,000 and dairymen have spent another $200,000,000 to eliminate diseased cattle and comply with sanitary regulations. As a result, our infant mortality is far below that of any other country of the world, while the average span of life in America has been extended some 10 years. The House should remember that no other country has even made a start on sanitary regulations on dairy products.

How would a Member of this House like the idea of eating butter from Russia and some of the other European countries not distinguished for their hygienic standards? Yet Professor Sayre in every one of these treaties stipulates that we can make no sanitary regulations as to imports and the character of the production unless the other country consents. In other words, these other countries who have done nothing in the field have joint power to legislate on our sanitary requirements which are calculated to protect the health and welfare of the American people. The dairymen of America protest vigorously against this injustice. Professor Sayre views the imposition of proper sanitary regulations on imports as a stumbling block in the path of universal peace. It is interesting to note in the hearing that the representatives of the Department of Agriculture, including Secretary Wallace, did not appear on behalf of this measure. Manifestly, Secretary Wallace has finally discovered that agriculture is being sold down the river in these treaties.

The only answer the proponents of this measure make to these protests is to say that the price of dairy products has gone up. They ignore or are ignorant of the fact that due to drought conditions, which were universal in the country last year, the cost of producing the Nation's supply of dairy products has more than doubled.

They say that the imports constitute but a small percentage of the national production and consumption. The fact is, that the great corporations which are marketing dairy products and have a strangle hold on prices time the arrival of these foreign shipments so as to break down the market price on dairy products.

This House knows of the historic fight to obtain the market for American fats and oils. Professor Sayre again showed his contempt for Congress by tying on the free list for 3 years palm and babassu oils, which take the place of our domestic fats and oils in our national economy. The spectacle of Congress delegating to the Executive the power to tie the hands of future Congresses on internal taxation is humiliating to the last degree, but the group of internationalists in the Department of State who are in charge of these matters are greedy for more legislative power.

MADE IN THE DARK

I wish to say a word about the mechanics of these treaties. During the past 2 years they have been conducted in secret. Agriculture could not learn what schedules were under consideration. A Member of Congress could not learn what treaties were under consideration. The majority members of this committee, potent as they are, could not learn what was in the minds of the august Mr. Sayre and his associates in the State Department. To my mind, this procedure is a negation of true democracy. Here were these white-spatted gentry making over the pattern of agriculture and industry in America, and America could not learn what was contemplated except through their foreign correspondents. All of the other nations took their nationals into counsel and gave them a hearing on the items affected.

At the proper time an amendment will be proposed to this act requiring that these hearings will be in the open and that our nationals affected by these treaties receive due notice and have an opportunity to be heard. I hope the legislative integrity of the House will assert itself on this proposition. I do know that if the House does not do this the Senate will.

Let me give you an illustration of what I have in mind. In the treaty with Holland the duty on bulbs was cut in half and the quarantine regulations were removed. The representatives of this phase of American agriculture could only get the information on the progress of these treaties through translation of articles in the Dutch trade journals, and an interesting story is current about that. The official in the Agricultural Department in charge of the technical side of the quarantine turns out to be the familiar and friend of the young men in the Dutch Legation here. He plays golf with them, and it would be strange indeed if such an association were not productive of results. Of course, that is its obvious purpose. On the other hand, the farmers of the West, who had built up the bulb industry in America, producing 600 varieties, free from disease, were treated by him as though they were outlanders. I wonder how many of these treaties turn upon such influence? I know that these treaties, so bred in the dark, so far as our nationals are concerned, constitute the most outrageous chapters in the administrative life of America.

These treaties should be ratified by the Senate. The National Grange, the parent organization among the farmers, demand this. The dairymen demand it. The Farm Bureau Federation sounds a fainter note, but they are compelled to ask that adequate provision be made for public hearing and that the provision be made into law. They also, in common with other agricultural bodies, protest the favored-nation clause.

In conclusion, let me again urge with all the force of which I am capable that this legislation is not even remotely emergency legislation. That contention is a sham. Let me urge that this House assert its legislative integrity by keeping its hands on legislation which has to do with the well-being of every American, big and little. The world obviously wants none of our interference in its affairs. Let us preserve our home market for our farmers and industries and put an end to this outrageous internationalism which is destroying America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] has again expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the chairman of the committee, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I have no prepared speech. I did not contemplate making any remarks on this bill until I listened to my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], who just preceded me. I am sure he used poor judgment, due to a lack of facts, in his criticism of Secretary Hull and Mr. Sayre. The Members of the House, including the Republicans, know that Secretary Hull is one of the greatest statesmen this Nation has ever produced. He is a man whose motives could not be impugned by even his bitterest enemy. The Republicans say Mr. Hull is a free-trader. I have heard him say repeatedly that he was not for free trade.

He said Secretary Hull and Mr. Sayre have a contempt for legislation and a contempt for this House. There never was a more false and misleading statement. These gentlemen need no defense and I would not detract from their high standing, statesmanship, and Americanism by offering an excuse or defense. They have performed the almost impossible; they are making friends of our enemies and bringing back to America trade which we lost under Republican misrule.

The gentleman from New York talked about tariff matters with which I think he is not familiar. It is an old dodge to say that the Democrats have stood for free trade. We have never stood for free trade. For the first 60 years of the history of this Government, when the Democrats built the foundation and laid the cornerstones upon which this country rests, the Democratic Party stood for import duties, now known as a tariff. We have always been in favor of an import tax, or a tariff, which would equalize the cost of production in this country as against the cost of production in foreign countries; we have always been for protecting labor, but we have always been bitterly opposed to what is known as a high protective tariff that protects not the consumer, protects not the Government in the income that is received, but protects the private industries of this country.

When the Nation was young, we threw our protecting arms around industry in order that foreign competition and big moneyed interest would not drive it out of business. At last this child grew to full manhood. It became rich and opulent; and instead of protecting the people, it came to Congress and demanded unreasonable protection. It was then that we decided that industry, seeking this unreasonable high tariff, should no longer be protected, but the consuming public and the Nation generally should be protected as against these industries which had grown rich and opulent. About this time the Republican Party was born, and when it came into power it pursued a policy of high protective tariff and unjust protection of industry. This, together with a sentiment resulting from the War between the States, maintained itself in power for a long time. They even went so far that they passed the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act in 1929. That law was nothing more than a grab. That law was so strong that if a manufacturer in this country could manufacture a suit of clothes and sell it for a profit at $40 they, through this tariff, added another $10 as protection for the rich industry of this country, and when they sold that suit to me or to you the $10 was added to the price. Foreign merchants could not compete with such a tariff against them. Instead of this $10 going into the pockets of labor, instead of its going into the Treasury, it went into the hands of protected industry. By such procedure protected private industry accumulated the wealth of the country and got America into the condition in which we found ourselves in 1932.

When the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was pending every economist in the United States—and there were a thousand of them—unanimously petitioned this Congress not to pass that law. Every nation in the world held up its hands in holy horror, in substance saying, "If you pass that law we will retaliate." England, free-trade England, with which we always dealt, retaliated. Every nation in the world retaliated. They built barriers against our trade that had never theretofore been conceived of by the mind of man. Not only did they do that but they adopted a system of quotas and embargoes. These were placed in charge of special governmental agencies, which could change conditions overnight. We might send a shipload of American products to France and find that the quotas and embargoes had been changed during the course of the voyage, and when the American products arrived in France they were sacrificed. This was brought about by this high protective tariff law the Republicans passed.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to my courteous friend.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thank you. Has the gentleman in mind the tariff rate on tomatoes and staves?

Mr. FULLER. Yes. I will tell the gentleman what I did. That was such a good grab basket and the getting was so easy that I got some of it for myself. I got a tariff of 50 percent on canned tomatoes, which I still think was just. Then, when I left and went home, the first thing they did was to scold me because I did not vote for that bill. Why, you could get anything. Florida got protection on all the foodstuffs they raised, and they all voted for the bill—and fumigated themselves afterward. [Laughter.]

My good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], and he is my good friend, and I very much admire him—he is the coldest-blooded Yankee I think I ever saw in my life, but a good fellow with it. He is still wedded to the golden calf, high protective tariff. [Laughter.] He realizes that there is nothing they can ask for as a substitute for this measure.

The gentleman talked about Santa Claus in the last campaign. Who played Santa Claus? The Democratic Party, because we found the country a destroyed, a desolate Nation. In less than 6 months after the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act the stock market broke, banks closed, and soon there were soup houses and bread lines all over the Nation. Was it brought about by Democracy? Nobody ever said we brought about that panic. It was brought about by this high protective tariff and the enmity and hatred of the nations of the world it lined up against us.

Our exports in 1929, when this Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was passed, were $5,500,000,000. In less than 2 years they dropped to $1,600,000,000, and dropped steadily thereafter until we inaugurated this reciprocal trade agreement policy. Through this policy we have restored our foreign trade until last year we had an excess of exports of $34,000,000 over imports. To me this is remarkable, since we have only consummated 15 agreements.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. And it dropped from over $5,000,000,000 to $1,600,000,000 and threw 2,000,000 Americans out of work.

Mr. FULLER. Yes. Thanks for the contribution.

Mr. Chairman, here is what happened to the country: It was stated that over in the old country there was a depression, and that is what caused the depression at home. Oh, no. Because my neighbor does not work and has not accumulated anything is no reason why I am going to starve. That is just an alibi. It is nothing but a death-bed sentence and an effort to try to escape the penalty.

When that bill was passed, factories moved from America to Canada and everywhere else. Business was in a state of stagnation. The farmers could not sell anything. They could not even get enough money to buy a little chewing tobacco. I know because I associate with them and am one of them. They could not pay taxes or interest. They could not buy from the little store. The little storekeeper could not buy from the wholesale house. The wholesaler could not buy from the manufacturer; therefore, the manufacturer closed down. The smokestacks fell down and they went into bankruptcy. Bread lines prevailed all over this country; and just as certainly as God reigns over us you gentlemen know that this high protective-tariff law was responsible. You do not dare make this high protective law an issue except in a few places. You started to say something about it in the last campaign, but what happened? Every time you opened your mouth you put your foot in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the manufacturers and the big business of this country are not for that bill. The brains of this country know what has caused the panic and depression in this Nation and they are not for the high protective Smoot-Hawley law. Few of the Republicans are at heart for that law; but you have to do something to keep up your courage, just like the Negro going through a graveyard. You have to holler a little just to try to leave the impression you are not afraid.

Our foreign export trade had been entirely wiped out. How on earth could we get it back? Do any of you want to venture the thought or suggestion we should repeal or modify the Smoot-Hawley tariff law? That could not be the remedy because foreign nations would flood our markets and still retain their high tariff and quota walls against us. We have to beg and plead with them and make concessions.

We have consummated 15 reciprocal-trade agreements. Of course, all of them are not perfect. Even Secretary Hull will continue to make a few mistakes, because he is only human like everyone else. But he is really doing something for America. He is bringing back the trade to this country, causing our exports to exceed our imports. Do you know that no one appeared before our committee to fight this bill who represented the manufacturers or big business in this country? Not an outspoken Republican, as a Republican, appeared before our committee in opposition. The only people who appeared before us in opposition to it were those who thought they had received a little harsh treatment or who were engaged to represent agriculture, and they were all for this measure. Of course, there were some lawyers who had received some benefits but wanted a little more. They wanted to know why we did not leave it up to the Senate to ratify these trade agreements. But you and I know that would kill the effect of the bill, and if we did that we might as well not have any bill at all.

They talked to us about having made a reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada concerning cattle. I am engaged in the cattle business and feel that I am informed on this matter. Almost as many cattle came into the United States in 1935, when they had to pay a tariff, as in 1936. We made a treaty with Canada whereby we permitted 155,799 cattle over 700 pounds in weight to be imported by paying $2 per hundred instead of the $3 regular tariff rate, and we permitted 51,933 calves under 175 pounds in weight to be imported at $1.50 per hundred instead of $2.50, the former rate. In addition to this there was imported into this country from Canada and Mexico 190,000 which paid the full tariff rate. In 1929, when prime beef cattle were selling at the farm for $9.15, Canada exported into this country 247,000. Very little was imported after that, due to the low price, until 1935, when 112,720 were imported from Canada, paid tariff, and obtained approximately $6.25 per hundred for beef cattle. Cattle have always been and will always be imported into our country when we have a good market, but never come upon a poor market. The Canadian cattle agreement will not affect the market three-fourths of 1 percent of the American cattle slaughtered. Even at the 1936 rate of import of cattle from Canada, it would take over a quarter of a century for the number to reach the cattle taken off the market by the Federal Government under the present administration in 1934. When Canada was importing practically no cattle in 1931, 1932, 1933, and 1934, it was due to the fact cattle were selling for the lowest price in the last 30 years because of the Republican panic.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the gentleman be willing to talk cattle with me for a minute?

Mr. FULLER. I do not believe I can do that now. But I want to sell the gentleman some this fall. He may ask any question he desires.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the gentleman familiar with the testimony of Professor Sayre given before the committee with respect to the importations of Canadian cattle?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; I think I am.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman recollect that the professor pointed out the decrease in price in the first 6 months of 1936 was confined very, very largely to prime finished steers?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; I remember that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And to demonstrate that the importation of Canadian cattle did not bring about, or was not responsible for this reduction, he stated that the overwhelming proportion, I think 80 percent, of the imports from Canada were of medium steers?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Arkansas is in the cattle business, as he has admitted and confessed.

Mr. FULLER. And as the gentleman knows.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will make the same confession. Does the gentleman not understand, and I am sure he does, when a market such as St. Paul or Buffalo is suddenly flooded with a great deluge of medium-priced or medium-quality steers that it demoralizes the whole market, including the prime-steer market?

Mr. FULLER. It has that tendency.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Sayre completely overlooked that.

Mr. FULLER. I want to complete my statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman remembers also that Professor Sayre testified the seasonal decrease in the price of prime beef was greater than on the cattle which came in from Canada?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; but I think I know as much about what caused that decrease as Mr. Sayre, and I see at least five or six from the cattle country who will concur with my views.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. I think the gentleman will recall that in the course of discussions on this matter it was pointed out by Dr. Sayre that these importations extended over a period of 10 months during the year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; go ahead and ask the question, but I want to conclude my argument.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman has been very kind and courteous to me. Let me make this suggestion. Regardless of the wisdom of the quota provision admitting Canadian and Mexican cattle to this country, which totaled about 170,000——

Mr. FULLER. Approximately 207,000, including the calves.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And to keep the record straight, 156,000 cattle.

Mr. FULLER. You have reference to those over 700 pounds.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Regardless of what that number is and regardless of the merits involved, the vice of the thing is that the Canadians dumped their entire quota on us in the first 5 months of the year and demoralized our markets. If it had been distributed throughout the 12 months it would have been a very different thing, but it is a fact, as was brought out in your committee hearings by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], that the St. Paul market was absolutely demoralized by a flood of medium-priced cattle, which not only brought down the price of medium cattle but brought down the price of prime cattle, and the market at Buffalo experienced the same thing, and the American feeders, both of medium and prime cattle, took an awful licking.

Mr. FULLER. Now, let me finish my statement about that, because I live in the cattle country and know something about the conditions that prevailed. That was not the cause of the decline in the market at all, notwithstanding what you say Dr. Sayre said, or anybody else may say. As everybody in this House who is a cattleman knows, in 1935 they raised good crops out in that country and all the farmers who could afford to buy them, started to feed steers. This is what is known as prime beef, and they sell this before the 1st of June. They had to sell it this year, and what made the matter worse was that we had the worst drought west of the Mississippi River that was ever known.

It was a scourge, and the people in my country and out West shipped their cattle in all kinds of condition. Thoroughbreds and everything else were shipped to the market. They would take any price they could get, and they had to do this because of lack of water and lack of feed. You could not buy feed for them. It was either this or allowing them to starve or choke. The condition was such in the markets of the country that the big farmers out West had orders in saying, "Wire me when you can accept some more cattle and I will ship them to you." They did ship them, and that would break any market in the world. They got so many cattle on the markets of the United States that even the slaughterhouses could not begin to take care of them. It was the drought that caused all of the trouble.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman would not state that that condition existed in the winter of 1936?

Mr. FULLER. No; and it did not apply to Canada in 1936. Canada filled its quota in October.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They had finished filling their quota at that time, but the great bulk of it was filled in the winter before the drought started, and the great break in the market was in the winter.

Mr. FULLER. No; you are badly mistaken. Farmers sell their prime beef—corn-fed cattle—in the spring and early summer, when through the winter. They do not want to turn fat cattle on grass and lose flesh. They hold that fat by feeding corn and grain. This is what Canada did, and all these cattle were brought in during the summer; but what Canada did to us under that treaty is infinitesmal, insofar as affecting the market is concerned.

Of course, I will have to agree with you that I would rather we had not made that agreement, but we had to make it. I wish we could have gotten away from it. [Applause.] But, listen. We cannot live unto ourselves. America cannot build a stone or a Chinese wall around itself and tell everybody else to go to the bow-wows. We cannot sell to Canada unless Canada is able to buy from us. We cannot sell to France and England, because they have not the money to pay, and therefore we cannot ship to them unless we negotiate an agreement to let them ship something in here; and do you know what we received under this agreement with Canada? We got 125 concessions on agriculture for ourselves and there were only 25 advantages in articles where they got a reduction.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Arkansas 5 additional minutes.

Mr. FULLER. From Canada we got a tariff reduction on sheep, lambs, and goats of 33 percent; live hogs, 20 percent; horses, 50 percent; beef, veal, mutton, and lamb (fresh), 25 percent; canned meat and extract, 14 percent; bacon, hams, and pork, 65 percent; sausages, lard, and tallow, 14 percent.

We got the best of the deal, and by such an agreement they had money with which to buy our products.

You realize there is nothing in the statement that America can live by herself. We like to brag and boast about such things just like I have made speeches in my own State saying that you could build a Chinese wall around Arkansas and she could live, but that is all a farce. What we want from the European countries is for them to make concessions so we can send them what we produce, and all we want from them is what we do not produce, what our people demand, and what they have the money to pay for. The only way we can sell them our goods is to make concessions to them. This is the whole thing in a nutshell and there is not any other argument you can suggest.

There has not been and will not be offered a substitute for this great measure which is forcing back our export trade and prosperity for America.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman has made a very interesting observation referring to the cattle statement by the gentleman from New York. I would like to remind the House of something in connection with the gentleman's remarks in that field.

It is hard to appraise the very slight concessions given Canada in the trade agreement. In the first 6 months of 1933, 468 head of Canadian cattle came across the border.

Farm income from cattle, $175,000,000. First 6 months of 1936, 158,000 came in and farm income was $382,000,000, an increase of more than 118 percent. It is difficult to understand how people can complain about that kind of a situation in the face of what happened to cattlemen during 1932, when we were operating under the highest protective tariff in our history.

Mr. FULLER. I did not catch all that the gentleman said but I wish to say that the gentleman from New York and others have said that there was a great danger that this would allow the shipping of diseased cattle from Argentina. There is no danger of shipping cattle with the foot-and-mouth disease from other countries. We have another law governing this matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that under the treaty with Canada our exports have increased more than the imports?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; a great amount.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman in his remarks stated the Democratic policy has been for a sufficient tariff to meet the difference in cost of production. The gentleman means that the Democratic policy is still for a tariff which will cover the difference in cost of production. The gentleman would not advocate any tariff that would permit the importation of agricultural products into this country that would ruin the market of the producers of this country.

Mr. FULLER. In all probability your question means that you think you got a bad deal on your fruit as against Cuba. [Laughter.] We have to legislate for the whole country and not for some particular locality.

There is a grave doubt as to whether or not the agreement with Cuba was injurious to Florida. But, after all, all parts of the country do not benefit under a general law. The general welfare of the entire Nation should be considered. The Canadian cattle agreement caused much excitement amongst the cattlemen of the West, and for that reason I would have been pleased had the agreement not been made. However, I believe that it was necessary and I am firmly convinced the cattlemen will receive no injury by reason thereof. Farmers and agriculture generally need have no fear of this administration. Under the leadership of our great President it has done more for farmers in the last 4 years than has been done for agriculture in the Nation's history. The constant aim is to so protect the farmer that he will receive at least the cost of production. Since the cattlemen feel that they have made a concession, it would naturally follow that others should make concessions, if necessary, for the general welfare of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, in my prepared statement I express gratification over the fact that apparently we have reached the point in our national life where we can discuss the tariff as an economic issue. But when I hear a colleague, a distinguished Member of this body, stand on this floor and say that a democratic Secretary of State has a supreme contempt for the legislative body and expresses in his speeches and writings the attitude of a Hitler, who said that liberty is a stinking corpse; when I hear such a colleague say that the efforts of a democratic Secretary of State to make some contribution to world peace in order that 8,000,000 men may not again be plunged into the horrors of another world war, where they will be saluted by the arsenals of hell—that such efforts on the part of Secretary Hull indicate he is a mystic and a dreamer—I admit that such unjust charges stir in me feelings of resentment, and if I am not to disprove my own statement in my prepared remarks that we can calmly and dispassionately discuss as an economic issue national policies with respect to tariff legislation, it will be necessary for me to confine myself to my prepared statement.

The fact that our present form of government has lasted for 150 years is not in itself any guaranty of its perpetuity. The happenings of the past decade in foreign nations are of themselves sufficient evidence to prove that a particular form of government is not self-perpetuating. We know that we have a form of government best suited to the American people of any that has ever been devised, and under which there is a maximum of liberty, which we so highly prize, and a maximum of opportunity for the individual. But it must be a source of some concern to thoughtful students of public affairs to note the rapid development of groups that would influence legislative action for their own benefit regardless of the effect upon other elements of society. In legislative matters we should give more regard to fundamental principles and less to group demands.

The spirit of gross materialism that was the reaction to the idealism that actuated us during the World War brought us to grief. And that grief emphasized the necessity for a new spirit of liberalism. The president of Princeton University said last fall that—

> Practical liberalism, in essence, is the disposition of the man who looks upon each of his fellows as of equal worth with himself. It emphasizes the value of the human spirit.

The same thought was expressed by James Truslow Adams in his recent book on Jefferson when he said:

> Without Hamilton the new nation might have disintegrated; without Jefferson it would have lost its soul and the faith that makes it different from others.

It is difficult for one to reach a rational conclusion with respect to tariff policies without frankly asking himself the question whether he proposes to be a special pleader for group benefits or one who believes in the type of "practical liberalism" as defined by the president of Princeton University. The division of thought and action on this subject stems from the foundation of our Government and the conflicting views of Hamilton and Jefferson. Hamilton desired to see the establishment of an industrial nation, with industrial wealth fostered by means of a protective tariff. Jefferson, whose heart was always with agriculture, felt that the peace and happiness of the new nation would be best promoted by tariff laws that would not give industry an undue advantage over agriculture. And our early tariff laws were framed with that in view. But 3 years after Jefferson's death a tariff law was passed which southern agriculture regarded as being oppressive and which occasioned the nullification act of South Carolina—the first intimation of an economic split that was to plunge the Nation into an armed camp 33 years later.

Speaker Champ Clark said that when he first entered the Congress Mr. Dingley said to him:

> The tariff is the whole government. Learn the tariff.

That was literally true. But, instead of being treated as a great economic issue, it was treated as a political issue, especially after the great industrial interests of the North obtained full and undisputed control of the Government following the War between the States. It has been a source of satisfaction to me to note in recent years a tendency among statesmen, as well as among economists, to treat the tariff as an economic issue. It has been a difficult thing for many of us to put aside inherited prejudices and to adopt the view of Daniel Webster, expressed in his great speech on the tariff bill of 1824, when he said:

> With me it is a fundamental axiom, it is interwoven with all of my opinions, that the great interests of the country are united and inseparable; that agriculture, commerce, and manufactures will prosper together or languish together; and that all legislation is dangerous which proposes to benefit one of these without looking to consequences which may fall on the others.

Those were not the principles on which the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill of 1930 was based. That tariff bill was the ultimate expression of selfish group action to protect itself from foreign competition of every kind, regardless of the effect the action might have on agriculture, commerce, or the welfare of the general consumer.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] quoted from a former Republican Secretary of the Treasury and also from a great and beloved and distinguished Republican President of the United States, and said that he favored the principles of trade enunciated by those two distinguished Republicans. I shall quote from both of those gentlemen, and I hope my friend from Massachusetts will not see fit to change his position with respect to following their leadership. This is what Ogden Mills said in November of 1934 at Topeka:

> We will have to abandon the present policy of isolation and intense nationalism and to some extent modify recent tariff practices. This may sound strange, coming from an orthodox Republican, but I have never understood that a sound system of protection, based upon the cost of production at home and abroad, if intelligently applied, means the erection of impassible tariff barriers, the destruction of our commerce with the rest of the world, and the sacrifice of the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer.

I particularly call your attention to those striking words—

> The sacrifice of the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer.

And Mr. Mills added:

> I am prepared to take my stand with a great Republican President, who, in his last speech, delivered in Buffalo just before his assassination, said: "A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in the fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Just for a brief question.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would the gentleman have any objection to having these trade agreements limited to noncompetitive articles?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Absolutely I would, because as I shall explain later, the thing that we want to do with the other nations of the world is to trade, and there is no greater fallacy than to believe that you cannot profitably trade with a man unless you can get a sort of David Harum advantage of him.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would the gentleman favor an amendment to this resolution limiting the reductions effected in future trade agreements to a point that is not below local domestic costs?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Absolutely I would not agree to that, because it is thoroughly impractical. In the first place, there are some items that can be produced in foreign countries much more cheaply than by some inefficient industry in this country. We should sell what we can efficiently produce for what the other fellow can more efficiently produce than we, and then, if we undertake to go into the question of costs, there are 30,000 items involved in international commerce, and how could we possibly have enough missions to send all over the world to seventy-some nations to find out what is the cost of this or that. Then the cost would vary because of many different factors, just like the cost of automobiles vary, as between Mr. Ford, who produces efficiently and economically, and the Hupp Motor Co., say, that never did learn efficient mass production.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And was it not clearly stated before the committee that even with regard to items, say, in this country, it would take months and more than a year in many instances to determine the cost of production, and then the cost of production would be different from the cost of production when the inquiry started; further, what power would we have to ascertain the foreign cost?

Mr. ROBERTSON. None in the world; and when my distinguished colleagues in the committee, who are opposing this resolution, want to put that restriction in and want to put in the restriction that agreements must go to the Senate to be ratified, together with the other five points of their so-called indictment, I remarked to my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] that apparently they were saying to Mr. Hull, "We want you to enter into a world-trade race, but first let us cut off both wour legs."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Just one more.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the gentleman hear the very able statement of Mr. WILCOX, a Representative from Florida, before the committee?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I heard his statement and I heard the statement of others that in the sum total of benefits which Florida had received she had gained in new markets in Canada and elsewhere more than she had lost on her tomatoes, her butter beans, and her peppers.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In connection with the quotation of the speech made by the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ogden Mills, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Governor Landon, in the last campaign, at Minneapolis made a speech in favor of reciprocal-trade agreements, differing in some of the details with the present law, but absolutely coming out in favor of the reciprocal trade agreement principle.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is no Republican now so prejudiced over the political issues we have fought for 60 or more years over this tariff who does not admit that foreign trade is desirable. They cannot consistently do so. They cannot do it, but they are so afraid that some little protected industry may have some of the unreasonable protection of the Smoot-Hawley tariff withdrawn that they attempt to obstruct any program that would give us substantial results.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman name any tariff on any agricultural product under the Hawley-Smoot tariff or any former Republican tariff bill which he considers too high?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not propose to be drawn into a discussion of specific tariff duties, but if the gentleman will give opportunity, I will tell him what the Hawley-Smoot tariff has done to one farm commodity in which he is interested as well as I if he will permit me to proceed.

Mr. MOTT. May I ask this question then? Does the gentleman think that any existing agricultural product tariff is too high?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think if we can ever get back to normal production in American agriculture, get back the good will of foreign nations, unchoke the channels of commerce, we will not need any protection for American agriculture, because we will be exporting as we did for 150 years.

Mr. MOTT. I take it the gentleman does not care to answer my question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not have the time to go into the details of that.

Representing one of the largest apple-exporting districts in the United States, I have had a good opportunity to observe how the efficient apple producer was sacrificed by that tariff policy to save the inefficient manufacturer. Prior to the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff, American apples entered the ports of every nation in the world free of duty or other restrictions. After the enactment of that bill, 26 nations which were the principal importers of American apples placed restrictions upon our apples, including tariffs, quotas, and in some instances, complete embargoes. Not only was the shipment of American apples greatly restricted but the American shipper was forced to pay a tariff ranging from about $1.50 a barrel in Great Britain to $9 a barrel in Poland. Normally the Shenandoah Valley area shipped 2,000,000 barrels of apples to Great Britain. A tariff of $1.50 a barrel on 2,000,000 barrels amounts to a tax on the apple producers of that area of $3,000,000 per year. But the tax was not the worst feature; we lost our foreign markets. Our export apples were thrown into competition on the domestic market with apples from the State of Oregon, represented by Mr. MOTT, and other States in the West, and other sections of the country, with ruinous prices to all. Consequently the loss to the apple producers of the United States by reason of the tariff war we started ran into millions of dollars.

Every apple producer in the country now realizes that a foreign outlet for surplus production is the largest single factor in determining his domestic price. The president of the International Apple Association, speaking in Boston last fall with respect to the negotiation of reciprocal-trade agreements for apples, said:

> This has involved a staggering amount of work and that alone is sufficient to engage the time and effort of every organization. Great progress has been made, particularly in view of the almost solid trade-barrier walls that confronted the industry. Now that a beginning has been made, every effort should continue to be directed to the further opening of trade channels. We have been committed to this principle for the last 6 years and I recommend that the policy be continued.

I do not believe that there is a Member of this House who represents commercial apple producers who does not endorse the sentiment expressed by the president of the International Apple Association.

After we had started a world-trade war by our unreasonable and selfish tariff policies we lost in 2 years some $6,000,000,000 of foreign trade, which, according to a report of the Department of Commerce, had furnished employment for 2,000,000 American workmen. The loss of foreign trade fell heavily upon American agriculture.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the gentleman contend that the $6,000,000,000 loss was solely the result of these tariff policies?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Not solely, but largely; and we started a process in the world which caused the great nations of the world to think as Germany thought—that they could be economically self-contained—and world trade dropped from thirty-three billion to eleven billion, when it should have gone up to some forty or forty-five billion dollars. There was no occasion for the tremendous drop in world trade that happened following what we did in 1930, just to be selfish and trying to be self-contained.

Mr. BREWSTER. Do I understand the gentleman does not think the tariff rates should be governed by our costs?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Democratic Party in its Chicago platform adopted the Republican position of cost of domestic production.

Mr. BREWSTER. And now the gentleman says that is impossible to determine?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I say that that is a good slogan, but very difficult of practical application.

Mr. BREWSTER. Now, if we are not to be guided by that which had the endorsement of both political parties, by what lamp would the gentleman guide tariff negotiations?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Well, we do follow that as a general guide, and where there is a nation, for instance, involving peon labor, like they have in India, or coolie labor like they have in China, or, on the other hand, if it is a nation like Germany which, in its effort at barter and exchange, has practically excluded the products of every nation, including ours, and brought itself to financial chaos and bankruptcy, then we do draw the line.

Mr. BREWSTER. Then you do take account of costs?

Mr. ROBERTSON. To some extent, and I think you cannot point to a single one of the 15 treaties that have been so far negotiated where that has not been given its due weight in the consideration of it and the concessions that have been made.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The gentleman wants to mention his tomatoes again?

Mr. WILCOX. No. If the gentleman will yield, I just want to call the gentleman's attention to one treaty where the matter of difference in cost of production was not considered, and that is the treaty with Cuba.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The representative of the State Department, as I understand, stated that consideration had been given to that, but that the advantages which we got from Cuba were so outstanding that they felt they were justified in making the concessions that they did with respect to fresh vegetables. Look at our favorable trade balance with Cuba since the treaty; it is outstanding.

Mr. WILCOX. Yes; we increased our exports to Cuba by $28,500,000, while Cuba increased her exports to the United States by $67,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman's figures include sugar.

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We produce less than 1,000,000 tons of sugar and consume 6,000,000 tons.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, may I have the gentleman's attention for a moment; will he yield to me?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I cannot yield further.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. According to our program, we are not going to have anything to do on at least one day this week and a lot of days next week. When there is nothing to do, why can we not have time to listen to a good speech like this? Why can we not have time to debate this important matter rather than having debate limited to 1 minute and half a minute to men who have studied this matter for months?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not stated a proper parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from North Carolina controls the time on his side.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Virginia on condition that he does not yield it all to the other side to make speeches.

Mr. MICHENER. We cannot do anything but talk.

Mr. ROBERTSON. My personal feelings, Mr. Chairman, is that this House has gotten a long way from being a deliberative body. It would be better for the legislation before us if we could have an interchange of views instead of having a few set speeches. [Applause.]

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I cannot yield. My time is too limited.

Mr. Chairman, the loss of foreign trade fell heavily upon American agriculture.

At one time, for instance, we enjoyed a lucrative trade with Germany, which bought our apples, our tobacco, wheat, lard, and other farm products. In 1929 our exports to Germany amounted to $410,448,000, and our favorable trade balance amounted to nearly $200,000,000. Following the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff, which virtually excluded manufactured articles from Germany, she not only excluded our apples but placed a tariff of $1.65 per bushel on our wheat and 18 cents per pound on our lard, and our exports to Germany finally were reduced to $91,981,000, a loss of over $300,000,000. Our apple exporters lost $3,000,000 worth of business, our tobacco exporters lost one and one-half million dollars of business, our cotton exporters lost one hundred and thirty-one million, and our favorable trade balance dropped to $14,000,000.

Philip Gibbs in his recent book, Cities of Refuge, in commenting on the treaty imposed upon Germany by France and Great Britain says that there are those in England who think that God speaks English with an Oxford accent and made a big error in permitting the German nation to exist. But there are good reasons why the United States should desire friendly trade relations with Germany. She furnished to us more immigrants than any other nation in the world, a total of over 6,000,000, and they were intelligent, honest, industrious, and liberty-loving people who soon became a part and parcel of our Nation.

Other nations formerly importing our farm products took action similar to that of Germany, with the ultimate result in 1932 that agriculture had lost about five billion dollars of purchasing power because of the glutting of domestic markets with unsalable surpluses. With that loss of purchasing power more workers in industry lost their jobs and our Government was forced into a relief program of an unprecedented scale. While Edmund Burke said that nations do not learn by experience, and while the present tendency is to regard the views of our early statesmen as of no value to us in the solution of our problems, I will take the liberty of quoting again the opinion of Daniel Webster with respect to the efforts of Government to restore prosperity by a relief program when normal trade conditions have been disrupted by artificial controls. He said:

The committee will not fail to observe, that there is, at this moment, much the loudest complaint of distress precisely where there has been the greatest attempt to relieve it by systems of paper credit. And, on the other hand, content, prosperity, and happiness are most observable in those parts of the country where there has been the least endeavor to administer relief by law.

We have witnessed some of that process during recent years. Under a system of protective tariffs, agriculture—and the consuming public generally—paid tribute to industry. Industry became very rich but agriculture became impoverished. American labor failed to find the promised goal of a so-called American standard of living, for, while the products of foreign labor were being excluded from our country, foreign laborers, mainly from the illiterate classes of Southern Europe, were being brought in by industrial leaders to take the jobs of American workmen. The total number of immigrants brought in for this purpose between 1900 and 1930 amounted to 18,638,400, many of whom have never been assimilated and never will be. Then when the policy of national isolation resulted in millions of unemployed the Government, through various means, drew upon the accumulated wealth of industry to relieve agriculture and unemployed labor. But, as Webster said, administering relief by law is a poor substitute for normal business under private management. We all want to see the end of Government relief and subsidies, and a balanced Budget. But can we hope for normal private employment under a policy of national isolation? I think not.

While no one factor can be singled out as the exclusive cause of our economic collapse, it is now generally agreed that the trade war we started by our tariff policies was a big factor, and that it is highly important for us to take steps to recapture our foreign trade. Economists generally are agreed that the best and most practical method of recapturing that trade is through the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements. The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee have issued to the press what is called a seven-point indictment of reciprocal trade agreements, but when that indictment is carefully analyzed it virtually amounts to a statement that those Members are opposed to a reduction of any of our existing tariffs. But I do not know of any responsible economist in the Nation who shares those views. They are not shared by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, who said last fall that—

A policy of national isolation was suicidal, paralyzing our commerce and ultimately involving us in foreign wars.

They are not shared by the chairman of the board of the largest private bank in the world, Mr. Winthrop W. Aldrich, son of one tariff maker and brother of another, who said on January 12 last:

Trade restrictions of various kinds are primarily responsible for the slowness of improvement. At the present time almost every nation is trying to promote its own recovery by purely internal or national methods, overlooking the costs inevitably arising from efforts at economic isolation. Until trade restrictions are reduced, illiquid bank-credit extensions are likely to be resorted to in an attempt to supply the impetus to recovery which would otherwise be derived from the functioning of competitive markets.

They are not shared by the editor of the Washington Post, who said in an editorial on February 1:

If the world had not forgotten that foreign trade consists in an exchange of goods for goods, we might have avoided a costly collapse of the machinery for financing that trade, with its aftermath of depreciated and devalued currencies and mad shifting to and fro of capital funds. We have at least learned that we cannot year in and year out sell more than we buy and demand large cash payments to cover the difference.

It is generally agreed by those who are in favor of increasing our foreign trade that the only practical method of doing so is by means of reciprocal trade agreements. It is not practical for the Congress to undertake to write a new tariff bill. The practical value of trade agreements has been demonstrated by the 15 that have been negotiated. The figures show that our foreign trade in 2 years' time has increased by the sum of $1,084,861,000. That is gratifying both in amount and in the direction in which we are moving. As the Chinese say:

A journey of a thousand miles is commenced by one step.

Some claim that agriculture has not been benefited, but a careful analysis of the figures will show that agriculture, on the whole, has been tremendously benefited. Some point to the fact that the lowering of tariffs has caused a more rapid increase in imports than of exports and that our favorable trade balance fell in 1936 to a low figure. For many years we were a debtor nation. Since the World War we have been a creditor nation. In 1896 we had in the Treasury only $89,000,000 of gold. Now we have over $11,000,000,000 of gold, and do not know of anything better to do with it than to bury it in a steel-and-concrete vault in Kentucky. That reminds me of Bancroft's comment on De Soto's discovery of the Mississippi:

He traveled across half a continent in search of gold and only found his burial place.

Foreign nations can no longer pay us in gold and consumable goods are of more value to us now than gold. There was never a greater fallacy than the thought that trade of equal value in gold cannot be mutually profitable. As was stated by one of our early statesmen:

Commerce is not a gambling among nations for a stake, to be won by some and lost by others. It is not the tendency necessarily to impoverish one of the parties to it while it enriches the other; all parties gain, all parties make profits, all parties grow rich by the operations of just and liberal commerce.

I deplore the attitude of some of the opponents of this measure to minimize the importance of the restoration of foreign trade as a means of promoting world peace, and to treat Secretary Hull's statements on the subject as impractical idealism. In an interesting book published last summer by that charming newspaperman, William Allen White, he warned some of his Republican colleagues that our Nation has moved out of the guilded age of the almighty dollar when God was in a 6-percent heaven, and all was well with a laissez faire world. The leaders of the Hamiltonian school failed this country because they confidently believed that "$10,000,000 can't be wrong." An economic system which is not based upon the type of practical liberalism as I have defined it above cannot be right either as between individuals or as between nations. There must be a practical application of the doctrine of live and let live. And this fundamental principle was effectively stated by Secretary Hull in his testimony before the committee on January 21 when he said:

More than that, and of incalculable and supreme importance to us, and to others as well, there is a universally growing realization that economic well-being for all nations is an indispensable foundation for durable peace. No peace machinery, however perfectly constructed, can operate among nations which are economically at war rather than at peace with each other. No durable peace is possible except among nations which are actuated, in their economic dealings with each other, by friendliness, fair dealing, and a sincere desire to keep open the channels of a mutually beneficial trade.

Apart from the ill will and resentment engendered by hostile commercial policies, isolation inevitably creates unemployment, lower living standards, and general economic distress within nations. And no nation is more ready to seek relief by the forcible acquisition of territory or is more easily stampeded into the hysteria of war than one whose population finds itself hopelessly mired in economic poverty and widespread privation.

It is a well-known fact that two nations like the United States and Canada, that have enjoyed many years of mutually beneficial trade, need no concrete dugouts and barbwire entanglements to protect their international boundary line. One hundred and seventeen years ago Lord Ellenborough said in a debate in the House of Lords that he attributed the general distress then existing in Europe to the regulations that had taken place since the destruction of the French power. Most of the states on the Continent had surrounded themselves as with walls of brass to inhibit intercourse with other states. Intercourse was prohibited, even in districts of the same state, as was the case in Austria and Sardinia. Thus, though the taxes on the people had been lightened, the severity of their condition had been increased. He believed that the discontent which pervaded most parts of Europe, and especially Germany, was more owing to commercial restrictions than to any theoretical doctrines on government, and that a free communication among them would do more to restore tranquillity than any other step that could be adopted. He objected to all attempts to frustrate the benevolent intentions of Providence, which had given to various countries various wants in order to bring them together. He objected to it as antisocial; he objected to it as making commerce the means of barbarizing, instead of enlightening, nations. The state of the trade with France was most disgraceful to both countries; the two greatest civilized nations of the world, placed at a distance of scarcely 20 miles from each other, had contrived by their artificial regulations to reduce their commerce with each other to a mere nullity.

But unfortunately nations do not learn by experience. If they did we would not have had the World War.

That was a trade war. We entered the World War with the high idealism of making the world safe for democracy, but the European nations who started the war were fighting over trade. The Treaty of Versailles that Woodrow Wilson had hoped to see a treaty of eternal peace sowed seeds for future conflicts. It forcibly took colonies and sources of raw material from one nation and gave them to another, and there is reason to believe that a secret understanding existed between certain of our Allies concerning the division of spoils before we ever entered the conflict. The nations of Europe are arming as rapidly as they can, some to hold sources of raw material they now have, others to recapture them if possible. That is the principal reason our export trade does not increase more rapidly. Foreign peoples are economizing on the necessities of life in order that their governments may buy more cannon and build more warships.

In the event of another European war, whether we are drawn into it or succeed in remaining neutral, as the people of this Nation so earnestly desire, we are bound to suffer. The desire of President Roosevelt and of his distinguished Secretry of State to make a contribution toward world peace is not one merely of detached idealism. Our economic welfare is intimately involved. Even if, in our present efforts to prove to the world it is more profitable to trade than to fight, our imports should temporarily exceed our exports, we will, in the long run, be the gainer if we can help to avert another world conflict. We cannot continue indefinitely group subsidies by deficit financing and I know of no way to bring about once more full employment in both industry and agriculture except through restoration of our foreign trade. I therefore confidently predict that this House will pass the pending bill by a tremendous majority. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert therein some brief tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am going to go my distinguished friend from Virginia one better; not only am I going to confine myself to my prepared speech, but I am going to say what I think for these 15 minutes in this legislative body and shall decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, in view of certain aspects of the debate this afternoon, I am compelled to inquire: Was it not Colton who said?—

> Did universal charity prevail, earth would be a heaven and hell a fable.

How true that is, only those of us who respect and admire the impetuosity and the enthusiasm which motivates the emotionalist and theorist, but who have been dragged down from the mountaintops and held onto the earth by the actualities and the practicalities born of experience and of everyday existence, can ever know.

> The emotionalist and theorist who has the enthusiasm and the imagination without practical experience has the necessary things, but he has no power plant, and no connection with things earthly, for imagination and emotion are—> only the precursors of reason.

They seemingly create beauty and justice and happiness, and what more could you wish, for such is the power that is inherent in them. But experience, "reason enriched with the spoils of the heart", is disenchanting.

Dreams are but the vision of a busy brain.

And Hedge has said:

> A dreamer is a madman quiescent, and a madman is a dreamer in action.

Dreams may be a true interpretation of our inclinations, but they still are, and always will be—

> The children of an idle brain begot of nothing but vain phantasy, which is as thin of substance as the air and more inconstant than the wind.

It is time for the American people to stop theorizing and dreaming and to wake up.

If I understand English as it is written and spoken, and as the dictionary defines it, and the meaning of the words that are used in its expression, the people of the State of Vermont, whom I have the honor to represent, are awake. They need no defense for their political persuasions. They are today the most politically astute, civically minded, free-thinking, fearless, thoughtful, true liberal group, not now engaged in attempting to undermine our American institutions; conservative, because notable for their independence of character and for their ability to devise means and methods of taking care of themselves whenever they have needed to meet any emergency of any group of citizens, and are the peers of any citizens or group of any State in this Union.

It is to be remembered that they alone of all the people of all these States pondered over—thought about and through, and decided and determined, first, and publicly signified their opposition to the N. R. A. as an un-American and unconstitutional act. They opposed it en masse long before any court action had been thought of or any appeal had been made to any court in the premises. I might go on at length and justify my statement, but it is unnecessary. Vermonters fear, and always will, the Greeks when bearing gifts, and for them to accept a favor is a potential sale of their freedom—a freedom which was too dearly bought, and has been held and continued at too great a cost and price to be sacrificed by them, lightly or when asleep, for a mess of pottage. It is true that the only inheritance the most of them have is not a substance, but was received from their ancestors, and is something of which no man can deprive them, and that is a soul, absolutely incapable of fear.

Do you wonder that I consider it an honor as well as a great responsibility to undertake to represent such a constituency? They have been maligned on many occasions, but that does not matter to them. They are not easily hypnotized by the paid emotional propagandists, the slanderer, the cartoonist, or the campaign ballyhoo artist. They know what they think, why they think as they do, and they have the courage of their convictions to vote as their conscience dictates. They know that, theoretically, everybody should be for reciprocity; they know it means—what real reciprocity means; they know that the "trade treaty" with Canada is not a reciprocal agreement.

They are in favor of the idea of being a good neighbor. They have lived along an imaginary boundary line between them and their Canadian neighbors peaceably and peacefully so long that there is nothing wonderful about the good neighbor idea to them. Why should not they be good neighbors? They always have been. Moreover, they are ready to fight to establish, continue, and maintain that status.

They hate paternalism. They insist that this is their Government, and that it does not own or control them, or define or classify them as serfs or menials.

In his recent inaugural address the President said:

> We are determined to make every American citizen the subject of his country's interest and concern. We will insist that every agency of popular government use effective instruments to carry out their will.

These are fine words, but as has been well said, this is not a new philosophy in the world. From ancient days till modern times men have fashioned government through constitutions, written and unwritten, to meet what they construed as the needs of the people. The methods have been various, but the patterns have followed an all too familiar shape. Either it is government handed down from on high and assuming the function of the benefactor whilst ignoring the precept that "he who will not work may not eat", or else it is government calling on the people to assert themselves.

In his message the President emphasizes the function of the first pattern of government; directly paternalistic.

He puts no premium on thrift or self-support, nor does he draw a picture of hard work, self-sacrifice, and voluntary or involuntary contribution by those who have been taught to believe that man was put on earth to earn his own bread and not to live on the bread of others, unless caught in the helplessness of physical misfortune or old age.

Fascism and communism, each and both, make the same glowing promises. The truth is that America has triumphed in a world of scientific achievement and effective production of goods for her own people and for markets abroad because individuals have been given opportunity for competition. The Nation still lives on the strength and devotion of citizens whose powers have been developed, whose self-respect has been aroused. "Our purpose is to build in this Nation a human society, not an economic system."

The story that the ages tell is that "no method of procedure has ever been devised by which liberty could be divorced from local self-government." So often tried, it has as often, and always, failed.

No plan of centralization has ever been adopted which did not ultimately result in bureaucracy, tyranny, inflexibility, reaction, and decline.

If history teaches anything, or if we may learn from the lessons experience speaks, we must know and realize that of those who have overturned the liberties of republics, the greatest number have begun their career by paying an obsequious court to the people. They have commenced as flattering lip-service demagogues and ended as tyrants.

It is this threat of paternalism further extended which should shake us into a realizing sense of our duties and our responsibilities as Americans, whatever party label we may wear upon our sleeves.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my thoughts with respect to the particular measure under consideration are substantially those entertained by the Honorable Mr. Sisson, a former Member of this House, who served with us in the Seventy-fourth Congress, who, in speaking on the soil-conservation bill which was before the House for consideration, said:

> I am going to support the Bolleau amendment, and, as I said yesterday, unless this amendment is adopted, I shall be compelled, representing the interests of my own section, to vote against the bill. I am willing to do everything possible for any other section of the country, but I am not willing to do something for another section solely at the expense, the detriment, and the tearing down of the greatest industry of the farmers in my section.

Right at this point I desire to call attention to what I said with reference to this particular treaty, which is sought to be extended, when I spoke on this floor in opposition to it something like a year ago. I said then:

> This particular treaty is ill-omened, as was the one of which Senator Morrill spoke; one of my reasons in this case being that this treaty was entered into by the President under what I consider to be an illegal and unconstitutional delegation by Congress of the treaty-making powers reserved to Congress, which are nondelegable under the specific language of the Constitution itself. One does not have to be an opponent of the principle of reciprocity or against it as a general proposition to justify his opposition to this particular treaty, from which injurious results will most certainly follow, which are following, and being felt as a result of its negotiations.

From the farmers' viewpoint the word "reciprocity" in connection with this treaty is a misnomer, and then I go on to quote the Honorable E. H. Jones, commissioner of agriculture:

> It is obvious that the so-called reciprocal trade agreement with Canada is a one-sided affair, so far as the farmers of Vermont are concerned, and will result greatly to their disadvantage.

I quote the National Grange, and I quote the State Grange, the Honorable H. A. Stoddard, master:

> There is no question as to what the importation of Canadian maple sugar will do to the price of our darker grades of sirup. Speaking for the Vermont State Grange, I can say that we are very much opposed to the treaty.

Then I quoted the statement of the Vermont Maple Sugar Makers' Association, by its president, George B. Hathorn, which was presented to the President and about everybody else, in opposition to the treaty, but to no avail; and a protest from Arthur H. Packard, president, Vermont State Farm Bureau, by telegram, and my letter to the President.

Then, when it became apparent that the treaty involved a reduction of the tariff on softwood and hardwood lumber, the Legislature of Vermont adopted a joint resolution deploring the negotiation of the treaty; I submitted it to the President, together with a statement setting out in detail the unfairness and inequality and injustice which is shown and done the agricultural interests of this country, especially Vermont, by reason of the nonreciprocal terms of the treaty and the lack of mutual advantage insofar as our agricultural and other industries are involved and concerned.

Well, everybody but a few irreconcilable New Dealers admitted that my position was correct. If I needed any further proof, it might be indicated by the position taken by the other party to the contract—that is to say, by the Canadian people themselves.

I notice that in the hearings on this measure Secretary Hull said at one point that—

> If you ask the other nations, they will probably tell you that we got the best of trade arrangements. * * *

Secretary of State Hull cannot tell the farmers of Vermont—and make them believe it—that this reciprocal treaty with Canada is a good thing for Vermonters, for they know it is not so. It is a good thing for Canada from the standpoint of their unbiased judgment up there. Hear what the Quebec Chronicle of September 18 last has to say under an editorial headed "Roosevelt Best for Canada." To quote briefly:

> It is probable we are influenced for the most part by our liberal and conservative philosophies and by our appreciation of the New Deal which Mr. Roosevelt is trying to put through. If in place of putting ourselves in the position of American electors we were to think only of what would be most in Canadian interests, we should be unanimous in hoping for a Democratic victory. Whether or not Governor Landon may be the best man for the American people; therefore, there is no question whatever but what President Roosevelt is the best man for Canada.

And that is the kind of reciprocity for which the proponents of this measure now stand. However, I am for Vermont, Vermonters, and the interests of the people of the United States. Of course, I am opposed to this measure.

You remember when Calvin Coolidge came home from church one Sunday and Mrs. Coolidge said, "What did the minister preach about?" and Cal said, "Sin." When she asked him what he said about it, he replied, "He was agin it." That is my attitude toward this treaty. I am for reciprocity that reciprocates, not for the kind that punishes and penalizes. I am for cooperation that cooperates.

The figures that are now available and will be inserted hereafter for all to read show that these statements above quoted have been borne out by the facts; that, among a host of others, the Vermont farmer has been and is being penalized; that those who raise and supply the market with cattle, cream, cheese, poultry, horses, maple sugar, apples, grass seed, seed potatoes, lumber and timber, firebrick, talc, and maple flooring, and numerous other commodities, have been the hardest hit, and it is in these items that the imports of Canadian products have so decidedly, so disadvantageously, affected the farmers of Vermont.

In this respect I believe that the farmers of these United States and of Vermont must feel as did Abraham Lincoln when he was prompted to say:

> I know that if we buy goods made in America we have the goods and we have the money, and if we buy goods not made in America someone else has our money.

The truth is, Mr. Chairman, my people know enough to see a hole through a ladder and know when they have been outtraded or handed a gold brick. In the first place, they never gave anybody any authority, as I see it and believe it, to trade them out of house and home. But be that as it may—we will let the courts decide that in due course—"charity begins at home"; and sad as it is true, it is nevertheless a fact that practical, hard-boiled, business common sense is a rare article in administrative circles these days.

Why all this talk about peace?

I have said before, and I say again, peace—there is no peace! It is a consummation devoutly to be wished, eventually to be reached, but trade treaties will not bring about a millennium. Far from it! They add fuel instead of storing up preventives, for—

> There is a haughtiness and fierceness in human nature which will cause innumerable broils, place men in what situation you please.

This is as true now as when Burke said it. It is the sheerest nonsense to talk today about the world at peace. It is to be regretted that this is true, but it is.

I notice that Hon. Bernard M. Baruch in his testimony before the Military Affairs Committee, in speaking about reciprocal-trade agreements and their effect on peace, said that these trade agreements, if we adopt a policy of neutrality, would be instruments of war, not instruments of peace.

The nations of Europe are sluicing all of the funds at their command in the direction of ever-increasing armaments, and in so doing are bent on self-destruction; our State Department and our overzealous, internationally minded dreamers would appear to desire to involve us in the holocaust to come; in this measure, according to the testimony of the State Department before the committee, they seek to bring about by indirection, through these trade agreements, a situation which is anathema to the majority of Americans: entangling alliances.

If this procedure is one that is fostering peace, why, all that has been said in this House during the debate on this measure might as well have been said by a deaf-mute in an empty hall.

The road to peace is a tortuous path which leads down the dark future, through long generations, involving a Christianization of the world—an end devoutly to be sought and eventually to be obtained, but obviously ages hence. No plan or trade treaty has been or will be promulgated which will change human nature or bring about the millennium by contract. No trade treaty or covenant which has ever been made or will ever be entered into between and among nations will prove a panacea or preventive of war. The pronouncements of all the parliaments in the world, international tribunals, leagues of nations, conferences here, abroad, or at Buenos Aires, or anywhere else, are not worth the paper on which they are written except for the fact that back of them lies the power of enforcement. Why talk about trade treaties and peace! When war impends, the wastepaper basket of the world will be filled with these scraps of paper.

In the words of one who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen", and in the name of all those who are opposed to war, I ask you:

> Why by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship interest, humor, and caprice?

We are getting altogether too much involved in entangling foreign alliances.

Whatever agreements are entered into these days are arrived at in and under a state of mind that speaks for mutual distrust and is superinduced by the fact that the world is sitting on top of a powder magazine, on a thin crust of earth which hides but does not conceal from them or us the fact that beneath them there is laid a perfect network of mines which some action or lack of action may be taken as the cause to effect such a terrific explosion as will shake the world's foundations and jar it to its very center.

Trade follows the flag. The flag never retreats. Its establishment and maintenance is the symbol of and the end sought by conquest. Trade treaties are provocatives of, not deterrents to, war.

As was well said by the gentleman from Virginia who has just preceded me:

> But, unfortunately, nations do not learn by experience. If they did, we would not have had the World War.
> That was a trade war. We entered the World War with the high idealism of making the world safe for democracy, but the European nations who started the war were fighting over trade. The Treaty of Versailles that Woodrow Wilson had hoped to see a treaty of eternal peace sowed seeds for future conflicts. It forcibly took colonies and sources of raw material from one nation and gave them to another, and there is reason to believe that a secret understanding existed between certain of our Allies concerning the division of spoils before we ever entered the conflict. The nations of Europe are arming as rapidly as they can, some to hold sources of raw material they now have, others to recapture them if possible. That is the principal reason our export trade does not increase more rapidly. Foreign peoples are economizing on the necessities of life in order that their governments may buy more cannon and build more warships.

Why do we want and wish and try to tie ourselves up to and bury ourselves under this potential end of the world under the cover of trade treaties and peace, of which there is none; and for the trade treaties it is but a smoke screen, an alibi, an excuse, and a poor one. [Applause.]

No, Mr. Chairman; we must face facts. We are all for peace—not "peace at any price", however. We cannot compete with the price which the Secretary of State's good neighbors policy has set. As a practical problem our Canadian neighbors can sell and are selling their products over the line at a price which forbids and prevents any competition on our part. As a result Americans, law abiding, heretofore self-supporting, frugal, respectable, honored, and honorable citizens, are forced onto relief rolls and driven into poverty, and are having to sell their farms and their personal property, or have them taken over, because of this trade treaty with Canada, to which naturally and consequently I am opposed.

Diminished revenue received limits expenditure, and no man has yet been born, or ever will be, big enough in brains or in power usurped or granted to overturn or set aside the laws of supply and demand or of God.

That is what this trade treaty with Canada undertakes to do.

On this argument of "peace" with which the proponents of continuance of the present trade-agreement arrangements bulwark and bolster their case let me allude and call your attention to the trenchant comment recently made by a newspaper writer well known to most of you. Paul Mallon recently had this to say:

> Don't tell any Congressmen, but there seems to be little doubt that State Secretary Hull is leading gradually up to the establishment of his trade tariff-making power as a permanent Government policy.
> Any of his aides who fails to deny it at the moment will be summarily shushed. Mr. Hull is having a hard enough time getting a 3-year extension through Congress now without awakening the legislators. But after this current congressional pressure drive is over you will find any or all of his associates ready to tell you off the record that the Executive trade tariff system has come to stay.
> The possibility of permanence is understood to have been discussed on the inside during preparations for handling the present legislation. It was decided Congress is not yet ripe. Three years' more development of the policy may soften congressional resistance.
> Three years ago Mr. Hull got his trade tariff power on the ground it was an emergency measure, needed to offset the unsettlement of world currencies. However, that emergency has cooled considerably since. Now Mr. Hull is bearing down heavily on the idea that an extension is needed to promote world peace.
> Three years hence you will very probably see Mr. Hull offering the right reason for permanent continuance. If he does, he will say he thinks it is a darned good policy for the Executive rather than the Congress to negotiate reciprocal tariffs, because rate making now has become involved with shifting quotas, currency values, international politics, foreign relations, world peace. It is no longer first a domestic issue.
> The constitutionality of the system will have to be decided before then. So will the right of the Senate to pass on the treaties which Mr. Hull negotiates.
> NOTE.—The current extension will expire at the right psychological moment, June 12, 1940, when the Democratic national convention will be sitting down to select its next Democratic Presidential candidate.

Now let us look at the record, Mr. Chairman, and again let me say I am opposed to this bill because of the facts and trends which appear in certain tables, which I have had prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which show that there was a net loss in trade balance with Canada in the first 11 months of 1936 over the same period of 1935 of over $27,297,000. If one were to compute the net loss in trade balance of the same period of 1936 over that of 1934 he would find it amounts to over $60,414,000.

The loss of $27,297,000 alluded to above partially broken down into items of particular interest to Vermont and Vermonters will show that the following increases in imports from Canada to the United States has taken place:

Cattle imported in 1936 over 1935	$3,565,000
Poultry imported in 1936 over 1935	196,000
Cream imported in 1936 over 1935	52,000
Cheddar cheese imported in 1936 over 1935	1,159,000
Horses imported in 1936 over 1935	1,363,000
Seed potatoes imported in 1936 over 1935	654,000
Apples imported in 1936 over 1935	27,000
Maple sugar imported in 1936 over 1935	672,000
Clover and grass seed imported in 1936 over 1935	144,000
Lumber, boards, soft wood imported in 1936 over 1935	3,163,000
Fire brick imported in 1936 over 1935	13,000
Total	11,008,000

This is but one portion, although it is that portion in which my particular area is most vitally interested in and affected by.

The picture is this: Here we have over $11,000,000 worth of Canadian imports into this country coming in to compete with our own products to aid in forcing down the price of the local produce, to take the money that otherwise might have been realized by our own farmers from their hands. This cannot be tolerated long, and will not be. When other sections and other products are similarly affected, then the day of reckoning will come and the philanthropists of this House today, who are willing to give away all the other fellow has, will run to him for help to save them and their constituency from the ruin and devastation that will then confront them.

I call your attention to certain tables which I have had prepared and which I now insert which show the total value of exports and imports from Canada for the 11 months' periods ending successively from November 1930 to November 1936.

[In thousands of dollars]

	Exports including reexports	General imports	Excess exports
11 months ending November—
1930	623,016	376,195	246,821
1931	375,410	246,259	129,151
1932	227,915	163,095	64,820
1933	192,138	164,209	27,929
1934	281,477	206,567	74,910
1935	301,434	259,551	41,883
1936	351,381	336,795	14,586

The imports into the United States from Canada covering the periods of the above table included cattle, poultry, horses, lumber, apples, and other commodities, as appears in the following table:

Imports into the United States from Canada, 11 months ending November

I agree with the contention of the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, that the Executive alone should not be given the power of economic life and death over every domestic industry dependent upon tariff protection. I am of the opinion that Congress under the Constitution is the exclusive law-making body, and that its function cannot be delegated or usurped lawfully.

I still contend that Congress has no authority to turn over to the President its tariff, taxation and treaty-making powers. I insist it has a right either to approve or reject the trade agreements entered into after full and fair hearing with respect to the same and before they are made effective.

I would like to direct your attention to the fact that among the foreign nations with whom trade agreements have been negotiated, in 13 out of 15 cases, the agreements were submitted to the legislative branches of those governments for final ratification.

I would like to call the attention of the Members of the House particularly to the very forceful and effective statement made before the Committee on Ways and Means on Tuesday, January 26, by Mr. A. M. Loomis, who represented the National Dairy Union and the Association of American Producers of Domestic Inedible Fats, as well as to the answer made by our colleague the Honorable HARRY SAUTHOFF, from Wisconsin, to statements made by Dr. Sayre before that committee. These statements will be found in the unrevised committee prints of the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means.

It has been called to your attention previously, but may I reiterate at this time, that although there appeared before the committee many representatives of industrial organizations in support of the resolution, not one representative of any agricultural organization took such a position. That is significant. The RECORD and the hearings are full of the resolutions against and the objections to this resolution on the part of such far-flung agricultural organizations as the National Grange, National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, National Cooperative Council, National Dairy Union, and American National Live Stock Association.

Even the American Farm Bureau, which, as has been pointed out, and as is well known by all, denied by none, has been working in close harmony with the present administration, "damned with faint praise" when they adopted the following resolution at their annual conference in December:

> We reaffirm our support of reciprocal trade treaties which are negotiated primarily to restore agricultural exports by judicious lowering of industrial tariffs, thus admitting more goods into this country and making it possible for us to sell more of our farm products abroad.
> We insist that this principle be adhered to in framing reciprocal trade treaties and that there be no reduction in present agricultural tariffs on any farm product that would have the effect of holding or reducing domestic price levels below parity on such product. We insist that prior to the conclusion of agreements opportunity be afforded official representatives of farmers to be heard in public hearings on questions at interest, and that the most-favored-nation clause be eliminated.
> Countries enjoying wide outlets in the American market of commodities on the free list should be effectively encouraged in large part to take in exchange commodities produced in the United States which they require.

They were reluctant to criticize, yet indication of underlying dissatisfaction is there evident as to the procedure that has been thus far employed and with the results obtained up to date in the negotiation of these treaties. I have elsewhere included in my remarks the attitude of the Vermont Farm Bureau concerning this matter.

Now, I desire to insert in the RECORD, and I call your attention to a letter I received from the Honorable Elbert S. Brigham, former commissioner of agriculture of the State of Vermont, and former outstanding member of the Committee on Agriculture of this House.

MONTPELIER, VT., January 21, 1937.

HON. CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHARLES: I have your letter of January 19 requesting me to submit information regarding the effect which the Canadian treaty, made under the Reciprocity Trade Act, has had upon me.

I will say that to the extent Canadian cream, livestock, and maple sugar and sirup have entered the market, Vermont farmers have been subjected to that degree of competition with adverse effect upon prices.

It is my understanding that without notice to anyone and with no opportunity given for hearing, that a further treaty might be made, sacrificing to Canada the city milk markets which are of value to the farmers of New England.

With all due allowance for the ability and fairness of the authorities entrusted with the power to negotiate these treaties, it places an industry in jeopardy if, without an opportunity to be heard, agreements can be made which may seriously affect the future of the industry.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

ELBERT S. BRIGHAM.

Then I want you to hear once more from our present commissioner of agriculture of the State of Vermont, so I am offering his letter for the RECORD:

STATE OF VERMONT,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
January 22, 1937.

Hon. CHARLES A. PLUMLEY, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PLUMLEY: Under date of January 8, 1936, I advised you of my belief that the so-called reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada would prove to be a one-sided affair, as far as the farmers of Vermont and New England are concerned, and would react greatly to their disadvantage. Developments during the past few months confirm the accuracy of this forecast.

Vermont is probably the most intensive dairy State in the Union, exporting approximately 85 percent of its milk and cream to the cities of southern New England and New York. Surpluses of these products are a constant source of price unstability and are tremendous obstacles in the way of orderly marketing. Since about July 1, 1936, these surpluses have been greatly augmented by the admission of cream from Canada under the reduced tariff in rapidly increasing volume. It is obvious that such importation displaces an equal amount of domestic cream. The importation of dairy cows under lower tariff rates also reacts adversely to our dairy industry. Vermont dairymen protest against the continuation of these disadvantageous regulations.

Potato growers have also encountered the difficulties which were expected. Quantities of certified seed grown in Canada, where the cost of certification is assumed by the Government instead of being borne by the grower, have entered the market under the favorable terms accorded to certified seed and, I am reliably informed, been sold as table stock or at table-stock prices in areas where Vermont seed is usually marketed. The Vermont Department of Agriculture has received protesting communications from potato growers in this regard.

On account of the short crop of Vermont maple products in 1936, the effect of lowered tariffs on these commodities was not as disastrous as was contemplated. In normal years, however, it is believed that increased imports of Canadian sugar cannot result otherwise than in reduced profits to Vermont producers.

In view of the fact that the term "reciprocal" as applied to the present trade agreement has proven a misnomer in its relation to Vermont agriculture, the purpose of this letter is to reaffirm my opposition to the extension of the treaty.

Very truly yours,

E. H. JONES,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

What does the Vermont State Grange think with respect to the reciprocal-trade agreement? Read the letter from the Honorable Henry H. Stoddard, master of the State grange:

JANUARY 25, 1937.

Hon. CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PLUMLEY:

* * * * * * * *

At the State meeting held last October in Burlington, the Vermont State Grange went on record as opposed to the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada.

Fraternally and sincerely,

HENRY A. STODDARD,
Master of the Vermont State Grange.

Also the letter from the secretary of the Vermont State Grange, Mary E. Priest, containing two resolutions adopted at the last meeting of the Vermont State Grange:

JANUARY 4, 1937.

Hon. CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PLUMLEY:

* * * * * * * *

Here are two resolutions passed at the last session of the Vermont State Grange and which are submitted to you:

No. 1

Whereas we feel that the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada is detrimental to Vermont agriculture; and

Whereas we find this is already beginning to be felt by maple-sugar producers in this State: Be it

Resolved, That we instruct our Congressman at Washington to vote to rescind the agreement.

No. 2

Whereas we feel that it is detrimental to the prosperity of a nation to pay its farmers for not producing that which it is well adapted to produce, causing an importation of such produce or foodstuffs: Be it

Resolved, That the Vermont State Grange go on record as heartily disapproving any such method, and we as a committee recommend that the Vermont State Grange instruct the national representative in Washington to work for the discontinuance of such practice as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

MARY E. PRIEST,
Secretary, Vermont State Grange.

And I call attention to the letter from the president of the Vermont State Farm Bureau, Mr. A. H. Packard.

VERMONT STATE FARM BUREAU,
Burlington, Vt., January 26, 1937.

MR. CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
United States Congressman, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PLUMLEY: I am in receipt of your letter of the 19th regarding the 3-year extension of reciprocal-trade agreements. I have had this matter under discussion before the directors of the farm bureau on at least one occasion, and while they discussed the matter carefully, they did not have information which would give them a basis to voice an opinion. Therefore I am unable to send you any of the information which you request, as the matter has not been completely analyzed.

We have just examined our minutes and resolutions of past meetings and find only one bearing on this subject, which is as follows:

"We realize that perhaps the program under way to encourage international trade is a laudable one, but suggest to the Tariff Commission that they try to not have it bear too hard on any one group in any one section of the country."

Very truly yours,

VERMONT STATE FARM BUREAU,
A. H. PACKARD, President.

I have attempted to carry out the wishes of the Honorable George B. Hathorn, of the Vermont Maple Sugar Makers Association, who, under date of January 23, wired me from White River Junction, Vt., as follows:

CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Use your influence in not granting an extension of reciprocal trade with Canada; big burden on Vermont maple-sugar industry.

GEORGE B. HATHORN,
President, Vermont Maple Sugar Makers Association.

This matter which we are discussing is not a partisan measure. When the proponents of the resolution refer to "the minority" in their discussions, they do not properly refer solely to the members of the Republican Party who are opposed to the resolution; within that group of the "minority", on this question, are alined those who believe that agriculture has been penalized by the Trade Agreements Act; in that group are not only Republicans from Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and elsewhere, but Democrats from Massachusetts to Florida, Progressives from Wisconsin, Farmer Laborites from Minnesota. Reading the names of those who oppose this resolution, I venture to say one will find himself hard put to describe them as "reactionaries, conservatives, and economic royalists"—it seems to me that they are of that brand of liberalism that has the welfare of the farm folk in mind, and by so doing having the welfare of the country at heart.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the extension of this treaty. I might reiterate my own opinion with respect to the success or failure of the plan and of the several treaties. My opinion would be challenged as being a partisan one despite any and all of the supporting facts and evidence adduced in its support. So, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I challenge those who support this measure successfully to contradict the statements made in the New York Sun, than which there is no more proadministration daily in the country; it has been its supporter, advocate, and defender.

This is what the Sun says editorially, and I leave it with you as the summation and conclusion of my remarks:

Speakers at the national foreign-trade convention in Chicago this week have praised the New Deal's trade-treaty program. They have had a great deal to say about the stimulation of world trade, about the need for recovering America's foreign markets, about the stabilization of currencies. They have spoken as though the Hull trade agreements have been an unmitigated boon to this Nation. But the evidence is heavily against such a conclusion. Of all the experiments since 1933, the tariff-cutting trade treaties of the administration have been one of the most conspicuous failures. Fourteen treaties have been signed and hundreds of tariff rates have been slashed to let in more foreign goods that compete with goods made here.

In these trade treaties every cut in the tariff reduces rates for all countries, not only for the country signing each agreement. Reducing the tariff on rayon fabrics in the treaty with France allows Japan or any other country to send rayon goods here at the lower rate. The result is that imports have mounted steadily, and in the first 9 months of 1936 have exceeded our exports by $63,000,000. For the first year since 1893 the United States is buying more goods from abroad than it sells abroad. While exports to some countries have risen, as in trade with Canada, imports have risen much more rapidly. Imports from Canada since the trade treaty went into effect have shown an increase 60 percent greater than the increase in exports to that country. Agricultural and manufactured goods from other lands continue to threaten the employment of American farmers and factory workers. Last February a trade pact with Switzerland went into effect, but in the first 8 months of the year exports to Switzerland declined, while imports rose nearly $2,000,000. This is hardly the "Yankee trading" for which Secretary Hull planned.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, the apparent determination of this measure will add two additional bad chapters to the legislative history of the United States and the diplomatic action of our Nation, because today we are proposing to again vest legislative power in the executive branch of the Government. Upon at least four or five prior occasions during this session we have extended this legislative power to the President.

As to the diplomatic phase, which might be more clearly termed a commercial treaty, we are placing in the hands of inexperienced, impractical persons the welfare of our Nation, because to a considerable degree they will determine the economic and commercial activities of our country. I could not help but be amused at the statement made by the gentleman from Arkansas when he said that his party has always been a protective-tariff party.

I would call his attention to schedule 7, which contains the agricultural rates, and to the Underwood tariff law, the last tariff act passed by the Democratic Party. Practically every crop produced on the farm, or at least every major product, was placed on the free list. There was no duty on cattle, sheep, pork, or milk, except cheese, and in the committee the same subject was called to the attention of the Assistant Secretary of State.

In other words, if there were no duties, or extremely low duties upon farm imports, when a reciprocal agreement was to be negotiated the farmers would not be able to obtain any concessions, because manifestly they would have nothing to exchange therefor.

In support of this statement I desire to offer schedule 7, which shows the duties exacted upon the importation of foreign agricultural products. You will note that the rates of duty in the Democratic column, on farm products, are mostly free or no duty, whereas under the Republican column the acts of 1922 and 1930, which were passed when the Republicans were in power, show that the party last mentioned placed adequate rates upon farm products. These tables are taken from documents printed under the direction of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. Chairman, we are now facing the question whether we shall by piecemeal or by a flank attack virtually undermine the present tariff rates in the United States. Another gentleman of the majority said we had no scientific way of learning about the cost of the production commodities in the United States. Well, if we have not any rule, how does it happen that the majority party is willing to accept a certain duty upon tobacco or tar or other products produced in the South?

Complaint was made about the iniquitous and unfair Smoot-Hawley Act. The majority party now in power has had complete control of our Government by a 2, 3, or even 4 to 1 vote in the last two sessions of Congress, and it has also had control of the executive branch of the Government during the same period, but it has not had the courage to attempt to directly repeal this measure which they call so iniquitous.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I wonder if the gentleman heard the remarks made by one of the speakers who is in favor of the passage of this legislation when he said they could not have repealed the Smoot-Hawley bill without opening the floodgates and permitting a flood of foreign imports to come in, which would have paralyzed industry? Yes; and the statement was correct.

Mr. THURSTON. Well, by their inaction they have confessed this measure must have much merit, otherwise they would have affirmatively acted in an attempt to repeal it.

Mr. KNUTSON. They have made no effort to live up to their campaign promise in 1932.

Mr. THURSTON. Why mention that? The apparent distinction between the philosophy of the members of the two great political parties in this country seems to be something like this: The Republicans, having in mind a fair wage and a high level of living in the United States, want fairly high duties upon imports from low-wage countries, and they vote for those high duties. The Democrats apparently want the protection but do not have the backbone to support the measure when it comes up for consideration. They privately appeal to the Republicans to save them from too much foreign competition.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman defend the Smoot-Hawley bill?

Mr. THURSTON. I may say to the gentleman that I interrogated the Assistant Secretary of State and asked him to point out the items upon which the duty was too high, but he very adroitly and cleverly maneuvered himself out of the position and said he would not attempt to do so. I asked him to point out any in the agricultural schedule that was too high, and he again moved out. At no time or place has this official gone on record in a specific item.

I am sure we will all be delighted to have the gentleman from Massachusetts point out the items in the textile section of that law which are too high and if he wants them reduced and have his people compete against the low labor of foreign countries.

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend is not answering the question. I can assure him I will not duck a question when it is asked me.

Mr. THURSTON. The same thing is true of tobacco. The Republicans having control when this act was passed, placed a high duty upon products which were mainly produced in another section of the country, apparently to the great satisfaction of the gentlemen on the committee from Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina, because they have not sought to reduce any of those duties. When we were in control we took care of them, and now they seek to lessen and reduce the duties upon the products from my section of the country.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What tobacco upon which there is a tariff competes with tobacco grown in Kentucky?

Mr. THURSTON. I understand some of the cheap products come in from Cuba up to 18 percent.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think the gentleman will find on investigation that the amount of tobacco imported is almost nil as compared with the total production of tobacco in this country. So far as I know the tobacco that comes in from Cuba does not compete with the tobacco grown in Kentucky.

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman is willing then to have tobacco come in without duty from the rest of the world?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am talking about the rates and the tobacco protected by the tariff. We export tobacco rather than import it.

Mr. THURSTON. I am talking about the tobacco production of the world that might come in here to compete with the product grown in the gentleman's State.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We export between 40 and 50 percent of the tobacco grown; consequently we are interested in a foreign trade.

Mr. THURSTON. That is mostly cigarette tobacco?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We grow all kinds. We grow chewing tobacco, smoking tobacco, as well as cigarette tobacco.

Mr. THURSTON. As to whether the gentlemen are in favor of the protective tariff is a debatable question, because the Secretary of State said, and his assistant, not only before our committee but through the press and in the forum, and I take it at every possible opportunity they have had, that they sought to undermine this law which they are supposed to uphold when they are in conference with other nations negotiating a trade agreement. So, of course, they are in a very embarrassing situation when the conferees on the other side of the table begin to bring forth their arguments to show how high, how unfair, and how outrageous our duties are. With such a handicap, of course, they cannot effectively act for our people. Such an embarrassment would not affect the Members of Congress.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. THURSTON. For a question.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have been tremendously impressed throughout the hearings by the fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma has been very much concerned over oil coming in from Venezuela.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there, since I have been referred to?

Mr. KNUTSON. And the members of the Florida delegation are very much concerned over the competition of early vegetables from Cuba, and when Vice President Garner was a Member of the House he was very much concerned over a duty on mohair. I am wondering if the gentleman can tell me the difference between the position of the two parties on the tariff?

Mr. THURSTON. As I endeavored to explain a while ago, we want duties upon competitive articles, and we vote for them, while our good friends of the opposition apparently want the duties but will not vote for them.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; for a question.

Mr. DISNEY. As I understand these reciprocal-trade agreements and reciprocity in tariff treaties as well as the flexible tariff provisions in previous statutes, the general plan is to get other nations to trade with us; in other words, unless, for example, Argentina and Canada can sell to us, they cannot buy from us; and unless the European countries can sell to us they cannot buy from us. What is the position of the gentleman's party rather than simple opposition to this plan? What concrete or definite suggestion does the gentleman's side have to offer looking to some general theory? If there is something wrong with this bill, I would like to know definitely what it is rather than simply listen to generalities; and I say this with all due respect because I am asking for information.

Mr. THURSTON. Unfortunately the gentleman must be on the defensive because I am stating here that the rates we now have are fairly adequate and compensatory for our people.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, no; by all the rules of logic when you are in the opposition you propose something in lieu of what is offered.

Mr. THURSTON. And the gentleman's party in piecemeal fashion is seeking to reduce many of these items in a roundabout way and retain the tariff on things that may be under the control of some group that has power near the throne.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. DISNEY. I shall withdraw the question if the gentleman does not wish to answer it.

Mr. THURSTON. I will reply to the gentleman. The Republican Party wants to exchange goods, if possible, and expand in the noncompetitive field; and when we are in the competitive field we want to take into consideration the difference in the cost of labor and the living level in this country as compared with the low-wage level of the rest of the world. The gentleman and his members of the committee are afraid to agree to this rule.

Mr. DISNEY. That is the nearest to a concrete statement that I have heard, but how could we trade in that way? That is the question that is bothering me, and I would like to get a definite answer.

Mr. THURSTON. I may say to the gentleman there is no scientific mode by which you can approach that problem. When we were making large international loans a few years ago and furnishing a great quantity of credit to the rest of the world, they bought more freely from us than when those loans were diminished or sharply curtailed.

Mr. DISNEY. Then the gentleman admits there is no way to do it, except by a plan of bargaining and trading between nations?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; but I am not willing to turn over this discretion to the impractical and theoretical gentlemen in the State Department, none of whom has any capacity in respect to trade or commerce or finance. I am unwilling to have these determinations made without open hearings and without getting the advice and suggestions of the particular business that is involved, and this has been denied the businessmen of this country under the operations of this law during the last 3 years.

Mr. DISNEY. I do not want to intrude on the gentleman's time unduly, but I would rather surmise that most of the experts who are down there now were there under the Hoover administration and the Coolidge administration and prior to that time.

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman may be informed about that.

Mr. DISNEY. I do not know, but I would infer that; it is probably useful that it is true.

Mr. THURSTON. I would not join the gentleman in that inference. New Dealers and brain trusters are rather numerous in Washington.

Mr. DISNEY. I would presume that there are experts in the State Department. There should be. If they are experts, I presume they will stay there whether we like them now or will not like them later or not. They are properly career service men. However, let me refer the gentleman back to the early days of the House when, as I understand, under the direction of the Speaker of the House, Mr. Casson, the special representative of President McKinley, negotiated 14 trade agreements with other nations and the theory of ratification of these treaties was incorporated in the bill.

Mr. THURSTON. I did not yield for a statement but for an interrogation.

Mr. DISNEY. I understand with respect to these trade treaties—they were treaties, not trade agreements—negotiated by the Speaker of the House, 13 out of 14 of them were rejected by the Senate. I am sure the gentleman will not contend, as a matter of law, that trade agreements are treaties that have to be ratified by the Senate. If the gentleman does take that position, he is on unsafe legal ground.

Mr. THURSTON. Since the gentleman has brought up the figure 13, it reminds me that it happens that 13 out of the 15 treaties negotiated under this reciprocal plan went back to the respective nations involved, so that their legislative bodies could ratify them, whereas under this proposal our Congress does not have such authority. I understand also that around the State Department there is a diplomatic atmosphere, and those gentlemen think they are much more capable of dealing with trade or commerce than some of us boys who come up here with a little fertilizer on our shoes. However, I will take the brains of this Congress in preference to any department of the Government.

Of course, trade agreements under this act are not ratified by the Senate or House or both.

I now wish to refer specifically to the Cuban agreement and to the release of the Department of State of January 19 of this year, where it is shown that with respect to the trade between Cuba and the United States, 1932–33——

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. THURSTON. I cannot yield now.

Cuba shipped us $54,00,000 worth of commodities and we sent to Cuba $24,000,000 worth of products, leaving a balance in their favor of $30,000,000.

Then in 1933 and 1934 they sent us $48,000,000 and we sent them $34,000,000, a net to Cuba of $14,000,000. Apparently that disturbed the gentlemen in the State Department because it looked like there might be an even exchange between the two countries. So they were active in promoting the Cuban agreement.

The effect of that the next year was Cuba sold us $150,000,000 worth of products and we sold Cuba $55,000,000, leaving a gain for Cuba of more than $100,000,000.

In the following year Cuba sold us $115,000,000 and we were able to sell them $63,000,000, leaving a difference of about $52,000,000 in favor of Cuba.

There has been a good deal of speculation about the advantage of this agreement with Cuba, but no one will deny these figures as they are taken from State Department releases.

[1] Actual payments.

We gave up about $42,000,000 in sugar duties and it has not increased our trade more than $35,000,000.

Admitting there is 20 percent profit on the trade dollar, that would mean a net profit of $7,000,000 and a loss of $42,000,000.

During that same period we were making benefit payments to the beet-sugar growers in order to diminish the sugar operations of our farmers and to reduce their product, and we paid the farmers $81,000,000, as shown by the table prepared by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

I do not know what proportion of the $81,000,000 went to the beet and cane farmer to reduce in order to meet the extra Cuban imports. So when we add that to the other figures it makes the exchange more detrimental to our people, especially the United States Treasury.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. Has the gentleman ever heard any objection raised by either the beet- or the cane-sugar growers in the United States to the sugar program adopted by Congress?

Mr. THURSTON. I was informed that a considerable number of sugar growers, both cane and beet, were very much concerned and perturbed about it and had a number of conferences in regard to that same subject here in Washington.

Mr. BUCK. Was the gentleman present at a session of the committee when his colleague on the Republican side, Mr. WOODRUFF, made the following statement?—

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman be mollified somewhat if I concede that the quota plan incorporated in the sugar-control act has been a lifesaver to the sugar industry of the United States? Will the gentleman be somewhat mollified if I concede that?

And that was bound up intimately with the reciprocal trade-agreement act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I think if Mr. WOODRUFF had amplified his statement in keeping with the situation as it is, so far as sugar is concerned, he would have said that it is the policy of the administration to eventually eliminate the production of sugar in America, because it is said by the administration, that is, by the Department of Agriculture, that sugar can be more efficiently produced somewhere else and, therefore, that we should take care of the sugar people while they are dying, and what we are getting is an opiate to take care of us while the sugar industry is being liquidated.

Mr. BUCK rose.

Mr. THURSTON. I do not care to yield further. Mr. WOODRUFF will fully reply to the gentleman from California in this respect. I want to amplify by saying that Mr. Sayre made no denial whatever of those figures in regard to the remissions of duty and the exceedingly favorable balance to Cuba.

In regard to the farm portion of the Cuban treaty, it has been heralded here that we have profited greatly. Quoting from the same document I find that before we made the treaty we sold in 1933–34, 16,000,000 pounds of lard in Cuba and that after the treaty we sold 32,000,000 pounds the first year, and then it dropped down to 23,000,000 pounds the third year and more during the last 11 months. Then, on bacon and cured hams, after the first year, the sales amounted to about 8,700,000, and it rose after the treaty to 10,600,000 pounds and then dropped clear down to 5,000,000, or less than half what it was before. But the greatest increase in the lard export to Cuba amounted to only about 1 percent of the total production in the United States. What about the other side of the picture? The increased imports under this treaty with Cuba allowed $5,000,000 additional of blackstrap molasses to be imported into the United States, five times the amount of the advantage that we obtained in the lard concession, and this blackstrap molasses directly competes with the farmers of the United States.

Then when we reach the dairy tables we find that while there was a slight increase of dairy products to Cuba, again they sharply diminished, so that our net gain so far as the farmer is concerned was a loss when we take into consideration the benefits granted under other treaties to Canada and to Switzerland. And now we are receiving rather heavy imports of milk and it's derivatives from these other nations.

But, after all, the question being considered here today is the attitude of these men who have charge of these treaties. To date they have not taken into their confidence the farmer or the man engaged in industry or trade. They have had these ex-parte, star-chamber hearings and made their own determinations, and the first time the American citizen received any information as to the possible rates was when he was able to obtain it from foreign sources, because the foreign nations, even though three-fourths of them are under military dictators and usurpers, yet, in form at least, their legislative bodies did require these important trade agreements to come back to them for ratification.

Then there is an implication in the extension of this law that has not been mentioned. Do you gentlemen know that when they make these agreements they go outside of the rates or schedules written in the tariff law and attempt to freeze or say that you gentlemen here in the revenue-making body of the Government shall not have the right to fix an internal or excise tax upon certain products; that during the life of the treaty there will not be increase or duty placed upon certain articles included in these agreements, further taking from this body the power to say what shall be done not only in legislation but in revenue receipts.

If we continue to greatly expand our public indebtedness, the time may come in the near future when we will be obliged to levy additional excise taxes in order to obtain funds to meet some of the current obligations of our Government. Yet under many of these agreements you gentlemen are foreclosed, and your hands are tied so that you cannot enter that field, and if you extend these agreements then you ratify and confirm what has already been done, and you say that is all right to the State Department; you say to them that they can invade our legislative field even to the extent of taking away from us the revenue-making power of our Government; that we ratify and confirm their usurpations.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am sure the gentleman will agree with me that no statement in a trade agreement could divest the Congress of its taxing power.

Mr. THURSTON. I say that after we make one of these trade agreements we would expect our Government to stand back of its agreement, and it would be embarrassing to the gentleman as a member of the majority party to attempt to enact legislation which would controvert what the President had agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. So far as the power is concerned, no one would claim that the power is taken away from the Congress; and if Congress should change the rate during the life of a trade agreement, all the effect it could have would be the abrogation of the treaty.

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; and then we would be accused of international bad faith.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But they recognize when they make these agreements that the Congress is not giving up its taxing power. I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. THURSTON. Only by implication; and if it is the policy of the Chief Executive, who has so frequently been able to obtain the legislation he desires, then it may follow as a fair conclusion that will be continued and that the House of Representatives would, in fact, surrender that power, although in law they might not do so.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I will grant that the great personality down at the other end of the Avenue has a great influence in the House and in the country.

Mr. THURSTON. Well, the adjective "great" might be questioned.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not a fact that Members of Congress know less about the details of the trade agreements than about anything else that has happened in this administration, and is not that proved by the fact that there were more experts from the State Department in the Ways and Means Committee than ever before in our history? Constituents of mine and others at the hearings who were deeply interested in hearing all the testimony said they were very much disturbed by experts running to the Members continuously; that there was a constant hubbub and there was a perfect army of them in the rear of the committee.

Mr. THURSTON. That is a true statement.

Now, I want for a moment to direct attention to the wage levels throughout the world. I have a prepared statement as it came to me yesterday from the Department of Labor. I will not read it all, but, as illustrative, I want to mention the figures contained in one column in relation to the wages paid to bricklayers. In the United States, $1.70 per hour. These are wages per hour: Austria, 24 cents; Czechoslovakia, 15 cents; France, 26 cents; Germany, 37 cents; Great Britain, 41 cents; Italy, 16 cents; Portugal, 9 cents; Spain, 29 cents; Sweden, 85 cents.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, February 2, 1937.

Hon. LLOYD THURSTON, M. C.,
Room 1231, New House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. THURSTON: With reference to your request made of our Mr. Hanna by telephone this morning for information regarding comparative wages in the United States and foreign countries, I am sending you herewith:

(A) Typewritten statement showing earnings in certain representative occupations in the United States and foreign countries in 1931. This date may seem a little remote, but it represents a period when practically all of the countries of the world were on a gold basis, and therefore conversions into United States currency are most significant. Since that time there have been changes, of course, in wages in most countries, but for the most part such changes have not been great, and there is every reason to believe that the ratios of difference between the United States and the other countries shown in the table are substantially the same now as they were in 1931. As a general picture of comparative wage conditions, therefore, I think this table is particularly useful.

If this information does not meet your needs, please do not hesitate to call upon us again.

Cordially yours,

ISADOR LUBIN,
Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

The reason I mention this subject is to direct the attention of the House to the great variance between wage levels here and abroad; and, if we seek to continue the living standards we have in this country, of course, the more imports that come here, the less employment we will have in our own country. Notwithstanding this great difference, I contend it would be far more sound, not only as a legislative policy but as an economic practice, for the men who are elected each 2 years from this broad land of ours to come here and apply their talents, their ability, and their experience in business, in agriculture, and all the varied interests of our country, and out of their joint efforts to effect a compromise and fix rules as to the importation of products from these cheap-labor countries, rather than to leave it to the diplomatic branch, which, of course, is constantly surrounded by men who are skilled in diplomacy and who are clever, and all of whom represent countries having a lower wage level than we have in the United States.

So one of the very keystones—in fact, one of the foundations of our economic supremacy—is to closely guard this privilege which is now vested in this body. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON] has again expired.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert a few tables which come from Government sources.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER].

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I come from an industrial section of my State, principally textiles. I am in accord with every effort to expand our foreign trade not prejudicial to American industry and labor, and I rise at this time to bear personal testimony that there is more than mere words in that portion of the minority report stressing the point there is no provision in the law for fair and adequate hearings, which have been brought out on the floor again today.

Not many months ago industry and labor in my district heard that a pact would soon be negotiated by the State Department with a certain foreign nation. The industry, already beset by many ills and difficulties, asked for a hearing before those getting together the data for the negotiations. I was glad to present this request but what was I told? I was told in practically so many words that if the representatives of this industry wanted to come to Washington to tell their story they could come but it would be useless to come unless they were prepared to make concessions. Concessions to whom? Concessions to a foreign nation now listed by the State Department as one of the largest defaulters in debt obligations to the American people.

Not one word was said about exacting any concessions from abroad.

If this is the spirit animating the State Department fact finders and negotiators, where will it leave American industry and American labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, any man who has had practical experience in dealing across the commodity desk or in going out to build markets for the exchange of goods in the domestic and (or) foreign field cannot help but thrill at the possibilities—for good and for bad—wrapped up in this Trade Agreement Act.

In the practical field of "horse trading" it is perfectly natural for the man in charge of sales to always be consistent in demanding that he have plenty of latitude, ample flexibility, and full freedom to act, and act quickly, in the placing of "puts and calls", in meeting every move made by a competitor by a countermove, in offering counterpropositions for every unacceptable proposition made by the party on the other side of the trade. This quickness of action is the essence of trading—at home and abroad. No sales manager appreciates having the board of directors of his company circumscribe his actions, lay down strict rules of procedure, fix his prices, terms, or the geographical territory in which he must make offer and delivery. As a sales manager he wants the freedom to act and to meet whatever contingency that may arise. Those charged with the administration of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act are no exception to the rule.

The constant stream of press releases which have emanated from the office of the Secretary of State and the Assistant Secretary of State dealing with the various agreements which have been consummated, the methods followed in the administration of the act, and the benefits claimed in behalf of the provisions included in the agreements have been of great interest to me. I have carefully scanned their pages in my feeble attempt to arrive at some definite conclusion as to what the trade philosophy of the Department of State is to be in the administration of this tremendously important piece of legislation. This has followed because there is ample evidence that at least two interpretations have been placed on the meaning and intent of the original act. What are they?

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S LETTER

January 14, 1937, the President addressed a letter to Chairman DOUGHTON, which said, in part:

But while accomplishment has been substantial and gratifying, the task is by no means completed. In international trade relations emergency conditions still exist. Barriers operating against our trade are still excessive. Their reduction continues to be an essential requirement of a full and balanced economic recovery for our country. In the period which lies immediately ahead, our ability to act swiftly and effectively in the field of commercial policy will be indispensable, if the present favorable and promising trend toward a normalization and expansion of international trade, upon a friendly and constructive basis of fair dealing and equal treatment, is to go forward.

The development of liberalized trade practices has another effect, which transcends in importance even the material benefits conferred by trade improvement. Economic strife, resulting from inordinate or discriminatory trade barriers, is one of the most fruitful sources of political animosity and military conflict. A policy designed to reduce excessive trade barriers and to establish equality of trade rights is a powerful instrument of economic appeasement and stability. It thus serves to strengthen the foundations of world peace.

In the present unfortunate state of world affairs, we dare not, in justice to ourselves, relax our effort or abate the vigor of our leadership in a world-wide movement for durable peace through economic prosperity.

STATEMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, MR. HULL

Page 2 of the committee report says:

In his testimony before the committee the Secretary of State pointed out the contribution which the trade-agreements program is making not only to economic recovery but also to the elimination of the economic causes of international ill will—

And goes ahead to quote the Secretary as having said:

An expansion of international trade, not its artificial and arbitrary reduction through the creation of obstructive barriers to its flow, is increasingly being recognized as the road to full recovery and the way of maintained prosperity.

More than that, and of incalculable and supreme importance to us and to others as well, there is a universally growing realization that economic well-being for all nations is an indispensable foundation for durable peace.

Is it not clear that the President emphasizes and puts particular stress on his philosophy, his interpretation that the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act is to be used as a means to strengthen "the foundations of world peace", and that this method of administration and interpretation "transcends in importance even the material benefits conferred by trade improvement"? His language is so clear that the fool who runs may read and know its meaning. There is no room left for any doubt in any mind as to what he intends to do with the powers conferred by this act. He is the sales manager in charge of the prices and terms to be paid for goods coming into this country and for the terms which shall govern on the goods which we ship out.

The Secretary of State does not attempt in the least, to obscure what his interpretation of the act is and what his plans and policies of administration are. He boldly proceeds to say what is of "incalculable and supreme importance to us and to others as well." His firm enunciation that "no peace machinery, however perfectly constructed, can operate among nations which are economically at war rather than at peace with each other", is a clear-cut and ringing doctrine and notice on our people that, insofar as he is concerned, the Trade Agreement Act shall be interpreted and administered in a manner that will tend toward universal peace and that material gains—those things for which men and nations carry on trade—shall at all times be secondary.

Mr. Chairman, this all becomes a most important fact to our people. Throughout this Nation there are millions of people, North, South, East, and West, who still cling to the idea of material gain, to profit, to favorable merchandise trade balances when one speaks of trade agreements. They have not yet grasped the philosophy which has been enunciated by the President and the Secretary of State. When one listens to the serious arguments that are made, those which have no reference to partisan politics, it is clear the arguments are based on two different concepts.

Another proof, in my opinion, that the act is being administered from the viewpoint of international peace and in promoting the comity of nations is the net result of the Cuban trade agreement. Let us look at that for a moment. Section 2 (b) of the act makes a special exception in Cuba's favor. Now let us get some of the philosophy back of this "exception in Cuba's favor." Going to the hearings, pages 178 and beyond, Dr. Francis Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State in charge of the Trade Agreements Division of the Department, said:

First, we, in our Cuban trade agreement, were thinking about more than dollars and cents. We were thinking of this: Cuba, as you know, is vitally dependent on its exports of sugar. If it cannot sell its sugar, it means starvation, hungry people, social disturbance, possibly revolution in Cuba.

Continuing, he said:

It is very particularly true of Cuba, sir, because sugar is almost the crop of Cuba. I would not say it is the single crop, but it is the big crop on which the livelihood of the great majority of the people depends. If Cuba cannot sell her sugar it means serious social disturbance there, and because of the United States very close and intimate relations with Cuba, that might mean almost anything. I need not enlarge upon the possibilities.

Now I ask, Is this administering the Agreement Act in the interest of material gain for the farmers and merchants and workers of the United States or is it in this case being managed purely and almost entirely in behalf of the "peace" that may continue internally in Cuba because of our great generosity to that people? When I speak of generosity on cur part toward the Cuban people I mean just this:

The consumption of sugar in the United States for the past 10 years has been as follows—Willett & Gray:

Year	Total consumption	Per capita
	Tons	Pounds
1936	5,521,512	96.29
1935	5,339,908	93.78
1934	5,134,746	90.71
1933	5,270,366	93.60
1932	5,213,961	93.29

1928	5,542,636	104.27
1927	5,297,050	100.95

During 1936 we consumed 5,521,512 long tons (refined and/or consumption value) or 6,335,794 (126,715,885 bags of 100 pounds each) short tons of twenty 100-pound bags each. This sugar for the 1936 consumption came from the following sources of supply—Willett & Gray:

Cuba (cane), on which tariff concession is allowed	1,642,990
Total preferential and nondutiable sugars	5,514,670
Foreign consumed on which full duty assessed	6,842
Total of sugar consumed	5,521,512

Under date of December 22, 1936, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace made a reallocation of quotas on import sugars for the calendar year 1936 which assigned to Cuba a final tonnage—raw value of 2,000 pounds—of 2,102,607 tons. This was by far the greatest proportion of our consumption allocated to any one given country including the continental United States. United States beet was allowed a tonnage of only 1,342,179.

SUBSIDY TO CUBAN SUGAR INTERESTS

The duty on 96° raw sugar coming into this country from Cuba for the period June 18, 1930, to June 7, 1934, was $2 per 100 pounds. June 8, 1934, and September 4, 1934, this $2 duty was reduced to 90 cents per 100 pounds, or a cut of $1.10 per 100 pounds. This cut in duty was equivalent to a concession in favor of the Cuban sugar interests which consist principally of the National City Bank and the Chase National Bank of New York, Hayden, Stone & Co., the American Sugar Refining Co., the Royal Bank of Canada, and the interests they represent. Very little of the direct benefits actually go to the peons and laboring class of Cuba. But sugar in Cuba being the "invisible government" and sugar interests having the power to foment revolutions to a degree that the Assistant Secretary of State will come before the committee in charge of this bill and make the statement that "it means starvation, hungry people, social disturbance, possibly revolution", simply illustrates what a tremendous influence Cuban sugar interests have in Cuba as well as in the State Department of the United States.

Now, what does this subsidy amount to?

The first year of the operation of the agreement with Cuba we gave a sales quota to Cuba of 36,451,920 bags of 100 pounds each. Now what does that mean? Let us look at the figures for 1936 at the same time, for which year we gave Cuba a sales quota of 42,052,140 bags.

1935:
Cuba's quota 36,451,920 bags, at $2 duty	$72,903,840
Cuba's quota 36,451,920 bags, at 90 cents duty	32,806,728
Loss in revenue to United States Treasury, $1.10 duty per bag	40,097,112
1936:
Cuba's quota 42,052,140 bags, at $2 duty	84,104,280
Cuba's quota 42,052,140 bags, at 90 cents duty	37,846,926
Loss in revenue to United States Treasury, $1.10 duty per bag	46,257,354

Or a total for the 2 years the agreement has been in operation we have lost in the form of a decrease in revenue to United States Treasury on account of reduction in duty the sum of $86,354,466.

But this is only a small part of the cost of this agreement. Let us look at another most important factor which is operating more detrimentally to the consumers of the United States than the loss in internal revenue. I refer to the "price premium" which we are paying to the Cuban Sugar Trust. It is this:

The Tariff Commission informs me as late as this very day that the prices for 96° sugar, New York City, c. and f. basis, for sugar to be consumed by the people of the United States and on similar Cuban sugar for consumption by people of the other parts of the world—London, for example—has been as follows:

Price premiums paid to Cuban sugar interests

[Tariff Commission]

	Cuban raw sugar price
	New York	London
Raw sugar, 96°, price per 100 pounds:
1932	$0.926	$0.866
1933	1.233	.971
1934	1.974	.934
1935	2.330	.989
1936	2.692	1.009

Therefore, the premium per 100 pounds which we are paying to Cuba as a result of Cuba enjoying a monopoly on our sugar market has ranged from 6 cents to $1.683 per 100 pounds. This means in dollars for the years—

Price premium paid Cuba over that charged by Cuba to other countries on like amount of sugar
1934	$38,822,825.60
1935	48,882,024.72
1936	70,773,751.62
Total price premium in 3 years as result of negotiation and operation of agreement and the present sugar program	158,478,601.94
Add loss in duty to United States Treasury	86,354,466.00
Total cost to United States consumer of Cuban trade agreement and sugar plan operation	244,833,067.94

WHAT HAVE WE RECEIVED IN PAYMENT FOR THIS IN THE WAY OF TRADE?

The State Department informs me today that for the years mentioned below we enjoyed a percentage of Cuba's total imports as indicated by the percentage figures shown:

	Percent
1928	60.8
1929	58.8
1930	56.6
1931	57.4
1932	54.2
1933	53.5
1934	56.1
1935	58.3
1936 (10 months)	64.5

State Department; see p. 101, vol. 2, hearings.

The Assistant Secretary of State informs us (vol. 2, p. 101, of the hearings):

Our exports to Cuba increased from $35,000,000 in the year preceding the effective date of the agreement, September 3, 1934, to $55,000,000 in the first year under the agreement, and to $64,000,000 in the second year.

TOTAL TRADE WITH CUBA FOR 3 YEARS

For the 3 years referred to by the Assistant Secretary it is seen that we had a total trade with Cuba of $35,000,000, plus $55,000,000, plus $64,000,000, or a total of $154,000,000. For this total trade we have given the Cuban people and those with investments in Cuba a straight subsidy of $244,833,067.94. Furthermore, how much have we gained in percentage? Let us again refer to the figures. During the period from 1928 to 1932, both inclusive, the lowest percentage of Cuba's imports which we enjoyed amounted to 54.2 percent and in 1928 it was 60.8, while in 1936 we reached only 64.5, or less than a 4-percent increase over 1928 and only a fraction over 10 percent compared to the very low 1932 figure. There is no denying the fact that for each dollar of trade we secure from Cuba we are paying a subsidy at the rate of two for one.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is the most conclusive evidence that can possibly be taken from the trade-agreements program in support of my contention that the entire program is being operated without any thought of material gain to the people of the United States. This is the price we are paying Cuban sugar interests to prevent a revolution in Cuba. It is a clean-cut example of how, under such a program, an international game of extortion can be carried on against the United States under the guise of a trade-agreement act.

Before the trade agreement with Cuba went into operation we were enjoying a very fine share of Cuba's trade, particularly in view of the fact that at present, with all of this subsidy, we are getting such a small increase in the percentage of Cuba's imports. If we are to continue a subsidy of this character, certainly we are in position to demand a much greater share of Cuba's import trade. Some day the sugar consumers of this country may have something to say about a raid of this type on their purses. Perhaps the Secretary of Agriculture was thinking about this just recently when he brought up the subject that our sugar program is unduly enriching processors and refiners of sugar. Sugar-trade reports clearly indicate the sugar world is not just clear on what the Secretary did mean by what he said in his press release, but surely it had something to do with the facts presented here this afternoon.

To grow just a bit partisan, what would the press of this Nation, as well as the people, have to say should a tariff duty be imposed that reflected an increase in price on sugar amounting to $213,262,836, which represents the increased price we are paying for our raw sugar over and above that we were paying at the time this present sugar program began to take form? While the President, through his proclamation and Cuban trade agreement, made a paper reduction of $1.10 per 100 pounds in the duty, the fact remains that the price of sugar has constantly risen until today we are paying this enormous subsidy to Cuba.

EFFECT OF THE SUBSIDY

Cuba is rapidly putting her house in order through the exorbitant profits being made on her sales of sugar, so that in due course she will be able to drive the United States domestic producer out of business. It is all a clear-cut case where the American sugar consumer is subsidizing the Cuban Sugar Trust so that they can sell sugar to other parts of the world at a loss and charge the loss thereby incurred against the high profits made on the sales of sugar to the United States. We are thus subsidizing Cuba's trade with other parts of the world and thereby enabling Cuba to hold her world sugar trade as against Java, European, and South American sugar producers. It is a beautiful international game wherein the sales managers have a free hand to do as they will.

PEACE VERSUS MATERIAL GAIN

Mr. Chairman, this House and this Congress has spoken more than once and very emphatically that we prefer peace to material gain. That question has been covered in the neutrality resolutions previously adopted. When those resolutions came before us for consideration there was little debate because of the fact we were of one mind. There we were dealing with the question of neutrality and peace. We sacrificed trade, the material gain which flows from trade, and served notice on the world that we desired to point the way out of some of the international quarrels and wars that have so beset this Nation and all others.

In the Trade Agreements Act the question was one of expanding markets, securing international customers, making material gain, finding an outlet for the agricultural and manufactured goods of our workers. That is the result they expect from the operation of these trade agreements. If the agreements are not to be made and administered in this manner, then let us make it plain to all parties concerned that the whole trade-agreements program is to be used for the specific, fundamental, supreme purpose of bringing about harmony and peace among the nations of the earth and not for the purpose of promoting international trade, material gain, and the making of profits. Having made this clear, the people of this country will give their answer. This has not been made an issue, the people have not yet spoken. Let us keep neutrality and peace under acts for that purpose, and trade and material gain under the proper heading, so our people will not become confused with our aims. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Would the gentleman inform the House how much of the cut of the pie the beet growers of his district have received? I gathered from the gentleman's statement that they had been benefited.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They received their benefit payments.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I know; but they have been benefited in the price they received for their products?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say that they certainly received their benefit payments.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And also the increased price.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That all depends on the provisions of the beet-sugar contract.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Did not the gentleman say the price increased from a certain figure to another certain figure?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Surely.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is not that some of the pie?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That refers to the price on raw sugars. Your refined market is what the farmer participates in, and, furthermore, his receipts are governed by the provisions put into the beet contract which covers the sale of the beets by the farmer to the factory, and to get an answer to your question you must take those contracts and analyze them very carefully. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, at the outset let me say that I am thoroughly in sympathy with the efforts of this administration to restore the foreign trade of the United States by means of reciprocal-trade agreements. I am firmly convinced that the reciprocal trade agreement method of dealing with foreign countries, if properly and wisely administered, offers the principal solution for the problem which has confronted the United States for the past few years in the matter of reestablishing our lost trade with other countries. Unless wisely administered, on the other hand, it can and will become an instrument of destruction of American agriculture.

As the result of high tariff barriers established by this Nation other countries have retaliated with like tariff barriers, with the result that the flow of commerce between our country and other countries has been seriously impeded, with a resultant loss to American industry, American agriculture, and the American workingman. In order that we may reestablish a healthy trade with other nations whereby our surplus products may be purchased by them, it is undoubtedly necessary that the excessively high tariff barriers established in previous administrations be reduced and that concessions be made to countries dealing with us in order that they too might find an outlet for their surplus products. Like all other good doctrines, however, this matter can be carried to an extreme which will work irreparable injury to our own people. I am sure that neither the Congress nor the President has ever had in mind the destruction or even the serious impairment of our own industry or our own agriculture simply for the purpose of providing an outlet either for our own surplus manufactured goods or for those of our foreign neighbors. We can certainly accomplish nothing by furnishing an outlet for American manufactured goods if in order to do so we must destroy American agriculture by bringing foreign agricultural products into competition with them at prices which our farmers cannot meet.

In the enactment of the original law giving the President the authority to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements we virtually gave him an unlimited power of attorney to act on behalf of the United States, and we placed practically no restraints upon the exercise of the discretion of the State Department in the negotiation of these agreements. We did provide that tariffs might not be raised nor lowered more than 50 percent and that goods upon the free list should not be placed upon the dutiable list, and vice versa; but we placed no other restrictions upon the executive department of the Government in the negotiation of these agreements. Congress did not even attempt to suggest to the Executive as to what might be the policy of Congress nor within what limitations the Congress wished to have these agreements negotiated. Congress placed no safeguards in the legislation either for American industry or American agriculture. We delegated full authority to negotiate agreements and hoped that all of our varied interests would be protected.

I should also like to remind you that once these treaties or agreements are negotiated they are not, as is popularly believed, agreements for periods of 3 years, but, on the contrary, they are permanent in character and will last forever, unless after the expiration of 3 years the Secretary of State sees fit to serve notice upon the second party to the agreement of an intention to cancel or modify it. In other words, once this law is enacted and once an agreement is negotiated under it, the Congress loses all control over the negotiation either of new agreements or the modification of existing agreements, and the whole question, including all matters of policy, are vested solely and entirely in the executive department. And since any cancelation or modification would be tantamount to an admission that the State Department had made a mistake in the original agreement, I think we may safely predict that no agreement will ever be materially changed.

As I conceive it, the Congress has a certain responsibility in this matter, and one which it should not surrender entirely into the hands of the Executive. If Congress is going to continue to delegate the power of negotiation of these treaties, then Congress should at least prescribe the limits within which the agreements may be negotiated, and it should at least establish the policy of this Government insofar as it relates to agriculture and to certain basic industries.

It is well known that we people in America maintain a higher standard of living than that which obtains in many other countries of the world with whom we have heretofore dealt or will in the near future deal. The wages paid to American workmen are much higher than those paid in many other countries and the standard of living of the American farmer greatly exceeds the standard in most of the other countries of the earth. For this reason, our American farmer cannot produce his agricultural products as cheaply as the same products can be produced in many other nations. If the American farmer is forced to compete in the open market with the farmers of many other countries, he will either be forced into bankruptcy, and thereby forced to pursue some other line of endeavor and abandon his agricultural pursuits, or, to meet his foreign competitor, he will be forced to lower his standard of living and lower the wages paid to his workmen in order that he may produce his products at a cost which will permit him to compete with his foreign competitor.

Before Congress completely surrenders all power of control over these agreements and before it gives to the State Department of this country an unlimited and unrestricted power of attorney to negotiate them, it seems to me only fair and reasonable that the Congress should prescribe certain limitations insofar as it affects the agriculture of the United States. Before we surrender our home market to the farmers of other nations and before we admit their products in competition with our own, it seems to me only fair and equitable that we should provide that no agreement shall be negotiated which shall do serious and irreparable injury to our own agricultural interests, which, after all, represents approximately 50 percent of our total population.

It is my desire, therefore, to draw attention to the necessity for preserving a home market for American agriculture as well as to the necessity for affording a foreign market for our manufactured goods.

Political logrolling has always been the curse of the tariff question. The producer of every article in the United States would like to see a prohibitive tariff upon that particular article so as to prevent foreign competition. On the other hand, he would also like to see a low tariff upon all of the articles which he is forced to buy in the open market. Necessarily, if a prohibitive tariff is placed upon any article we cannot induce nations producing those articles to deal with us. But neither good business nor good conscience requires that we shall permit foreign products to be sold in American markets for less than it costs Americans to produce the same articles.

My purpose in discussing the question at this time is to call attention to an amendment to the present bill, which I expect to offer at the appropriate time and to acquaint you with some of the reasons for its adoption. The amendment which I will offer would require that in the negotiation of any new agreement under this law or in the renewal or extension of any existing agreement under it, a tariff shall be established and maintained at a point which will equalize the difference in cost of production of all agricultural and horticultural products as between this country and the country dealt with.

This does not propose a prohibitive tariff nor does it even propose a protective tariff. It proposes that our foreign competitors shipping agricultural and horticultural products into the United States shall be required to meet American farmers upon an equal footing and compete with them only for the profits. That is to say, if, for example, it costs an American farmer 40 cents per bushel to produce and deliver into our American markets a bushel of wheat, and if it costs a foreign producer only 20 cents per bushel to produce and deliver a bushel of wheat, then the foreign producer would be required to pay a tariff of 20 cents, so that when his bushel of wheat reached the American market it would have cost him exactly the same thing that it costs the American farmer to deliver his bushel of wheat into the American market. They would both enter the American market with exactly the same cost and they could then compete upon an equal footing in their efforts to sell their products to the American consumer.

Certainly there can be no valid or legitimate objection to maintaining a tariff which would equalize the cost of production and require our competitors to enter our market on an equal footing with us. This, as was so ably pointed out by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER], is and has always been the tariff policy of the Democratic Party.

The objection which we Democrats have heretofore made to the tariff schedules has been that in past years high protective tariffs have been placed upon certain favored articles which have guaranteed to the producer not only his cost of production but a handsome profit as well, and the American consumer has been forced to purchase in a closed market. This policy has been particularly oppressive to the American farmer. He has been forced to sell in an open market and to purchase in a closed and protected market.

I do not seek for the American farmer the unfair and undue advantage which for many years has been accorded to many manufacturers of favored products. Those manufacturers have been given a protective tariff which completely shuts out all legitimate competition. We are familiar with the fact that for many years the American consumer could purchase certain articles, manufactured in the United States, in foreign countries and ship them back into America for less money than he could purchase them at the factory in the United States. This was due to the high protective tariff which guaranteed to these favored manufacturers not only their cost of production but an unreasonably high profit as well. This closed our markets to foreign competition and forced American consumers, particularly the American farmer, to carry the burden of excessive profits to our manufacturers. I seek no such undue advantage for the farmer. But I do seek what I believe to be a fair, reasonable, and equitable adjustment which will force our competitors to meet us on even terms and deliver their products into our markets on an equal economic basis to that which our American farmers are forced to comply with.

I have discussed this proposal with many Members of the House of Representatives. They have all agreed with me that the American farmer is certainly entitled to the measure of protection which would be given him by an equalization tariff. The only objection which any of them have raised to my proposal has been that the difference in cost of production would be a fluctuating figure and that the tariff would fluctuate with the cost of production.

To meet that objection I have proposed in the suggested amendment that the tariff upon agricultural products be established at that figure found by the Tariff Commission at the time of the negotiation of the treaty to be the figure necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production. In other words, let us say that our country negotiates a treaty with the Government of Mexico on the 1st day August 1937, involving agricultural products competing with those of California or Texas. If my amendment is adopted, the Tariff Commission after investigation would determine the difference in cost of production of those articles in Mexico with the cost of production in the United States and this difference in cost of production would be the minimum tariff to be required under the treaty. This figure would hold good throughout the period of the agreement.

Who is there in the House of Representatives who will say that Mexico or Cuba or France or Russia should be permitted to deliver agricultural products into the United States for less than it costs the farmers of the United States to produce those same articles? Certainly no Democrat can take such a position.

Who is there in this House who can reasonably and legitimately object to requiring foreign farmers to compete with American farmers upon an equal footing?

Who is there that insists that the farmers of other nations are entitled to the American market to the exclusion of the American farmers?

Who is there who will deny that permitting the importation of foreign agricultural products at a price less than it costs Americans to produce them is an unreasonable, an unfair, and an unconscionable attitude to take toward American agriculture?

My interest is in American agriculture as a whole and I have prepared my amendment broad enough to cover every agricultural product in the United States. It so happens, however, that my particular information upon this subject is the result of an investigation of the effect of the agreement negotiated with the Republic of Cuba in the summer of 1934, and which brings Cuban products into direct competition with those of my own congressional district.

I think the results of that treaty and the effect which it has had upon the agriculture of my district is well worthy of the consideration of the House of Representatives and of the entire administration.

In the summer of 1934, acting under the original act, the State Department negotiated a treaty with the Republic of Cuba by the terms of which the tariffs upon every agricultural product of my district were materially reduced. The effect upon some commodities has been disastrous and as to others it soon will result in complete disaster. I want to call your attention to the immediate dumping of Cuban agriculture into our eastern markets as the result of this treaty. One of the items dealt with in the treaty is green peppers. This is one of the principal products of my district. The growing seasons in Cuba and in my district are identical. Florida and Cuba are direct competitors in all winter vegetables. The tariffs are reduced under this agreement on all winter vegetables during the height of the Cuban season which is identical with the Florida season.

For the months of January, February, and March 1934, just prior to the negotiation of this treaty, Cuba shipped into the eastern markets of the United States 1,316,372 pounds of green peppers. In January, February, and March of 1935, the season immediately following the negotiation of this treaty, Cuba shipped into our market 3,446,873 pounds. Cuba had not struck its stride at that time. It had experienced the benefits of the treaty for only 1 year. During the succeeding year the acreage in Cuba was materially increased and for the first 3 months of 1936 Cuba shipped into the United States 5,175,745 pounds of green peppers. Since then the acreage of green peppers has been materially increased, and this year the estimate is that the total shipments will exceed 6,000,000 pounds, as compared to one and a third million pounds in the season immediately preceding the negotiation of the treaty.

Now, what is the effect of the dumping of these enormous shipments of Cuban peppers into our market? It has resulted in such a glutting of the market that the price has dropped to the point where our Florida farmers can no longer pay the cost of picking and shipping their crop.

Under the Cuban treaty the tariff is reduced each year on green peppers for a period beginning on January 1. Let me give you the experience of this season as an example of how the reduction in tariffs affects the market of the American-grown peppers. In December of this year, according to recent testimony before the reciprocity committee, Florida peppers were selling for $1.06 per crate net to the Florida farmer. The period of reduced tariffs began on January 1. Within 1 week after the reduced-tariff period began the price had dropped from $1.06 per crate to 35½ cents per crate.

What is true of green peppers has been true of every other article produced in my State. There are today, as I present this argument to you, huhdreds of acres of Florida tomatoes that are rotting on the ground because the price is insufficient to justify the farmers in my district in picking and shipping them. In the first year of the reduced tariffs on tomatoes, Cuban shipments jumped more than 8,000,000 pounds, with the resultant depression of the market and destruction of Florida farmers.

Last year there was an increase of more than 2,000,000 pounds in the shipments of Cuban Lima beans into our market during the winter season. There was an increase last year of more than 3,000,000 pounds in the shipment of Cuban eggplant during the winter season and an increase last year of almost 30,000,000 pounds of mixed vegetables over the year preceding the negotiation of the treaty.

Since this treaty was negotiated, hundreds of additional acres has been planted in Cuba, because Cuban farmers realize that the markets of the United States have been taken away from the farmers of the United States and given to Cuba upon a silver platter; but while they are increasing their plantings by leaps and bounds, hundreds of previously prosperous Florida farmers are being forced to abandon their farms.

I do not seek for my people any unfair or undue advantage, but what I do claim for them is common, ordinary, everyday justice. I claim that as American citizens they are entitled to decent treatment at the hands of their Government and that the first responsibility of this Government is the protection of its own people and not the protection of the people of foreign countries.

It is my contention that we are entitled to the American market at least upon an equal basis with our competitors, and that it is unfair, unreasonable, and unconscionable to require us to submit to cutthroat competition by nations who maintain such a low standard of living and who pay such low wages and low production costs as to permit them to deliver their products into the United States for less than it costs us to produce them in the field.

Let me cite you an example:

It costs a Florida farmer 3½ cents per pound more to produce and deliver tomatoes into the New York market than it costs a Cuban farmer to produce and deliver them into the same market. Now, in order that Florida farmers may compete upon an even basis there should be a tariff of at least 3½ cents per pound to equalize this difference in cost of production. We do not now have such an equalizing tariff. The rate under the trade agreement is 1.8 cents. When this is added to his cost of production the Cuban farmer can sell his tomatoes for a price that will yield him a handsome profit while his Florida competitor at the same price would lose at least a cent a pound. Is this fair? Is it just? Why should not the Cuban enter our market on the same basis with us and compete in a fair market for the profit? What is wrong with such a proposal?

Is this Government more interested in the welfare of the Cuban than the American farmer?

Florida farmers maintain the same standard of living and pay the same wages as obtain in other sections of the country. We pay our taxes for the support of this Government. We conduct ourselves as upright American citizens and we believe that the least that this Government can do in common justice is to give us at least an even break for our own market.

Now, what has been the effect of this agreement with Cuba? What benefits have the people of the United States secured under it? Have the benefits to American manufacturers been greater than the losses to agriculture?

Let me answer those questions. Last year our exports to Cuba had increased by $28,500,000 over what they were for the same period prior to the agreement. That is to say, we sold Cuba $28,500,000 more goods than we did for the year before the agreement. Therefore, on the face of it, manufacturers and shippers benefited to the extent of $28,500,000 last year because of this agreement.

But that is only one side of the question. Last year Cuba shipped into the United States $67,000,000 worth of products more than she shipped for the year prior to the agreement.

In other words, the United States benefited $28,500,000 while Cuba benefited $67,000,000. And, mind you, the Cuban products shipped into the United States robbed American farmers, chiefly in Florida, of a market for the same amount of American products. To state it differently, the trade agreement with Cuba has robbed American producers, principally in Florida, of income of $2.35 for every $1 it has benefited American manufacturers and shippers.

The State Department furnished an outlet for $28,500,000 of American goods, but in doing so it deprived American farmers of an outlet for $67,000,000 of agricultural products. If the State Department can make just a few more trades like this they will succeed in giving away everything we have.

I have cited the effect of the Cuban agreement as an example of what can happen when an unlimited power of attorney is given and when Congress has delegated its full power without restraint and without restrictions. What has happened to the Florida farmer under the Cuban agreement can well happen to the wheat or corn or other farmers of the West and Middle West.

When the original law was before this House in 1934 I proposed the same amendment which I now suggest to the renewal and extension of the law. If the amendment had been adopted at that time the State Department negotiating its agreement with Cuba would have been forced to establish a tariff which would have equalized the difference in cost of production between Cuba and the United States, and the disastrous results which I have already noted would never have happened. If the amendment had then been adopted Cuba would have been required to pay a tariff which would have put them into our own markets on an equal footing and an equal basis with the Florida farmers, and with any other farmers who produce the same products in competion with Cuba.

The adoption of the amendment now is probably too late to do any good insofar as the existing agreement with Cuba is concerned, but it at least will be a pronouncement of a policy by the Congress and will serve notice upon the State Department as to the desire and the wish of Congress to protect the American farmer and to assure him equal consideration with his foreign competitor at least in his own market. And it may save other sections of the country from the same treatment that was accorded my people.

As I said at the beginning, I am greatly in sympathy with the efforts of the administration to restore foreign trade, but I am not sufficiently in sympathy with that policy to endorse a program which would rob the American farmer of his own market in the United States just in order that certain favored manufactured products might be given an outlet in other countries. I am greatly in sympathy with the people of Cuba and of Mexico and of other countries who maintain a much lower standard of living than we do and who pay their laborers much less than we pay ours, but I am not sufficiently in sympathy with them to starve our own American farmers for their benefit. As a matter of fact, the placing of a tariff which will equalize the difference in cost of production will be a boon to the working man and to the farmer in those countries because then those who now exploit the laborer and the farmer in those countries will be forced to pay either higher wages and higher prices to the farmers of those countries or spend the same amount in increased duties and tariffs to this country.

The American market should belong first to the American producer. If we fail to produce a sufficient amount to meet our own market demands it will then be time enough to consider the admission of foreign agricultural products. And when they are admitted the legislative department of this Government should require that they meet our own producers on an equal footing and at an equal cost so as to assure to the American farmer at least a return which will give him back his cost of production.

I do not ask you to deprive the President or the Secretary of State of the power to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements nor do I wish to unnecessarily restrict them in their negotiations. And my amendment will not have any such effect.

As a matter of fact, both the President and the Secretary of State ought to want my amendment adopted. They ought not to want to reduce the import duties to the point where foreign products can be imported for less than it costs our people to produce them. And I have no doubt that they really want to hold up these import duties at a point which will protect our farmers.

A famous American humorist once said: "America has never lost a war nor won a conference." The result of our trade agreement with Cuba has certainly shown the full truth of that statement.

When our State Department undertakes to make a trade agreement with a foreign government, they are in somewhat the same position as a horse trader. The foreign government offers some concession in exchange for a further reduction in tariff rates on some agricultural product, and in order to get the other concession our State Department grants the reduction. I simply want to place a limit below which they cannot go. I want to place them in position to say, "We can't grant your request because the law does not permit us to lower the tariffs below the amount necessary to equalize your cost of production with the cost of production in the United States."

After all, what is wrong with that proposal? [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. COOPER] having resumed the chair, Mr. MEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 96, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, following the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on the anniversary of the birth of Dwight L. Moody.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables to which I referred this afternoon.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman also include the sources of the information contained in the tables?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall be very pleased to do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DINGELL, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. SIROVICH, indefinitely, on account of illness.

SENATE

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1937

The Reverend Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, with earth's noises hushed for these dedicated moments we would be still and know that Thou art the light of all our seeing. We would be delivered from the tyranny of the tangible. Refine and hallow the larger and nobler loyalties of our lives. Rededicate us to those knightly causes worth living for and dying for. With unfaltering courage and unruffled poise, may we toil in these fields of time in the sense of the eternal. In days of crisis and alarm, in this shrinking world where no nation can live to itself, help us to play our part with clear vision and with good will to all men.

Forbid that, with hearts unmoved by compassion at the want and woe of this needy world, we should sit complacently on cushioned seats of privilege. Kindle a flame of holy indignation in our hearts at any denial and betrayal of the white virtues of justice and righteousness and public honesty which have made our country great.

Grant unto those who stand on this holy hill of the Nation vivid visions and vistas of personal and social redemption. Because we have lived and thought and toiled and prayed, may we be recorded among the builders of a better earth, of more abundant lives, of happier homes, of fairer industry, of a more Christ-like social order, of a nobler temple of peace and good will for all nations. Hasten the day when brotherhood and understanding may prevail over selfish seeking and advantage, and on earth Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, February 3, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. TABER, and Mr. BACON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4064) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Hitchcock	Overton

Mr. MCNARY. I announce that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness, and that my colleague the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, because of the importance of the early enactment of the deficiency bill, I ask unanimous consent that the action of the House regarding that bill be laid before the Senate in order that I may make a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, and to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

REORGANIZATION OF JUDICIAL BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT (H. DOC. NO. 142)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I have recently called the attention of the Congress to the clear need for a comprehensive program to reorganize the administrative machinery of the executive branch of our Government. I now make a similar recommendation to the Congress in regard to the judicial branch of the Government, in order that it also may function in accord with modern necessities.

The Constitution provides that the President "shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." No one else is given a similar mandate. It is therefore the duty of the President to advise the Congress in regard to the judiciary whenever he deems such information or recommendation necessary.

I address you for the further reason that the Constitution vests in the Congress direct responsibility in the creation of courts and judicial offices and in the formulation of rules of practice and procedure. It is, therefore, one of the definite duties of the Congress constantly to maintain the effective functioning of the Federal judiciary.

The judiciary has often found itself handicapped by insufficient personnel with which to meet a growing and more complex business. It is true that the physical facilities of conducting the business of the courts have been greatly improved, in recent years, through the erection of suitable quarters, the provision of adequate libraries, and the addition of subordinate court officers. But in many ways these are merely the trappings of judicial office. They play a minor part in the processes of justice.

Since the earliest days of the Republic, the problem of the personnel of the courts has needed the attention of the Congress. For example, from the beginning, over repeated protests to President Washington, the Justices of the Supreme Court were required to "ride circuit" and, as circuit justices, to hold trials throughout the length and breadth of the land—a practice which endured over a century.

In almost every decade since 1789, changes have been made by the Congress whereby the numbers of judges and the duties of judges in Federal courts have been altered in one way or another. The Supreme Court was established with 6 members in 1789; it was reduced to 5 in 1801; it was increased to 7 in 1807; it was increased to 9 in 1837; it was increased to 10 in 1863; it was reduced to 7 in 1866; it was increased to 9 in 1869.

The simple fact is that today a new need for legislative action arises because the personnel of the Federal judiciary is insufficient to meet the business before them. A growing body of our citizens complain of the complexities, the delays, and the expense of litigation in United States courts.

A letter from the Attorney General, which I submit herewith, justifies by reasoning and statistics the common impression created by our overcrowded Federal dockets—and it proves the need for additional judges.

Delay in any court results in injustice.

It makes lawsuits a luxury available only to the few who can afford them or who have property interests to protect which are sufficiently large to repay the cost. Poorer litigants are compelled to abandon valuable rights or to accept inadequate or unjust settlements because of sheer inability to finance or to await the end of a long litigation. Only by speeding up the processes of the law and thereby reducing their cost, can we eradicate the growing impression that the courts are chiefly a haven for the well-to-do.

Delays in the determination of appeals have the same effect. Moreover, if trials of original actions are expedited and existing accumulations of cases are reduced, the volume of work imposed on the circuit court of appeals will further increase.

The attainment of speedier justice in the courts below will enlarge the task of the Supreme Court itself. And still more work would be added by the recommendation which I make later in this message for the quicker determination of constitutional questions by the highest court.

Even at the present time the Supreme Court is laboring under a heavy burden. Its difficulties in this respect were superficially lightened some years ago by authorizing the Court, in its discretion, to refuse to hear appeals in many classes of cases. This discretion was so freely exercised that in the last fiscal year, although 867 petitions for review were presented to the Supreme Court, it declined to hear 717 cases. If petitions in behalf of the Government are excluded, it appears that the Court permitted private litigants to prosecute appeals in only 108 cases out of 803 applications. Many of the refusals were doubtless warranted. But can it be said that full justice is achieved when a court is forced by the sheer necessity of keeping up with its business to decline, without even an explanation, to hear 87 percent of the cases presented to it by private litigants?

It seems clear, therefore, that the necessity of relieving present congestion extends to the enlargement of the capacity of all the Federal courts.

A part of the problem of obtaining a sufficient number of judges to dispose of cases is the capacity of the judges themselves. This brings forward the question of aged or infirm judges—a subject of delicacy and yet one which requires frank discussion.

In the Federal courts there are in all 237 life-tenure permanent judgeships. Twenty-five of them are now held by judges over 70 years of age and eligible to leave the bench on full pay. Originally no pension or retirement allowance was provided by the Congress. When, after 80 years of our national history, the Congress made provision for pensions, it found a well-entrenched tradition among judges to cling to their posts, in many instances far beyond their years of physical or mental capacity. Their salaries were small. As with other men, responsibilities and obligations accumulated. No alternative had been open to them except to attempt to perform the duties of their offices to the very edge of the grave.

In exceptional cases, of course, judges, like other men, retain to an advanced age full mental and physical vigor. Those not so fortunate are often unable to perceive their own infirmities. "They seem to be tenacious of the appearance of adequacy." The voluntary retirement law of 1869 provided, therefore, only a partial solution. That law, still in force, has not proved effective in inducing aged judges to retire on a pension.

This result had been foreseen in the debates when the measure was being considered. It was then proposed that when a judge refused to retire upon reaching the age of 70, an additional judge should be appointed to assist in the work of the court. The proposal passed the House but was eliminated in the Senate.

With the opening of the twentieth century, and the great increase of population and commerce, and the growth of a more complex type of litigation, similar proposals were introduced in the Congress. To meet the situation, in 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916, the Attorneys General then in office recommended to the Congress that when a district or a circuit judge failed to retire at the age of 70, an additional judge be appointed in order that the affairs of the court might be promptly and adequately discharged.

In 1919 a law was finally passed providing that the President "may" appoint additional district and circuit judges, but only upon a finding that the incumbent judge over 70 "is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability of permanent character." The discretionary and indefinite nature of this legislation has rendered it ineffective. No President should be asked to determine the ability or disability of any particular judge.

The duty of a judge involves more than presiding or listening to testimony or arguments. It is well to remember that the mass of details involved in the average of law cases today is vastly greater and more complicated than even 20 years ago. Records and briefs must be read; statutes, decisions, and extensive material of a technical, scientific, statistical, and economic nature must be searched and studied; opinions must be formulated and written. The modern tasks of judges call for the use of full energies.

Modern complexities call also for a constant infusion of new blood in the courts, just as it is needed in executive functions of the Government and in private business. A lowered mental or physical vigor leads men to avoid an examination of complicated and changed conditions. Little by little, new facts become blurred through old glasses fitted, as it were, for the needs of another generation; older men, assuming that the scene is the same as it was in the past, cease to explore or inquire into the present or the future.

We have recognized this truth in the civil service of the Nation and of many States by compelling retirement on pay at the age of 70. We have recognized it in the Army and Navy by retiring officers at the age of 64. A number of States have recognized it by providing in their constitutions for compulsory retirement of aged judges.

Life tenure of judges, assured by the Constitution, was designed to place the courts beyond temptations or influences which might impair their judgments; it was not intended to create a static judiciary. A constant and systematic addition of younger blood will vitalize the courts and better equip them to recognize and apply the essential concepts of justice in the light of the needs and the facts of an ever-changing world.

It is obvious, therefore, from both reason and experience, that some provision must be adopted which will operate automatically to supplement the work of older judges and accelerate the work of the court.

I therefore earnestly recommend that the necessity of an increase in the number of judges be supplied by legislation providing for the appointment of additional judges in all Federal courts, without exception, where there are incumbent judges of retirement age who do not choose to retire or to resign. If an elder judge is not in fact incapacitated, only good can come from the presence of an additional judge in the crowded state of the dockets; if the capacity of an elder judge is in fact impaired, the appointment of an additional judge is indispensable. This seems to be a truth which cannot be contradicted.

I also recommend that the Congress provide machinery for taking care of sudden or long-standing congestion in the lower courts. The Supreme Court should be given power to appoint an administrative assistant who may be called a proctor. He would be charged with the duty of watching the calendars and the business of all the courts in the Federal system. The Chief Justice thereupon should be authorized to make a temporary assignment of any circuit or district judge hereafter appointed in order that he may serve as long as needed in any circuit or district where the courts are in arrears.

I attach a carefully considered draft of a proposed bill which, if enacted, would, I am confident, afford substantial relief. The proposed measure also contains a limit on the total number of judges who might thus be appointed, and also a limit on the potential size of any one of our Federal courts.

These proposals do not raise any issue of constitutional law. They do not suggest any form of compulsory retirement for incumbent judges. Indeed, those who have reached the retirement age but desire to continue their judicial work would be able to do so under less physical and mental strain and would be able to play a useful part in relieving the growing congestion in the business of our courts. Among them are men of eminence and great ability, whose services the Government would be loath to lose. If, on the other hand, any judge eligible for retirement should feel that his court would suffer because of an increase in its membership, he may retire or resign under already existing provisions of law if he wishes so to do. In this connection let me say that the pending proposal to extend to the Justices of the Supreme Court the same retirement privileges now available to other Federal judges has my entire approval.

One further matter requires immediate attention. We have witnessed the spectacle of conflicting decisions in both trial and appellate courts on the constitutionality of every form of important legislation. Such a welter of uncomposed differences of judicial opinion has brought the law, the courts, and, indeed, the entire administration of justice dangerously near to disrepute.

A Federal statute is held legal by one judge in one district; it is simultaneously held illegal by another judge in another district. An act valid in one judicial circuit is invalid in another judicial circuit. Thus rights fully accorded to one group of citizens may be denied to others. As a practical matter this means that for periods running as long as 1 year or 2 years or 3 years—until final determination can be made by the Supreme Court—the law loses its most indispensable element—equality.

Moreover, during the long processes of preliminary motions, original trials, petitions for rehearings, appeals, reversals on technical grounds requiring retrials, motions before the Supreme Court and the final hearing by the highest tribunal—during all this time labor, industry, agriculture, commerce, and the Government itself go through an unconscionable period of uncertainty and embarrassment. And it is well to remember that during these long processes the normal operations of society and government are handicapped in many cases by differing and divided opinions in the lower courts and by the lack of any clear guide for the dispatch of business. Thereby our legal system is fast losing another essential of justice—certainty.

Finally, we find the processes of government itself brought to a complete stop from time to time by injunctions issued almost automatically, sometimes even without notice to the Government, and not infrequently in clear violation of the principle of equity that injunctions should be granted only in those rare cases of manifest illegality and irreparable damage against which the ordinary course of the law offers no protection. Statutes which the Congress enacts are set aside or suspended for long periods of time, even in cases to which the Government is not a party.

In the uncertain state of the law it is not difficult for the ingenious to devise novel reasons for attacking the validity of new legislation or its application. While these questions are laboriously brought to issue and debated through a series of courts, the Government must stand aside. It matters not that the Congress has enacted the law, that the Executive has signed it, and that the administrative machinery is waiting to function. Government by injunction lays a heavy hand upon normal processes; and no important statute can take effect—against any individual or organization with the means to employ lawyers and engage in wide-flung litigation—until it has passed through the whole hierarchy of the courts. Thus the judiciary, by postponing the effective date of acts of the Congress, is assuming an additional function and is coming more and more to constitute a scattered, loosely organized, and slowly operating third house of the National Legislature.

This state of affairs has come upon the Nation gradually over a period of decades. In my annual message to this Congress I expressed some views and some hopes.

Now, as an immediate step, I recommend that the Congress provide that no decision, injunction, judgment, or decree on any constitutional question be promulgated by any Federal court without previous and ample notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity for the United States to present evidence and be heard. This is to prevent court action on the constitutionality of acts of the Congress in suits between private individuals, where the Government is not a party to the suit, without giving opportunity to the Government of the United States to defend the law of the land.

I also earnestly recommend that in cases in which any court of first instance determines a question of constitutionality the Congress provide that there shall be a direct and immediate appeal to the Supreme Court, and that such cases take precedence over all other matters pending in that Court. Such legislation will, I am convinced, go far to alleviate the inequality, uncertainty, and delay in the disposition of vital questions of constitutionality arising under our fundamental law.

My desire is to strengthen the administration of justice and to make it a more effective servant of public need. In the American ideal of government the courts find an essential and constitutional place. In striving to fulfill that ideal, not only the judges but the Congress and the Executive as well must do all in their power to bring the judicial organization and personnel to the high standards of usefulness which sound and efficient government and modern conditions require.

This message has dealt with four present needs:

First, to eliminate congestion of calendars and to make the judiciary as a whole less static by the constant and systematic addition of new blood to its personnel; second, to make the judiciary more elastic by providing for temporary transfers of circuit and district judges to those places where Federal courts are most in arrears; third, to furnish the Supreme Court practical assistance in supervising the conduct of business in the lower courts; fourth, to eliminate inequality, uncertainty, and delay now existing in the determination of constitutional questions involving Federal statutes.

If we increase the personnel of the Federal courts, so that cases may be promptly decided in the first instance, and may be given adequate and prompt hearing on all appeals; if we invigorate all the courts by the persistent infusion of new blood; if we grant to the Supreme Court further power and responsibility in maintaining the efficiency of the entire Federal judiciary; and if we assure Government participation in the speedier consideration and final determination of all constitutional questions, we shall go a long way toward our high objectives. If these measures achieve their aim, we may be relieved of the necessity of considering any fundamental changes in the powers of the courts or the Constitution of our Government—changes which involve consequences so far reaching as to cause uncertainty as to the wisdom of such course.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1937.

FEBRUARY 2, 1937.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Delay in the administration of justice is the outstanding defect of our Federal judicial system. It has been a cause of concern to practically every one of my predecessors in office. It has exasperated the bench, the bar, the business community, and the public.

The litigant conceives the judge as one promoting justice through the mechanism of the courts. He assumes that the directing power of the judge is exercised over its officers from the time a case is filed with the clerk of the court. He is entitled to assume that the judge is pressing forward litigation in the full recognition of the principle that "justice delayed is justice denied." It is a mockery of justice to say to a person when he files suit that he may receive a decision years later. Under a properly ordered system rights should be determined promptly. The course of litigation should be measured in months and not in years.

Yet in some jurisdictions the delays in the administration of justice are so interminable that to institute suit is to embark on a life-long adventure. Many persons submit to acts of injustice rather than resort to the courts. Inability to secure a prompt judicial adjudication leads to improvident and unjust settlements. Moreover, the time factor is an open invitation to those who are disposed to institute unwarranted litigation or interpose unfounded defenses in the hope of forcing an adjustment which could not be secured upon the merits. This situation frequently results in extreme hardships. The small businessman or the litigant of limited means labors under a grave and constantly increasing disadvantage because of his inability to pay the price of justice.

Statistical data indicate that in many districts a disheartening and unavoidable interval must elapse between the date that issue is joined in a pending case and the time when it can be reached for trial in due course. These computations do not take into account the delays that occur in the preliminary stages of litigation or the postponements after a case might normally be expected to be heard.

The evil is a growing one. The business of the courts is continually increasing in volume, importance, and complexity. The average case load borne by each judge has grown nearly 50 percent since 1913, when the district courts were first organized on their present basis. When the courts are working under such pressure it is inevitable that the character of their work must suffer.

The number of new cases offset those that are disposed of, so that the courts are unable to decrease the enormous backlog of undigested matters. More than 50,000 pending cases (exclusive of bankruptcy proceedings) overhang the Federal dockets—a constant menace to the orderly processes of justice. Whenever a single case requires a protracted trial, the routine business of the court is further neglected. It is an intolerable situation and we should make shift to amend it.

Efforts have been made from time to time to alleviate some of the conditions that contribute to the slow rate of speed with which causes move through the courts. The Congress has recently conferred on the Supreme Court the authority to prescribe rules of procedure after verdict in criminal cases and the power to adopt and promulgate uniform rules of practice for civil actions at law in the district courts. It has provided terms of court in certain places at which Federal courts had not previously convened. A small number of judges have been added from time to time.

Despite these commendable accomplishments, sufficient progress has not been made. Much remains to be done in developing procedure and administration, but this alone will not meet modern needs. The problem must be approached in a more comprehensive fashion if the United States is to have a judicial system worthy of the Nation. Reason and necessity require the appointment of a sufficient number of judges to handle the business of the Federal courts. These additional judges should be of a type and age which would warrant us in believing that they would vigorously attack their dockets, rather than permit their dockets to overwhelm them.

The cost of additional personnel should not deter us. It must be borne in mind that the expense of maintaining the judicial system constitutes hardly three-tenths of 1 percent of the cost of maintaining the Federal establishment. While the estimates for the current fiscal year aggregate over $23,000,000 for the maintenance of the legislative branch of the Government and over $2,100,000,000 for the permanent agencies of the executive branch, the estimated cost of maintaining the judiciary is only about $6,500,000. An increase in the judicial personnel, which I earnestly recommend, would result in a hardly perceptible percentage of increase in the total annual Budget.

This result should not be achieved, however, merely by creating new judicial positions in specific circuits or districts. The reform should be effectuated on the basis of a consistent system which would revitalize our whole judicial structure and assure the activity of judges at places where the accumulation of business is greatest. As congestion is a varying factor and cannot be foreseen, the system should be flexible and should permit the temporary assignment of judges to points where they appear to be most needed. The newly created personnel should constitute a mobile force, available for service in any part of the country at the assignment and direction of the Chief Justice. A functionary might well be created to be known as proctor, or by some other suitable title, to be appointed by the Supreme Court and to act under its direction, charged with the duty of continuously keeping informed as to the state of Federal judicial business throughout the United States and of assisting the Chief Justice in assigning judges to pressure areas.

I append hereto certain statistical information, which will give point to the suggestions I have made.

These suggestions are designed to carry forward the program for improving the processes of justice which we have discussed and worked upon since the beginning of your first administration.

The time has come when further legislation is essential.

To speed justice, to bring it within the reach of every citizen, to free it of unnecessary entanglements and delays are primary obligations of our Government.

Respectfully submitted.

HOMER S. CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.

I. Comparative statistics of cases filed in United States district courts during the year ending June 30, 1913, and the year ending June 30, 1936

The year 1913 was selected as a basis of comparison because it was the first year of the existence of the district courts on the present basis.

	Year ending June 30, 1913	Year ending June 30, 1936
Total number of district judges	92	154
Criminal and civil cases filed (other than bankruptcy)	25,372	75,040
Average number of cases filed per each judge	276	484
Number of bankruptcy proceedings filed	30,788	[1] 60,624

Number of cases (other than bankruptcy) filed and disposed of in the district courts during the fiscal years 1931–36 [1]

NUMBER OF CASES FILED

	1931	1932	1933	1934	1935	1936
United States civil	12,958	18,734	14,319	8,564	11,679	12,885
Other civil	24,000	26,326	26,656	26,472	24,403	26,342
Criminal	26,342	26,214	25,122	27,476	35,365	35,813
Total	63,300	71,274	66,097	62,512	71,447	75,040

NUMBER OF CASES TERMINATED

United States civil	12,907	14,101	14,474	11,200	12,575	14,435
Other civil	24,375	26,045	26,074	28,035	24,569	26,949
Criminal	30,180	27,794	25,513	26,534	32,299	35,396
Total	67,462	67,940	66,061	65,769	69,443	77,780

[1] In order to render the figures properly comparable, cases under the National Prohibition Act have been excluded from the computations.

The foregoing figures indicate that the number of cases terminated each year approximately equals the number of new cases filed, so that the courts are making no substantial gain in disposing of arrears.

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) When any judge of a court of the United States, appointed to hold his office during good behavior, has heretofore or hereafter attained the age of 70 years and has held a commission or commissions as judge of any such court or courts at least 10 years, continuously or otherwise, and within 6 months thereafter has neither resigned nor retired, the President, for each such judge who has not so resigned or retired, shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint one additional judge to the court to which the former is commissioned: Provided, That no additional judge shall be appointed hereunder if the judge who is of retirement age dies, resigns, or retires prior to the nomination of such additional judge.

(b) The number of judges of any court shall be permanently increased by the number appointed thereto under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section. No more than 50 judges shall be appointed thereunder, nor shall any judge be so appointed if such appointment would result in (1) more than 15 members of the Supreme Court of the United States, (2) more than 2 additional members so appointed to a circuit court of appeals, the Court of Claims, the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the Customs Court, or (3) more than twice the number of judges now authorized to be appointed for any district or, in the case of judges appointed for more than one district, for any such group of districts.

(c) That number of judges which is at least two-thirds of the number of which the Supreme Court of the United States consists, or three-fifths of the number of which the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, or the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals consists, shall constitute a quorum of such court.

(d) An additional judge shall not be appointed under the provisions of this section when the judge who is of retirement age is commissioned to an office as to which Congress has provided that a vacancy shall not be filled.

SEC. 2. (a) Any circuit judge hereafter appointed may be designated and assigned from time to time by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in the circuit court of appeals for any circuit. Any district judge hereafter appointed may be designated and assigned from time to time by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in any district court, or, subject to the authority of the Chief Justice, by the senior circuit judge of his circuit for service in any district court within the circuit. A district judge designated and assigned to another district hereunder may hold court separately and at the same time as the district judge in such district. All designations and assignments made hereunder shall be filed in the office of the clerk and entered on the minutes of both the court from and to which a judge is designated and assigned, and thereafter the judge so designated and assigned shall be authorized to discharge all the judicial duties (except the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of a newspaper or depository of funds) of a judge of the court to which he is designated and assigned. The designation and assignment of a judge shall not impair his authority to perform such judicial duties of the court to which he was commissioned as may be necessary or appropriate. The designation and assignment of any judge may be terminated at any time by order of the Chief Justice or the senior circuit judge, as the case may be.

(b) After the designation and assignment of a judge by the Chief Justice, the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which such judge is commissioned may certify to the Chief Justice any consideration which such senior circuit judge believes to make advisable that the designated judge remain in or return for service in the court to which he was commissioned. If the Chief Justice deems the reasons sufficient, he shall revoke or designate the time of termination of such designation and assignment.

(c) In case a trial or hearing has been entered upon but has not been concluded before the expiration of the period of service of a district judge designated and assigned hereunder, the period of service shall, unless terminated under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, be deemed to be extended until the trial or hearing has been concluded. Any designated and assigned district judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of any time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation. Any designated and assigned circuit judge who has sat on another court than his own shall have power, notwithstanding the expiration of any time limit in his designation, to participate in the decision of all matters submitted to the court while he was sitting and to perform or participate in any act appropriate to the disposition or review of matters submitted while he was sitting on such court, and his action thereon shall be as valid as if it had been taken while sitting on such court and within the period of his designation.

SEC. 3. (a) The Supreme Court shall have power to appoint a proctor. It shall be his duty: (1) To obtain and, if deemed by the Court to be desirable, to publish information as to the volume, character, and status of litigation in the district courts and circuit courts of appeals, and such other information as the Supreme Court may from time to time require by order, and it shall be the duty of any judge, clerk, or marshal of any court of the United States promptly to furnish such information as may be required by the proctor; (2) to investigate the need of assigning district and circuit judges to other courts and to make recommendations thereon to the Chief Justice; (3) to recommend, with the approval of the Chief Justice, to any court of the United States methods for expediting cases pending on its dockets; and (4) to perform such other duties consistent with his office as the Court shall direct.

(b) The proctor shall, by requisition upon the Public Printer, have any necessary printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office and authority is conferred upon the Public Printer to do such printing and binding.

(c) The salary of the proctor shall be $10,000 per annum, payable out of the Treasury in monthly installments, which shall be in full compensation for the services required by law. He shall also be allowed, in the discretion of the Chief Justice, stationery, supplies, travel expenses, equipment, necessary professional and clerical assistance, and miscellaneous expenses appropriate for performing the duties imposed by this section. The expenses in connection with the maintenance of his office shall be paid from the appropriation of the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the salaries of additional judges and the other purposes of this act during the fiscal year 1937.

SEC. 5. When used in this act—

(a) The term "judge of retirement age" means a judge of a court of the United States, appointed to hold his office during good behavior, who has attained the age of 70 years and has held a commission or commissions as judge of any such court or courts at least 10 years, continuously or otherwise, and within 6 months thereafter, whether or not he is eligible for retirement, has neither resigned nor retired.

(b) The term "circuit court of appeals" includes the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; the term "senior circuit judge" includes the Chief Justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; and the term "circuit" includes the District of Columbia.

(c) The term "district court" includes the District Court of the District of Columbia but does not include the district court in any territory or insular possession.

(d) The term "judge" includes justice.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect on the thirtieth day after the date of its enactment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the message of the President, together with the letter of the Attorney General, draft of a bill, and other accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that they be printed as a Senate document. I also ask that the accompanying papers be printed in the RECORD following the message.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF WOOL PRODUCTION AND MARKETING

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] as a member of the Special Committee to Investigate Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool, created under Senate Resolution 160, as continued by Senate Resolution 315, Seventy-fourth Congress, to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of the late Robert D. Carey, formerly a Senator from the State of Wyoming.

G. A. TROTTER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of G. A. Trotter, former superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Zuni Indian Agency, N. Mex., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ALLOTMENTS TO MISSION RESERVATION INDIANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to repeal the provision in the act of March 2, 1917, directing the making of allotments to Indians of the Mission Indian Reservations, Calif., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

House Concurrent Resolution 3

Whereas the welfare of the great Commonwealth of Iowa depends upon the stabilization of agriculture; and

Whereas the emergency farm-loan interest rate of 3½ percent made possible by special act of the National Congress to the farmer borrowers having Federal land-bank loans expires July 1, 1937; and

Whereas thousands of farmers throughout the State of Iowa have Land Bank Commissioner loans which call for 5-percent interest and which require principal payments commencing September 1, 1936, of 5 percent or 10 percent in addition to the interest payments; and

Whereas it appears to be possible to extend lower interest rates to the farmers without an excessive burden to the taxpayer and with almost no administrative costs; and

Whereas agricultural recovery has been delayed by droughts and pests, thereby causing hundreds of farmers throughout the State of Iowa to become delinquent in the payment of interest and taxes; and

Whereas it is our opinion that low-interest rates accorded to the farmers of Iowa through the Federal land-bank system contributes much to the stabilization of agriculture: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Iowa respectfully petitions the Members of the National Congress to use every possible effort to secure the passage of a law making the 3½-percent interest rate permanent to the farmer borrowers of the Federal land bank or at least extend the same for a period of not less than 2 years, and that this legislature respectfully urges the Members of the National Congress to use every possible effort to secure the passage of a law making 4-percent interest rate permanent to the farmer borrowers of the Land Bank Commissioner and to extend the principal payments on Land Bank Commissioner loans over a period of 34 years as provided for Federal land-bank loans, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each United States Senator and Representative from the State of Iowa, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, to the President of the United States Senate, and to the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to name one of the battleships now under construction "Iowa"

Whereas battleships of the United States Navy are named after the several States of the Union; and

Whereas at the present time there is no battleship of the United State Navy named after the State of Iowa; and

Whereas there have been two battleships and a third battleship under construction named after the State of Iowa—the first being a frigate, 3,850 tons displacement, carrying 25 guns, built at the naval yards at Boston, Mass., 1862–66, and ceased to be a part of the United States Navy in 1883; the second a coast battleship, with 11,346 tons displacement, authorized by act of Congress July 19, 1892, named for the State of Iowa, launched March 28, 1896, commissioned June 16, 1897, as one of the ships composing the squadron commanded by Admiral Sampson during the Spanish-American War and participated in the Battle of Santiago Bay against the Spanish Fleet July 3, 1898. On March 29, 1919, the name was changed, the ship was put out of commission, and sunk by gunfire for experimental purposes March 22, 1923. The third vessel named Iowa was under construction on February 8, 1922. Upon the signing of the treaty limiting naval armament construction was halted. Upon the ratification of the treaty the contract for construction was canceled, the vessel broken up and scrapped according to the terms of the said treaty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That we petition and pray the President and the Congress of the United States to name and designate one of the battleships now under construction for and after the State of Iowa;

That on the passage of this resolution the secretary of state shall certify a copy hereof to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, Secretary of the Navy, and to each Senator and Representative of the State of Iowa at Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to appropriate funds to provide care for needy, aged, and unallotted Indians

Whereas there are several hundred unallotted Indians eligible to receive old-age assistance in the State of Minnesota; and

Whereas because of their status as residents of Indian reservations they and their property are not subject to taxation by the State or county in which they reside; and

Whereas because of the heavy burden placed upon these counties in making payments of old-age assistance to qualified, taxpaying residents, the counties are under excessive financial strain; and

Whereas it is an undue hardship upon the said State and counties to provide care for these unallotted Indians because of the facts above stated: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring), That we respectfully urge and petition the Congress of the United States and President Franklin D. Roosevelt to pass legislation providing Federal funds for the care and relief of these above-referred-to needy, aged, unallotted Indians; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; the Honorable John Garner, Vice President of the United States; the Honorable William Bankhead, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Minnesota in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States urging the prompt enactment of legislation to provide the necessary plans and funds to furnish adequate seed-grain supplies to the needy farmers of the State of Montana

Whereas owing to the fact that many of our farmers have suffered severe losses in recent years, wherein abnormally low wheat prices of the early thirties have consumed all reserves had by the farmers; the unprecedented and recurrent drought conditions, and also the cricket and grasshopper losses of the past several years in this State have all contributed to the condition existing that there are a large number of farmers now unable to provide the necessary funds for planting crops in the 1937 season, which makes it imperatively important that seed loans be provided in time to enable the farmer to properly plan and plant his crop; and

Whereas in former years seed loans have not been made available to the farmer in proper time to be beneficial in the planting season, thus greatly reducing the opportunity to produce a crop which will enable him to repay the loan: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Montana, That we petition the United States Congress that action be taken as soon as possible to establish seed-loan agencies to receive applications and to make such seed loans in time to secure the seed necessary not later than March 1, 1937, thus insuring the planting in the early season, and further petition that the United States Congress immediately make a public announcement of its seed distribution and financial policy for 1937; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed forthwith, after the passage and approval by the Governor of this joint memorial, to transmit to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana, and the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., a true copy of this memorial.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of Spiros S. Varkas, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the consideration of certain devices suggested by him to increase the safe operation and speed of airplanes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Young Republicans of Allegheny County, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide flood protection along the Allegheny, Monongahela, and Ohio Rivers, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the State Camp of Pennsylvania, Patriotic Order Sons of America, Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of a permanent and mandatory neutrality law, and protesting against the shipment of munitions to foreign nations engaged in war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Atlantic States Shippers Advisory Board, of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation providing a 6-hour day for railroad employees, so-called full crews, limitation of train lengths, and Government ownership of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Flint Federation of Labor, of Flint; the Ann Arbor Trades and Labor Council, of Ann Arbor; the Workers Alliance of Wayne County; and the Hamtramck Branch, W. A. A., all in the State of Michigan, favoring continuation of the so-called Special or Subcommittee on Civil Liberties as a permanent committee of the Senate, and favoring the making of an appropriation of $500,000 for the expenses thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Rules.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 936) to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 31) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 56. A bill for the relief of William Frank Lipps (Rept. No. 32); and

S. 508. A bill to authorize the award of the Purple Heart decoration to Maj. Charles H. Sprague (Rept. No. 33).

Mr. SHEPPARD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 211) for the relief of James J. Jordan, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 34) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 711) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, and particularly sections 863, 911, and 914 of the said code, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 35) thereon.

Mr. MCCARRAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 204) relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 36) thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF DISTRICT TAXES AND FISCAL AFFAIRS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from the Committee on the District of Columbia I report a resolution and, in view of the fact that it calls for an appropriation from the contingent fund of the Senate in aid of the work of the District of Columbia Committee, I presume it should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the resolution will be referred to the Audit and Control Committee.

The resolution (S. Res. 77) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States has transmitted to the Congress a budget for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, including an amount for Federal payment on behalf of the expenses of the District of Columbia of approximately $2,300,000, based upon the report of a commission authorized by Public Act No. 762 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 23, 1936; and

Whereas the method of the determination of the present proposed sum and the proposed method in the said report for determining future payments involve changes in the substantive laws relating to the District of Columbia and to various Federal departments and agencies which have functions in connection with the District of Columbia; and

Whereas the said report, after elaborate analyses, reaches the conclusion that the government of the District of Columbia, in its present form, requires complete revision in the interest of more efficient administration and of a greater voice in the control of the local government for the people resident in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas the findings of the said report and the text of the said budget message indicate the immediate need of the complete revision of the tax structure in the District of Columbia and an examination of the existing tax laws and methods of tax collection in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas a committee heretofore appointed by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of making a study of the government of the District of Columbia, particularly with a view to ascertaining the extent of duplication among the organizations and agencies thereof and determining what changes should be made in the form and administration of said government, has made a comprehensive study and investigation and submitted a report making recommendations worthy of further consideration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That for the purpose of providing the Senate with information to serve as a basis for such legislation as may, in its judgment, be found necessary for the control of the structure and methods of operation of the government of the District of Columbia, taxes for the District of Columbia, and the fiscal relations of the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia, and for such other and related purposes as may, in the judgment of the committee, as herein authorized, be necessary and proper, the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any duly authorized subcommittees thereof, is hereby directed to investigate the government of the District of Columbia, taxes related to the District of Columbia, the fiscal relations of the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia, and such related matters as the said committee may deem necessary. The said Committee on the District of Columbia shall make a final report of its investigations, with recommendations, to the Senate not later than January 1, 1938, and may make such interim reports and recommendations as, in its judgment, may be deemed necessary or may be hereafter directed.

For the purposes of this resolution the said Committee on the District of Columbia, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings and meetings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress as the committee may authorize until the final report of the said committee is submitted; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of necessary witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths, take such testimony, and require such reports from the government of the District of Columbia and agencies of the United States Government as it deems desirable and necessary. The said committee is authorized to make such expenditures as it may deem necessary and proper for the purposes of its investigation and to employ clerical, technical, and expert services, by contract or otherwise, without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the estate of John F. Hackfeld, deceased; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF COMMISSION

Mr. MURRAY. On behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and myself I ask consent to introduce a joint resolution for appropriate reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

By Mr. MURRAY (for himself and Mr. HATCH):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 68) providing for the appointment of a National Unemployment and Relief Commission; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR MEN AND WOMEN—INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for men and women, and that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I may say that the reason for this action is that I have today, together with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], introduced a similar joint resolution, being Senate Joint Resolution 65.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4064) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT OF NEUTRALITY LAW

Mr. PITTMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war", approved August 31, 1935, being Public Resolution No. 67, Seventy-fourth Congress (S. J. Res. 173), as amended by joint resolution approved February 29, 1936, entitled "Joint resolution extending and amending the joint resolution (Public Res. No. 67, 74th Cong.), approved August 31, 1935", which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

RESERVE REQUIREMENTS OF FEDERAL RESERVE MEMBER BANKS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution requesting information. I hope it may be acted upon by the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 78) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is requested to transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a report setting forth the reasons for the issuance of the recent order of the Board increasing the reserve requirements of member banks after May 1, 1937, the actual and probable effect of such order with respect to interest rates upon public and private obligations, and its probable effect upon the banking system of the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that the resolution submitted by the Senator from North Dakota asks the Federal Reserve Board for information touching an order which it has recently issued.

Mr. NYE. That is all.

Mr. ROBINSON. So far as I am informed, there is no objection to the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

FULL RESERVE SYSTEM OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a few days ago I presented a resolution, which was appropriately referred to the Finance Committee, seeking a study by the Social Security Board of a proposed change in the provisions for compulsory old-age pensions under the Social Security Act. The change would involve the abandonment of the full reserve system, involving the ultimate accumulation of a $47,000,000,000 reserve and the substitution of a pay-as-you-go formula with only a contingent reserve.

It is believed that a compulsory, tax-supported Government pension system does not need the full reserve. If this is so, one of two alternative improvements is possible: Either increased pensions may be paid at an earlier date or the 2-percent pay-roll tax, shared equally by employer and employee, need not be progressively increased to an ultimate 6 percent for many years to come.

I now present excerpts from letters from 13 presidents of leading insurance companies of the United States approving the safety and the wisdom of abandoning the full reserve system and transferring to a pay-as-you-go basis with only an emergency reserve. These opinions are important because they bespeak the viewpoint of experts in the insurance field. I ask that these excerpts be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the excerpts will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The matter referred to is as follows:

President Thomas A. Buckner, New York Life Insurance Co., New York, N. Y.: "The full reserve basis for the old-age-pension system as provided in the Social Security Act is deemed neither necessary nor desirable. Contingency reserves might be desirable to tide over times when receipts from taxes might be low because of depressions."

William H. Kingsley, president, Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., Philadelphia, Pa.: "Pay-as-you-go basis with reasonable contingency reserves to offset periods of possible tax declines from unforeseen circumstances would fulfill the purposes desired to be accomplished."

Edward D. Duffield, president, Prudential Insurance Co., Newark, N. J.: "Problems attending disposition of extremely large reserves contemplated in the Social Security Act may be very difficult and might present possibilities of serious economic disturbances. The successful administration of the pension section of the Social Security Act would probably be made easier by not attempting to carry a full reserve but by operating substantially on a pay-as-you-go basis with reasonable precautionary reserves."

M. B. Brainard, president, Aetna Life Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn.: "A compulsory tax-supported old-age pension system as contemplated in the Social Security Act can operate without the full reserve as at present provided. It would be preferable to operate substantially on a pay-as-you-go basis."

M. J. Cleary, president, Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., Milwaukee, Wis.: "In our opinion, a national old-age-pension system should be operated on a pay-as-you-go basis."

B. J. Perry, president, Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., Springfield, Mass.: "We believe that a compulsory tax-supported old-age-pension system can be operated substantially on a pay-as-you-go basis. A public fund supported by compulsory taxation is an entirely different position from a private fund supported by voluntary contributions."

Guy W. Cox, president, John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., Boston, Mass.: "While it would be unthinkable for any organization except the Government to operate without reserves, I am inclined to agree that it would be better to operate the pension system contemplated in the Social Security Act on a pay-as-you-go basis."

L. E. Zacher, president, The Travelers Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn.: "It would be sounder and preferable to operate the old-age-pension system in the Social Security Act on a pay-as-you-go basis."

Arthur F. Hall, president, Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.: "This company agrees fully that the old-age-pension system as contemplated in the Social Security Act can and should operate on an annual pay-as-you-go basis."

Sun Life Insurance Co. of America, Baltimore, Md.: "We agree that pay-as-you-go old-age-pension system is practical for the United States Government and preferable to the present full reserve plan."

John R. Hardin, president, Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Newark, N. J.: "The maintenance of a reserve to the maximum amount required in connection with old-age benefits in the Social Security Act, is, in my opinion, unnecessary. It would be wiser to substitute a reasonable working reserve for the subsequent operation of the system on a substantially pay-as-you-go basis. The situation is essentially different from that which prevails in an insurance company which does not have the power of currently taxing its policyholders and must depend upon the reserve maintained to meet policy requirements. I am supported in my opinion by the actuaries connected with this company, among whom are two ex-presidents of the Actuarial Society of America."

George Willard Smith, president, New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., Boston, Mass.: "I believe that the old-age benefit section of the Social Security Act can operate without the accumulation of a full reserve and that a pay-as-you-go plan with a non-increasing or more level pay-roll deduction tax, if possible, is preferable. The accumulation of reserves in life-insurance companies is necessary to carry out the guarantees in life-insurance policies because they, unlike the Government, have no power to assess or tax."

Carl Heye, president, Guardian Life Insurance Co., New York, N. Y.: "I believe it to be the consensus of opinion among life-insurance men that the full reserve is not required but is objectionable and that the compulsory old-age pension should be financed on a pay-as-you-go basis with only a contingent reserve."

NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BAILEY

[Mr. BORAH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Senator BAILEY before the New England Society of Charleston, S. C., on Dec. 21, 1935, which appears in the Appendix.]

TEXTILES AS AN ECONOMIC PROBLEM

[Mr. MALONEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Boston Herald on Jan. 31, 1937, on the subject Textiles Separate and Special Economic Problems, which appears in the Appendix.]

PRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS CENTENNIAL COIN TO SENATOR ROBINSON

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the broadcast of the ceremonies incident to the presentation to Senator ROBINSON of a coin, bearing his likeness, minted in commemoration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the admission of Arkansas into the Union, which appears in the Appendix.]

ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS—ADDRESS BY JOHN DICKINSON

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject The Enforcement of the Antitrust Laws, delivered by John Dickinson, formerly Assistant Attorney General of the United States, on Dec. 10, 1936, which appears in the Appendix.]

FLOOD CONTROL

[Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Raymond Z. Henle, published in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of Feb. 2, 1937, and an editorial published in the same newspaper on Feb. 3, 1937, both relating to flood control, which appear in the Appendix.]

STRENGTHENING OF THE IMMIGRATION LAW

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the Arizona Republic on Jan. 27, 1937, entitled "Strengthening Our Immigration Law by a Series of Proposed Measures", which appears in the Appendix.]

THE CALENDAR

BILL PASSED OVER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed, and the calendar, under rule VIII, is in order. The clerk will state the first bill.

The bill (S. 766) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the radio direction finder station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934, was announced as first in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DANIEL YATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 113) for the relief of Daniel Yates, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, and their widows and dependent relatives, Daniel Yates, formerly private, Battery D, First Regiment Artillery, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private on June 24, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit me to make a brief statement in explanation of the bill?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under the provisions of this bill the claimant is considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service on June 24, 1899. Daniel Yates was in the military service some 6 months, enlisting on December 9, 1898. He is listed by the War Department as having deserted on June 24, 1899.

The Committee on Military Affairs has had this case under study on several different occasions. The committee finds that Yates was mentally incompetent at the time he left the service, and that since his separation from the military service he has continued to be a mental case. Evidence was placed before the committee by the brother of the claimant, and by those intimately acquainted with Yates, to the effect that he was mentally deficient in 1899 at the time he deserted. Evidence has also been submitted to establish the continued mental incompetency of this man. It was brought to the committee's attention that within the past few years he wandered away from home; that he was arrested in a dazed condition many miles from his home; and that he was held in prison until identified by relatives in Mississippi.

In view of these extenuating circumstances, the Military Affairs Committee feels that the claimant is entitled to the relief provided in the bill under consideration. During the Seventy-fourth Congress the Senate passed an identical bill. The enactment of this legislation will enable the relatives of Yates to place him in a soldiers' home or a Government hospital where proper provision can be made for him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have examined the record, and I find that the bill has merit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

THOMAS SALLENG

The bill (S. 292) for the relief of Thomas Salleng was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Thomas Salleng, who was a member of Company D, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 11th day of September 1905: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

FELIX GRIEGO

The bill (S. 327) for the relief of Felix Griego was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers or their dependents Felix Griego, who was a private in the Medical Department, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of the Medical Department on the 11th day of April 1919: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

ANTHONY J. CONSTANTINO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 686) for the relief of Anthony J. Constantino, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Anthony J. Constantino, private, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 14th day of July 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this measure provides that Anthony J. Constantino shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service on July 14, 1919. He enlisted February 20, 1918, after receiving an honorable discharge from the New York National Guard, and had a total service in the United States Army of 1 year and some 5 months. The records show that a general court martial sentenced him to be dishonorably discharged and to confinement at hard labor for 5 years upon charges of carrying a gun and of giving it to a general prisoner. At his trial he testified under oath that the gun was taken without his knowledge and consent from his overcoat and that his life had been threatened if he revealed that the gun had been taken by prisoners at Fort Leavenworth, where he was stationed.

During the years since his conviction this man has contended for his innocence. He is now married and has one child. For the sake of his wife, his child, and himself, he is hopeful that his military record may be cleared through the enactment of this legislation in his behalf. Evidence was presented to the committee testifying to the claimant's good conduct and character since his discharge from the Army. Bills identical with the one under consideration were reported favorably by the Military Affairs Committee during the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses, and were passed by the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find that the Secretary of War, after a rather extensive investigation, states as follows: The War Department strongly recommends that the bill be not favorably considered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was the judgment of the committee, after looking into all the facts and considering the man's upright career since he got out of the Army, that the clemency asked should be extended. The War Department does not consider the subsequent career of a man in coming to a conclusion in such cases as this. I trust the Senator will allow the bill to be passed and go to the other House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask whether a similar bill has been heretofore passed by the Senate?

Mr. SHEPPARD. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice, and the difference between the War Department and the committee which exists in this case has existed in this case for 4 or 5 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator whether he believes it proper, where the War Department, after a thorough and searching investigation of all the facts in a case, strongly recommends adversely, that we should ignore the recommendation of the War Department and grant relief?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I agree with the Senator that as a rule we should follow the Department, and the committee as a rule takes that course; but we considered this case an exception.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that there have been hundreds of these exceptional cases, so that nearly all of those who have been dishonestly discharged have been afforded relief when relief has been sought.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not so many as the Senator seems to think. If the Senator knew the number of bills which have been introduced and referred to the committee, and knew the proportion of bills reported compared with those introduced, he would not think there were so many of these cases.

Mr. KING. The eloquence of the Senator induces me to withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. JAMES W. DARR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 365) for the relief of Capt. James W. Darr, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint James W. Darr, formerly a captain, Infantry, United States Army, a captain of Infantry, United States Army, and to place him upon the retired list of the Army as a captain, with the retired pay of that grade: Provided, That no back pay, allowance, or emoluments shall become due because of the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his request that the bill go over so that I may make an explanation of it?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. I am sure that had the Senator from Utah had the privilege of weighing this matter before the Committee on Military Affairs he would be quite ready to approve the bill.

Captain Darr, the claimant in this case, is now a patient in a mental hospital and has been confined in such an institution since April 1935. Within 6 months of his separation from the military service he was committed by the Probate Court of Ramsey County, Minn., to the State hospital for insane at St. Peter, Minn. His case has been diagnosed as "manic depressive psychosis", and the State hospital authorities at St. Peter, Minn., have advised that Captain Darr will never recover sufficiently to be released.

War Department records show that he was convicted by a general court martial in the fall of 1934 upon charges involving several of the articles of war and that he was dismissed from the service. The question of insanity was not brought into the court-martial proceedings. However, evidence presented to the committee indicates that Darr was mentally defective at the time of his trial and that his mental condition had been becoming gradually worse.

The purpose of the pending bill is to make possible Darr's reappointment in the military service and his retirement in the grade of captain. In view of all the evidence and facts in this case, the committee feels that his wife and other dependents are entitled to the retired pay the enactment of this legislation would make possible. Captain Darr was in the military service 22 years, entering in 1912, at the age of 21, and serving until October 1934.

A bill identical with Senate bill 365 passed the Congress in the latter part of the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. It received a pocket veto on June 26, 1936. The extenuating circumstances are so commanding, however, that the Military Affairs Committee has again acted favorably upon this case, and recommends that the bill be favorably considered.

I may add that last year our late colleague Senator Carey, of Wyoming, devoted hours and days to a study of this case, and his recommendation to the committee was a most unqualified approval of the bill. I hope the Senator may give his consent that the bill be passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find that the President of the United States confirmed the findings of the court martial in this man's case, and that the review of the case by the War Department, as well as by the President, would indicate that the man was not entitled to the relief which the bill would afford him.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I have every reason to believe that with opportunity for more ample consideration the President himself would be quite happy to present his endorsement of the legislation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the President gave the bill a pocket veto.

Mr. KING. But the record itself shows that the President approved the findings of the court martial. The President himself examined the record, evidently, and approved the findings. I was induced to make the objection because of the action of the President of the United States in addition to the action of the War Department.

Let the bill go over until the next call of the calendar, and I will look into the record and confer with the War Department.

Mr. NYE. Of course, I must do that if the Senator insists, but I hope he will give the matter earnest consideration.

Mr. KING. I will do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

ROBERT H. MUIRHEAD

The bill (S. 418) for the relief of Robert H. Muirhead was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Robert H. Muirhead, who was a member of the Quartermaster Corps, Camp McClellan, Ala. (Army serial no. 1298485), shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 18th day of December 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES, KELLY FIELD, TEX.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 461) to settle claims of farmers whose lands were damaged by waters from Kelly Field, Tex., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 10, after the word "States", to insert "past or future"; in line 11, after the word "land", to insert "or damage to land"; and on page 2, line 1, after the word "Texas", to strike out "in 1932 and 1935", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frank Dauwe the sum of $342.62; to Alberto Esparza the sum of $75; to Frank Van den Hende the sum of $736.25; to Germain Van der Poorten the sum of $210; and to Cesar Van Overbenborger the sum of $135, in full settlement of all claims against the United States past or future on account of losses of growing crops on their land or damage to land adjoining Kelly Field, Tex., by reason of the Government's action in diverting the natural flow of surface waters by erecting a railroad embankment and a dike at Kelly Field, Tex.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

READJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND VERMONT

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 21) directing the Comptroller General to readjust the account between the United States and the State of Vermont was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the proponent of the joint resolution a question or two regarding it. What was the date of the inception of the alleged obligation that it is proposed should be paid by the passage of this joint resolution?

Mr. AUSTIN. The joint resolution provides for the reimbursement of the State of Vermont for advancements made to the United States Government to aid in the national defense during the War of 1812–15.

Mr. BURKE. What was the amount of money that it is claimed was advanced by the State of Vermont at that time?

Mr. AUSTIN. According to the letter from the Comptroller General, which is printed in the report of the committee on page 6——

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I think I can state the amount. I know what it was according to the report. The State of Vermont is alleged to have advanced two items, one of $4,000 and one of $6,000, during the War of 1812. The $4,000 item was later repaid. The $6,000 item, with accumulated interest, now calls for payment of approximately $100,000.

I think the demands on the Federal Treasury for drought relief and flood relief and all other kinds of relief are so great that we ought to consider such claims as this one outlawed; and I ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator from Nebraska withhold objection until I can correct what I think is an error on his part about the facts?

Mr. BURKE. Yes; but it looks too much like an attempt to "get under the tent", to use an expression which was used on the floor of the Senate the other day.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to call attention to a fact which is set forth on page 13 of the report which is that in addition to the items mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska there appear to have been expenditures totaling $35,057.78. So the proposal is not so absurd as it might appear to be on the face of the record. As a matter of fact, several States already have been reimbursed for similar expenditures; and it would be quite unfair to the State of Vermont not to reimburse that State after having satisfied similar claims made by some of the other States. I think nearly all the States of the Union at the time of the War of 1812 made similar advancements.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. How does it occur that so great a time—125 years—has elapsed before an attempt is made to make adjustment of the claim?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think a measure similar to the pending joint resolution has been presented from time to time, and has been interrupted in its progress by events without the control of the State of Vermont. For example, at the last session the Senate passed an identical joint resolution, but the adjournment of Congress occurred before the joint resolution could be passed by the House. Such proceedings have been going on for many years, as I understand, and efforts have been made to straighten out these obligations, but thus far they have failed.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I am unalterably opposed to the joint resolution, because I think it is "stale", and should not be considered. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

TEACHING OF COMMUNISM IN DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 530) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso appearing in the fourteenth paragraph under the subheading "Miscellaneous" under the heading "Public Schools" in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, approved June 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 356), and reading as follows: "Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism", is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of First Lt. John Castle Hampson, Dental Corps, for promotion to captain in the Dental Corps, Regular Army, with rank from February 17, 1937.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of the following Air Corps officers for appointment as majors in the Air Corps, Regular Army, with temporary rank, under the provisions of law:

Capt. Delmar Hall Dunton, with rank from January 26, 1937;

Capt. Orvil Arson Anderson, with rank from January 26, 1937; and Capt. Emile Tisdale Kennedy, with rank from February 1, 1937.

Mr. SHEPPARD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. William Irwin Rose, Massachusetts National Guard, to be brigadier general, National Guard of the United States, from January 29, 1937, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of an enlisted man and sundry officers for appointment as officers in the Corps of Engineers of the Regular Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 8, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Spirit of the Most High, may we here and now rejoice in the Lord, be happy, and express our praise and gratitude these sacred moments. Draw us up toward the higher and the better life. Sun of Righteousness, with healing in Thy wings, shine upon men, teaching them the excellence of Thy truth. Inspire us with allegiance to Thy law, and in all our ways may we acknowledge Thy commandments. Almighty God, be with men everywhere. Take from their hearts all selfishness, all resentment and revenge, and make them a light and a comfort to the weak and the poor. This is the highest work of man in his noblest aspects and ideals. We pray Thee that liberty may come forth everywhere. In every station in life may men be permitted to breathe the air of freedom, and let them see the salvation of our God. In the name of the Galilean. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 3587) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. HALE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution No. 4, approved February 3, 1937, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee on Government Organization the following Members of the House: Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. WARREN, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, Mr. MEAD, Mr. KNIFFIN, Mr. TABER, and Mr. GIFFORD.

THE GREATER TEXAS AND PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 20, authorizing the President to invite the Pan American Republics and the Dominion of Canada to participate in the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Let it be reported.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested, by proclamation or in such manner as he may deem proper, to invite the Pan American Republics and the Dominion of Canada to participate in the proposed Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition, to be held in the city of Dallas in the State of Texas during the year 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, to ask a question, I understand this is practically a continuation of the exposition that was held last year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The gentleman is correct. We have there a $20,000,000 investment and we want to continue it this year. Several South American Republics have agreed to send exhibits and we want to invite the participation of the Pan American Republics and the Dominion of Canada in this exposition.

Mr. SNELL. Does it ask for any additional appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No; the resolution does not involve any appropriation whatever and my understanding is that no new appropriation will be asked for.

Mr. SNELL. The greatest city in the United States will soon hold an exposition, and I want to call the attention of the House to our generosity in the past.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

REORGANIZATION OF JUDICIAL BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT (H. DOC. NO. 142)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I have recently called the attention of the Congress to the clear need for a comprehensive program to reorganize the administrative machinery of the executive branch of our Government. I now make a similar recommendation to the Congress in regard to the judicial branch of the Government, in order that it also may function in accord with modern necessities.

The Constitution provides that the President "shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." No one else is given a similar mandate. It is, therefore, the duty of the President to advise the Congress in regard to the judiciary whenever he deems such information or recommendation necessary.

I address you for the further reason that the Constitution vests in the Congress direct responsibility in the creation of courts and judicial officers and in the formulation of rules of practice and procedure. It is, therefore, one of the definite duties of the Congress constantly to maintain the effective functioning of the Federal judiciary.

The judiciary has often found itself handicapped by insufficient personnel with which to meet a growing and more complex business. It is true that the physical facilities of conducting the business of the courts have been greatly improved in recent years through the erection of suitable quarters, the provision of adequate libraries, and the addition of subordinate court officers. But in many ways these are merely the trappings of judicial office. They play a minor part in the processes of justice.

Since the earliest days of the Republic the problem of the personnel of the courts has needed the attention of the Congress. For example, from the beginning, over repeated protests to President Washington, the Justices of the Supreme Court were required to "ride circuit" and, as circuit justices, to hold trials throughout the length and breadth of the land—a practice which endured over a century.

In almost every decade since 1789 changes have been made by the Congress whereby the number of judges and the duties of judges in Federal courts have been altered in one way or another. The Supreme Court was established with 6 members in 1789; it was reduced to 5 in 1801; it was increased to 7 in 1807; it was increased to 9 in 1837; it was increased to 10 in 1863; it was reduced to 7 in 1866; it was increased to 9 in 1869.

The simple fact is that today a new need for legislative action arises because the personnel of the Federal judiciary is insufficient to meet the business before them. A growing body of our citizens complain of the complexities, the delays, and the expense of litigation in United States courts.

A letter from the Attorney General, which I submit herewith, justifies by reasoning and statistics the common impression created by our overcrowded Federal dockets—and it proves the need for additional judges.

Delay in any court results in injustice.

It makes lawsuits a luxury available only to the few who can afford them or who have property interests to protect which are sufficiently large to repay the cost. Poorer litigants are compelled to abandon valuable rights or to accept inadequate or unjust settlements because of sheer inability to finance or to await the end of a long litigation. Only by speeding up the processes of the law and thereby reducing their cost can we eradicate the growing impression that the courts are chiefly a haven for the well-to-do.

Delays in the determination of appeals have the same effect. Moreover, if trials of original actions are expedited and existing accumulations of cases are reduced, the volume of work imposed on the circuit courts of appeals will further increase.

The attainment of speedier justice in the courts below will enlarge the task of the Supreme Court itself. And still more work would be added by the recommendation which I make later in this message for the quicker determination of constitutional questions by the highest court.

Even at the present time the Supreme Court is laboring under a heavy burden. Its difficulties in this respect were superficially lightened some years ago by authorizing the Court, in its discretion, to refuse to hear appeals in many classes of cases. This discretion was so freely exercised that in the last fiscal year, although 867 petitions for review were presented to the Supreme Court, it declined to hear 717 cases. If petitions in behalf of the Government are excluded, it appears that the Court permitted private litigants to prosecute appeals in only 108 cases out of 803 applications. Many of the refusals were doubtless warranted. But can it be said that full justice is achieved when a court is forced by the sheer necessity of keeping up with its business to decline, without even an explanation, to hear 87 percent of the cases presented to it by private litigants?

It seems clear, therefore, that the necessity of relieving present congestion extends to the enlargement of the capacity of all the Federal courts.

A part of the problem of obtaining a sufficient number of judges to dispose of cases is the capacity of the judges themselves. This brings forward the question of aged or infirm judges—a subject of delicacy and yet one which requires frank discussion.

In the Federal courts there are in all 237 life-tenure permanent judgeships. Twenty-five of them are now held by judges over 70 years of age and eligible to leave the bench on full pay. Originally no pension or retirement allowance was provided by the Congress. When, after 80 years of our national history the Congress made provision for pensions, it found a well-entrenched tradition among judges to cling to their posts, in many instances far beyond their years of physical or mental capacity. Their salaries were small. As with other men, responsibilities and obligations accumulated. No alternative had been open to them except to attempt to perform the duties of their offices to the very edge of the grave.

In exceptional cases, of course, judges, like other men, retain to an advanced age full mental and physical vigor. Those not so fortunate are often unable to perceive their own infirmities. "They seem to be tenacious of the appearance of adequacy." The voluntary retirement law of 1869 provided, therefore, only a partial solution. That law, still in force, has not proved effective in inducing aged judges to retire on a pension.

This result had been foreseen in the debates when the measure was being considered. It was then proposed that when a judge refused to retire upon reaching the age of 70, an additional judge should be appointed to assist in the work of the court. The proposal passed the House but was eliminated in the Senate.

With the opening of the twentieth century and the great increase of population and commerce and the growth of a more complex type of litigation, similar proposals were introduced in the Congress. To meet the situation, in 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916 the Attorneys General then in office recommended to the Congress that when a district or a circuit judge failed to retire at the age of 70, an additional judge be appointed in order that the affairs of the court might be promptly and adequately discharged.

In 1919 a law was finally passed providing that the President may appoint additional district and circuit judges, but only upon a finding that the incumbent judge over 70 "is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability of permanent character." The discretionary and indefinite nature of this legislation has rendered it ineffective. No President should be asked to determine the ability or disability of any particular judge.

The duty of a judge involves more than presiding or listening to testimony or arguments. It is well to remember that the mass of details involved in the average of law cases today is vastly greater and more complicated than even 20 years ago. Records and briefs must be read; statutes, decisions, and extensive material of a technical, scientific, statistical, and economic nature must be searched and studied; opinions must be formulated and written. The modern tasks of judges call for the use of full energies.

Modern complexities call also for a constant infusion of new blood in the courts, just as it is needed in executive functions of the Government and in private business. A lowered mental or physical vigor leads men to avoid an examination of complicated and changed conditions. Little by little new facts become blurred through old glasses fitted, as it were, for the needs of another generation; older men, assuming that the scene is the same as it was in the past, cease to explore or inquire into the present or the future.

We have recognized this truth in the civil service of the Nation and of many States by compelling retirement on pay at the age of 70. We have recognized it in the Army and Navy by retiring officers at the age of 64. A number of States have recognized it by providing in their constitutions for compulsory retirement of aged judges.

Life tenure of judges, assured by the Constitution, was designed to place the courts beyond temptations or influences which might impair their judgments; it was not intended to create a static judiciary. A constant and systematic addition of younger blood will vitalize the courts and better equip them to recognize and apply the essential concepts of justice in the light of the needs and the facts of an ever-changing world.

It is obvious, therefore, from both reason and experience, that some provision must be adopted which will operate automatically to supplement the work of older judges and accelerate the work of the court.

I, therefore, earnestly recommend that the necessity of an increase in the number of judges be supplied by legislation providing for the appointment of additional judges in all Federal courts, without exception, where there are incumbent judges of retirement age who do not choose to retire or to resign. If an elder judge is not in fact incapacitated, only good can come from the presence of an additional judge in the crowded state of the dockets; if the capacity of an elder judge is in fact impaired, the appointment of an additional judge is indispensable. This seems to be a truth which cannot be contradicted.

I also recommend that the Congress provide machinery for taking care of sudden or long-standing congestion in the lower courts. The Supreme Court should be given power to appoint an administrative assistant who may be called a proctor. He would be charged with the duty of watching the calendars and the business of all the courts in the Federal system. The Chief Justice thereupon should be authorized to make a temporary assignment of any circuit or district judge hereafter appointed in order that he may serve as long as needed in any circuit or district where the courts are in arrears.

I attach a carefully considered draft of a proposed bill which, if enacted, would, I am confident, afford substantial relief. The proposed measure also contains a limit on the total number of judges who might thus be appointed, and also a limit on the potential size of any one of our Federal courts.

These proposals do not raise any issue of constitutional law. They do not suggest any form of compulsory retirement for incumbent judges. Indeed, those who have reached the retirement age but desire to continue their judicial work would be able to do so under less physical and mental strain and would be able to play a useful part in relieving the growing congestion in the business of our courts. Among them are men of eminence and great ability, whose services the Government would be loath to lose. If, on the other hand, any judge eligible for retirement should feel that his court would suffer because of an increase in its membership, he may retire or resign under already existing provisions of law if he wishes so to do. In this connection let me say that the pending proposal to extend to the Justices of the Supreme Court the same retirement privileges now available to other Federal judges has my entire approval.

One further matter requires immediate attention. We have witnessed the spectacle of conflicting decisions in both trial and appellate courts on the constitutionality of every form of important legislation. Such a welter of uncomposed differences of judicial opinion has brought the law, the courts, and, indeed, the entire administration of justice dangerously near to disrepute.

A Federal statute is held legal by one judge in one district; it is simultaneously held illegal by another judge in another district. An act valid in one judicial circuit is invalid in another judicial circuit. Thus rights fully accorded to one group of citizens may be denied to others. As a practical matter, this means that for periods running as long as 1 year or 2 years or 3 years—until final determination can be made by the Supreme Court—the law loses its most indispensable element—equality.

Moreover, during the long processes of preliminary motions, original trials, petitions for rehearings, appeals, reversals on technical grounds requiring retrials, motions before the Supreme Court, and the final hearing by the highest tribunal—during all this time labor, industry, agriculture, commerce, and the Government itself go through an unconscionable period of uncertainty and embarrassment; and it is well to remember that during these long processes the normal operations of society and government are handicapped in many cases by differing and divided opinions in the lower courts and by the lack of any clear guide for the dispatch of business. Thereby our legal system is fast losing another essential of justice—certainty.

Finally we find that processes of government itself brought to a complete stop from time to time by injunctions issued almost automatically, sometimes even without notice to the Government, and not infrequently in clear violation of the principle of equity that injunctions should be granted only in those rare cases of manifest illegality and irreparable damage against which the ordinary course of the law offers no protection. Statutes which the Congress enacts are set aside or suspended for long periods of time, even in cases to which the Government is not a party.

In the uncertain state of the law it is not difficult for the ingenious to devise novel reasons for attacking the validity of new legislation or its application. While these questions are laboriously brought to issue and debated through a series of courts, the Government must stand aside. It matters not that the Congress has enacted the law, that the Executive has signed it, and that the administrative machinery is waiting to function. Government by injunction lays a heavy hand upon normal processes; and no important statute can take effect—against any individual or organization with the means to employ lawyers and engage in wide-flung litigation—until it has passed through the whole hierarchy of the courts. Thus the judiciary, by postponing the effective date of acts of the Congress, is assuming an additional function and is coming more and more to constitute a scattered, loosely organized, and slowly operating third house of the National Legislature.

This state of affairs has come upon the Nation gradually over a period of decades. In my annual message to this Congress I expresed some views and some hopes.

Now, as an immediate step, I recommend that the Congress provide that no decision, injunction, judgment, or decree on any constitutional question be promulgated by any Federal court without previous and ample notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity for the United States to present evidence and be heard. This is to prevent court action on the constitutionality of acts of the Congress in suits between private individuals, where the Government is not a party to the suit, without giving opportunity to the Government of the United States to defend the law of the land.

I also earnestly recommend that in cases in which any court of first instance determines a question of constitutionality, the Congress provide that there shall be a direct and immediate appeal to the Supreme Court, and that such cases take precedence over all other matters pending in that Court. Such legislation will, I am convinced, go far to alleviate the inequality, uncertainty, and delay in the disposition of vital questions of constitutionality arising under our fundamental law.

My desire is to strengthen the administration of justice and to make it a more effective servant of public need. In the American ideal of government the courts find an essential and constitutional place. In striving to fulfill that ideal, not only the judges but the Congress and the Executive as well must do all in their power to bring the judicial organization and personnel to the high standards of usefulness which sound and efficient government and modern conditions require.

This message has dealt with four present needs:

First, to eliminate congestion of calendars and to make the judiciary as a whole less static by the constant and systematic addition of new blood to its personnel; second, to make the judiciary more elastic by providing for temporary transfers of circuit and district judges to those places where Federal courts are most in arrears; third, to furnish the Supreme Court practical assistance in supervising the conduct of business in the lower courts; fourth, to eliminate inequality, uncertainty, and delay now existing in the determination of constitutional questions involving Federal statutes.

If we increase the personnel of the Federal courts so that cases may be promptly decided in the first instance, and may be given adequate and prompt hearing on all appeals; if we invigorate all the courts by the persistent infusion of new blood; if we grant to the Supreme Court further power and responsibility in maintaining the efficiency of the entire Federal judiciary; and if we assure Government participation in the speedier consideration and final determination of all constitutional questions we shall go a long way toward our high objectives. If these measures achieve their aim, we may be relieved of the necessity of considering any fundamental changes in the powers of the courts or the Constitution of our Government—changes which involve consequences so far-reaching as to cause uncertainty as to the wisdom of such course.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1937.

CAPITAL AUDITORIUM

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of S. 974, to create the Capital Auditorium Commission, with the amendments thereto, reported by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in accordance with the announcement made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of S. 974, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a Commission to consist of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, and the Secretary of the Interior, said Commission to be known as the Capital Auditorium Commission. Said Commission shall be authorized to investigate as to desirable sites for an auditorium to be constructed in the city of Washington with sufficient capacity, in the opinion of the Commission, to meet the requirements of public convenience and necessity.

The Commission is authorized to ascertain the approximate cost of a suitable site and of the erection of an auditorium thereon and to formulate plans, and to recommend how that cost shall be borne and how the auditorium, when constructed, shall be controlled and supervised. The Commission shall report to the Congress its plans and recommendations for legislation to carry out the same at any time during the present session of the Congress.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "chairman", insert "and the ranking minority Member"; and in line 6, after the word "chairman", insert "and the ranking minority Member."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, so that I may commend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] for giving us 24 hours' notice before bringing this bill up for consideration. It has been the custom in the past 4 or 5 years to ask for unanimous consent for the consideration of bills of this kind without formal notice, and I think this is the first time I have seen anything of the kind happen.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As the bill passed the Senate, it did not provide for minority representation, but as amended by the committee it does?

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct. The House committee very properly and appropriately thought that the minority should have representation in the first place; and, in the second place, that the Commission should be increased to five members so that in case of illness of one or more members there may be a quorum to continue the investigation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand, all the authority that is given to this committee is simply to investigate and make certain reports back to the House.

Mr. LANHAM. That is all. It places on the Commission a burden of work which no member would voluntarily assume, but which no member anxious to do his duty would willfully shirk.

Mr. STEFAN. And I might say that there is no appropriation carried in the act at all.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This applies only to an investigation in respect to an auditorium?

Mr. LANHAM. It provides specifically for an investigation and report in the matter of the proposal for a Capital auditorium.

Mr. SABATH. It does not apply to a proposal to build two large structures or one, to enable the membership and the employees of the Congress to find a place to live at reasonable cost, so that they would not be compelled to pay double and triple the amount for their rents or housing quarters?

Mr. LANHAM. It does not. This measure is simply for the purpose of investigating with reference to a National Capital auditorium and to make a report to Congress of its findings.

Mr. SABATH. As to whether there is any need for it?

Mr. LANHAM. The whole matter of a Capital auditorium would come within the purview of the Commission in its investigation and in making its report. The Commission has no authority to go further than to investigate and report to the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk again reported the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMANENT PLANNED PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I know it is the earnest hope of many citizens that the social pressure indicated by the message from the President—on the Judiciary—which we have just heard may be relieved in substantial measure by economic rather than judicial action. It is to that that I wish to address myself for a moment.

Three days ago the President sent here a message concerning a public-works program extending over a period of 5 years. For the past few years we have been operating under great pressure. Through the past century Government activities in increasing measure have been absorbing the surplus of our productive capacity and have thus contributed to stabilizing our economic life. I urge a dispassionate consideration of this matter. Let us remove it somewhat from the prejudice of partisan consideration. This is in line with economic progress.

In the last decade a commission of the Department of Commerce devoted some years to a study of recent economic changes and recommended very earnestly action along these lines. I ask of this body permission to incorporate in the RECORD an address by myself in 1929 at the Conference of Governors at New Orleans, outlining a proposal very much along these lines, and also the remarks of Mr. John B. Frey, secretary of the National Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, before the American Federation of Labor, which was then in annual conference at New Orleans.

To affix the responsibility for failure to carry out this program is not the province of this speech. The experiences of the past 4 years, however, and the experience of England and other countries has demonstrated rather conclusively—

First. That a well-planned and carefully coordinated public-works program may be of tremendous value in ameliorating an economic depression.

Second. That there are very definite limits beyond which a public-works program may not prudently go.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the excerpts to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE DWIGHT L. MOODY

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, 100 years ago today there was born in the village of East Northfield, Franklin County, Mass., a son to Edwin Moody, brickmason, and his wife, Betsy. The boy was named Dwight Lyman Moody. The father died when Dwight was 4 years of age. Dwight was one of nine children, all under the age of 13 at that time. He attended local schools until he was 13, remained at home until 17, and then secured employment as a shoe salesman in Boston, where he attended Mount Vernon Congregational Church.

A short time later he went to Chicago, again obtaining work as shoe salesman, but always showing strong religious tendencies. At the age of 23, in 1860, Mr. Moody had been so successful in business that he was able to devote a considerable amount of money yearly to religious activities. In Chicago his church connection was the Plymouth Church, where he rented four pews, and every Sunday invited groups of men to attend the services.

In 1858 he began to devote practically all his time and abilities to evangelistic work. In 10 years he was recognized as one of the leading evangelists in the country. In Chicago he built several churches and established Bible classes and schools for young men. He was especially active along religious lines during the period of the Civil War.

Mr. Moody visited Great Britan three times, and in 1873 was accompanied by Ira D. Sankey. That was the beginning of the unique and wonderful combination of Moody and Sankey. Eventually no hall in Great Britain was large enough to hold the crowds anxious to attend their nondenominational meetings. They returned to this country in 1875 to be regarded as comparable with Wesley and Whitefield. Almost unknown when leaving this country in 1873, upon their return 2 years later their reputation as leaders of religious interest was tremendous.

Mr. Moody thereafter made his home in Northfield. From there he visited all sections of this country and made trips abroad. It is especially of his life in Northfield that I wish to speak.

Himself uneducated and unordained as a clergyman, he realized the need of extending educational opportunities to boys and girls whose families were poorly endowed in this world's goods. He founded the Northfield Seminary for girls and 2 years later he established a similar school for boys at Mount Hermon in the town of Gill, a short distance from Northfield.

For more than half a century these schools have carried on. Northfield is the gathering place during the summer season for continual conferences on religious subjects, attended by hundreds from all sections of the United States and many foreign countries. In spite of the fact that he was uneducated Mr. Moody was an intimate associate of men of the highest learning. An example of this was the presence at one of the conferences of Henry Drummond, who delivered an address entitled "The Greatest Thing in the World", which added greatly to Drummond's reputation.

The following lines from a recognized authority on prominent people seem to describe Dwight Moody exceedingly well:

> A man of prayer, he was tirelessly and farsightedly a man of work. "There is no use asking God to do things you can do yourself", he said. A layman, Moody inspired ministers; an evangelist, he understood the importance of Christian education; unschooled, he commanded the admiration and cooperation of university students and teachers; a man of large business ability, he devoted himself unreservedly to what he conceived to be the greatest business in earth or heaven—the saving of souls.

I recall as a small boy in New York City attending a Moody and Sankey meeting with my parents, and as a college student I can see him now in our chapel at Amherst appealing to the better instincts in the young men.

Dwight L. Moody passed away at his home in Northfield December 22, 1899, mourned far and wide. He lies buried on Round Top in the school grounds of Northfield. His grave is continually visited by those who respect the memory of a great man who left his imprint upon the world. Of no man can it be more truthfully said that he left the world better than he found it. The simple inscription on his tomb reads:

> He that doeth the will of God abideth forever.

All over the world today—in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, and Scandinavia—churches are holding centenary services in honor of the memory of Dwight L. Moody.

A great man, his message reached the people in all walks of life, and he still is regarded as one of our most human preachers of the gospel, who made the love of God a privilege and joy. No layman ever carried the divine teachings to so many thousands of people.

The schools and conferences which he founded are so thoroughly established on a strong financial basis that they will forever remain a monument to this great man of humble origin, a credit to American grit and an example of Christian faith.

Only the importance of the business before the House prevented my asking for a longer period of time to eulogize in my very imperfect way this great man. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an address by my colleague Mr. DIRKSEN, delivered before the Twelfth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense on January 26, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FOREIGN-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 96, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 96, with Mr. MEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. For the benefit of the parties interested, the Chair will announce that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has consumed 2 hours and 42 minutes, and he has 2 hours and 18 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has consumed 2 hours and 22 minutes, and he has 2 hours and 38 minutes remaining.

HOW TO CONDUCT A TRUE PROGRAM OF RECIPROCITY

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to proceed without interruption until I have finished my statement.

Mr. Chairman, I think my remarks should properly be entitled "How to Conduct a True Program of Reciprocity." Let me say at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that I do not—nor do my colleagues on the Republican side—object to the principle of reciprocity and we are just as anxious as are the gentlemen on the other side of the House to increase America's foreign trade. We feel very strongly, however, that the reciprocity program undertaken by the present administration under the act of June 12, 1934, falls far short of the desirable standard of conduct for such an undertaking. I shall not discuss the constitutionality of this measure, although I entertain serious doubts as to its validity. Other Members of the Republican side, who can do so more adequately than I, will express our views on that phase. I want, however, to call the attention of the gentlemen of the majority to some essential factual information about the agreements and their results, and I earnestly recommend their careful examination of the facts because of their vital importance to the American people.

CONCESSIONS SHOULD BE ON NONCOMPETITIVE ITEMS

Proper and intelligent conduct of reciprocal commercial agreements requires that trading between countries should be through the medium of mutually beneficial tariff concessions for the items of which we have an inadequate supply, and through the medium of the free list for those things we do not produce at all. In brief, the fundamental criteria of the Republican doctrine of reciprocity, which the Democrats forgot to take over when they assumed the general doctrine, are that concessions should primarily and fundamentally be made on noncompetitive items. That, gentlemen, is the most detrimental feature of the program carried out by this administration. They have bartered concessions on highly competitive foreign articles securing in return illusory concessions on some of our export commodities. I believe generally in the maximizing of our foreign trade, but I do not believe that we get anywhere by throwing a man out of work in agriculture so that we can provide a job for a man in industry. Such a process brings in no net gain to our country. Moreover, when the job for the man in industry fails to materialize, as so frequently happens under the trade-agreements program, we suffer a net loss.

The result has been that the rosy promises of the great good which would come from carrying out the program of reciprocal-trade agreements have not been realized and that for much of American agriculture there has been instead bitter disillusionment.

AGRICULTURE A NET LOSER UNDER CANADIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

Let me call your attention particularly to the progress of our agricultural trade with Canada, as reported by the United States Department of Agriculture in Foreign Crops and Markets, for December 28, 1936. Figures there indicate that our agricultural exports to Canada increased by $7,809,000 in the first 10 months of 1936 over the corresponding period of 1935. That increase is almost equally divided between agricultural products on which we had received concessions and all other agricultural products. On the other hand, our agricultural imports from Canada in the same period of time increased by $21,557,000, or nearly three times the increase in agricultural exports to Canada. The increased imports of those items on which duties were reduced under the agreement were almost as large as the entire increase in our exports.

INCREASED IMPORTS OF CHEESE UNDER CANADIAN AGREEMENT

The gentlemen on the other side, and the administration spokesmen, have taken us to task because we have on occasion in the past objected strenuously to the duty reductions on Cheddar cheese. May I call the gentleman's attention, however, to the fact that total imports of that cheese from Canada during the first 10 months of 1936 amounted to 10,031,000 pounds, or 2.33 percent of total domestic production for the same period, whereas in 1935 cheese imports from Canada were but 769,000 pounds, or 0.16 percent of domestic production for the first 10 months. And that is not all. The imports were very large in 2 months, amounting to 1,526,000 pounds, or 4.7 percent of production, in March and 2,339,000 pounds, or 5.26 percent of production, in August. This, gentlemen, is the type of thing that the American farmer objects to. The concentration of those imports in a relatively short period of time has an adverse effect on the market, which is of vital concern to every producer in the United States.

CANADIAN CATTLE IMPORTS DETRIMENTAL TO DOMESTIC PRICE STRUCTURE

And I may add, the protestations from your high, dignified officials of the State Department to the contrary notwithstanding, that imports of cattle from Canada did definitely have a depressing influence on the prices of American livestock. A saturated market is adversely affected by even an infinitesimally small addition to the supply. It will not do to say that imports of cattle were one-half of 1 percent or 1 percent of domestic production. The fact is that they came upon an American market already saturated because of the drought-distressed cattle of our own farmers. They helped further reduce the price that those purchasers obtained, adding still more to their distress.

On January 29 Mr. N. K. Carnes, general manager of the Central Cooperative Association, which is a livestock selling agency operating at South St. Paul, Minn., wrote me on the subject of reciprocal-trade agreements, and at this point I desire to read in part from that letter:

On January 1, 1937, the cattle producers of this country were again faced with the importation of Canadian cattle under the Canadian-American trade agreement. As you know, approximately 156,000 head of cattle will be permitted to enter this country at the decreased duty of $1 per hundredweight during the year 1937. It has been stated that a high percentage of the cattle entering the United States from Canada are in feeder condition. Nevertheless, 85 percent of the cattle which we received on the South St. Paul market from Canada during 1936 were killing cattle.

To make my position clear, I am frank to say that it is my opinion that we should do everything that we possibly can to rehabilitate our foreign markets, because some of the responsibility for our agricultural prosperity in the past has depended on our foreign markets. However, I do not believe that you or I will ever live to see the day when our exports of agricultural commodities to foreign countries are back on a predepression basis. It is my opinion that those who are responsible for shaping reciprocity treaties and trade agreements should bear in mind that agriculture is still a basic industry in America, and I cannot see any justification for trading off a market for the products of agriculture in order to furnish a market for the products of industry. There isn't any question in my mind or in the minds of any of the men operating on the South St. Paul market but that the importation of Canadian cattle has had an adverse effect on livestock prices in this country. It is true that the Canadian imports represent one-half to three-fourths of 1 percent of the total annual livestock slaughter under Federal inspection in this country, but the addition of one-half of 1 percent to a saturated market is certain to have an adverse effect, and it has had that effect here at South St. Paul.

I think that effectively disposes of Mr. Sayre's contention that the number of cattle coming into this country is so negligible that they have no effect on the domestic price.

INCREASE IN COMPETITIVE IMPORTS EXCEEDS NONCOMPETITIVE

In the first 11 months of 1936 our imports of articles which do not compete with American products increased by $149,000,000, or 14 percent, over the corresponding period of 1935, but during the same period of time the imports of competitive articles—that is, products whose sale on the American market helps reduce the opportunities for domestic producers—increased by $173,000,000, or 23 percent.

The State Department reduced the duties on cattle, cheese, cream, corn, lima beans, tomatoes, cucumbers, potatoes, strawberries, apples, green peas, and poultry, to mention but a few items of the increased competition to which the American farmer can rightly object.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. KNUTSON. Certainly.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Did the gentleman make the statement that there had been a reduction in the tariff on milk? I know if the gentleman did make that statement it was inadvertent.

Mr. KNUTSON. No; cream. I thank the gentleman.

TRADE AGREEMENTS A "LOCAL ISSUE" TO DEMOCRATS

I want to suggest at this point to the majority Members that they read a very interesting statement made before our committee by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX]. Mr. WILCOX was at some pains to assure the majority of the committee that he was strongly in favor of the principle of reciprocity. Of course, we all are. The gentleman from Florida assured the committee that he, in the main, commends the policy that has been followed out by this administration, except as it applies to Cuban exports of early vegetables, which has a very serious effect on the early vegetable production of Florida.

You know, it amuses me at times. Democratic Members of the committee and of the House are strong for this program except when it affects their own district. For instance, the gentleman from Oklahoma and the gentleman from Texas would not allow a single barrel of crude oil to be brought into this country if they had their way about it. I commend them for taking that position, because we have a large supply of our own. But those same gentlemen are perfectly willing to allow agricultural imports to come into this country that will compete with agricultural production in Minnesota. In other words, they are "spot protectionists." They believe in protection for their own districts, but as for the rest of the country, well, it should look out for itself.

Oh, I should state that the Florida delegation voted as a unit for the Hawley-Smoot bill, which shows that they are possessed of more than ordinary intelligence when measured by democratic standards. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me at that point?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will have to, because I referred to the gentleman.

Mr. WILCOX. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that while I used, in my argument before his committee, the Cuban treaty as illustrative of the point I was making, I assured the committee, and again on yesterday I assured the House, that in my opinion the tariff policy of the Democratic Party, of which I am a member, is to provide a tariff which will equalize the cost of production. I do not limit that to any item or to any one article, but I think it is sound governmental policy. I simply used the iniquities of the Cuban treaty in illustrating the point as to the damage that could be done and would be done if that principle and policy is ignored in negotiating tariff agreements.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sorry I referred to the gentleman, because the Florida delegation did vote for the Hawley-Smoot bill. But I want to quote the gentleman from Florida, if I may have his attention, when he appeared before the committee. This appears on page 498 of the hearings. The gentleman said:

> At the outset, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to say that my attitude toward the reciprocal trade agreement policy of this administration is distinctly friendly. I believe in the principles of the reciprocal trade agreement policy. I have no criticism to make of Dr. Sayre's position or his philosophy as expressed before this committee.

Then he proceeds to lay down a barrage on Dr. Sayre that just fairly riddles him full of holes, and I agree with everything the gentleman said. He said it so much better than I could.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I shall need more time. Will the gentleman get me more time on his side?

Mr. BUCK. I cannot, unfortunately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to announce that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman additional time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

DOMESTIC SUGAR PRODUCERS ADVERSELY AFFECTED BY CUBAN TREATY

Mr. KNUTSON. I am going to mention another duty reduction of substantial significance, the reduction in duty on sugar from Cuba. This was done at a time when, under the Jones-Costigan Act, the amount which the American producers could supply to the domestic market had been strictly limited. In other words, gentlemen, this administration not only has told the American sugar producer that he may supply only a limited amount to the home market but it has turned around and aided and abetted a foreign producer in taking away that limited market from him. Is it any wonder, then, that American agriculturists have objected so strenuously to much of the administration of the trade-agreement program?

EFFECT OF TRADE AGREEMENTS UPON OUR FOREIGN TRADE

But perhaps the gentlemen on the other side of the House object that I am picking up isolated examples. Very well. Let us look at the figures of exports to and imports from various countries. A comparison of imports from and exports to eight countries with whom agreements were in effect during most of the first 11 months of 1936 indicates that our exports to them increased by $66,077,000, or 12.3 percent, and our imports from them increased by $133,212,000, or 23.1 percent. Our exports to all countries increased by $164,100,000, or 8 percent, whereas our imports from all countries increased by $314,000,000, or 16.9 percent. I will not trouble you gentlemen by reading the figures, but I will introduce the complete table at this point.

PORK EXPORTS TO CUBA ACTUALLY DECREASING SINCE AGREEMENT

When the original Reciprocal Trade Act was before the Ways and Means Committee back in 1934, we were repeatedly assured by representatives of the State Department that the operation of the law would greatly stimulate exportations of farm products to Cuba. Figures that I have obtained from the Department of Agriculture prove that under the operation of the law exports of lard and hog products to Cuba have actually decreased, as the following table will show:

Exports to Cuba from United States

	After agreement (September to August, inclusive)
	1934–35	1935–36
Lard, including neutral lard	$32,593,000	$23,386,000
Bacon, cured hams and shoulders, and other pork, pickled or salted	10,600,000	5,090,000

DEMOCRATS VILLIFIED HAWLEY-SMOOT ACT, BUT HAVE FAILED TO REPEAL IT

The gentlemen from the State Department who appeared before our committee and certain Members on the opposite side of the aisle here have taken great pains to villify the Tariff Act of 1930 at every possible opportunity. I pass over the fact that in spite of their opposition to that act they did nothing about it until late in 1934, and that they have since been whittling away at it only by piecemeal revision.

Perhaps the answer to the failure of the Democratic Party to repeal the Hawley-Smoot tariff is found in the statement made by the late Speaker, Hon. Henry T. Rainey, during the Seventy-second Congress. He said:

> Lower this tariff drastically? You (Republicans) will not do it, and we (Democrats) dare not do it with conditions as they are. We do not want this market flooded with the products of cheap labor in other countries.

Of course, while the Democrats have not repealed the Tariff Act of 1930, they are nevertheless pursuing a policy of piecemeal tariff reductions on competitive products, which threatens to flood our home market with the products of cheap labor in other countries.

IMPORTS INCREASING FASTER THAN EXPORTS

The gentlemen in support of the administration of the reciprocal trade agreement program have argued that if we made concessions on various imports we would provide foreign countries with the purchasing power with which to buy our exports. In the first place, let me remind the gentlemen that our imports have increased much more rapidly than have our exports—that total imports in the first 11 months of 1936 increased by $314,000,000, or 17 percent, over the corresponding period of 1935, whereas exports increased only by $164,000,000, or 8 percent, over 1935. But this is not all.

INCREASED IMPORTS FROM ABROAD HAVE NOT RESULTED IN A CORRESPONDING INCREASE IN EXPORTS

If we examine our international balance of payments carefully, we will see what has happened. We will discover that foreign nations have obtained increased purchasing power in the United States, but that by and large they have not used it to buy American products. In 1934, taking account of our net balance of payments on both merchandise and service accounts, including transportation services, immigrant and charitable remittances, Government expenditures, tourist expenditures, interest and dividend payments, and silver purchases, but excluding all capital items and shipments of gold, we had a net favorable balance of $375,000,000. In 1935 the balance swung in the opposite direction. Taking account of exactly the same items that we did for 1934, we find a net unfavorable balance of payments to the extent of $128,000,000.

On the basis of preliminary data for 1936 one is safe in estimating—because of the very small net merchandise balance of trade and the large net imports of silver—that our unfavorable balance of payments was several hundred million dollars larger than that of 1935. In addition to that, we have purchased hundreds of millions of dollars of gold from foreign countries.

In other words, in the last couple of years we have actually added billions of dollars to their purchasing power in the United States; and what, we may ask, have they done with it? Primarily two things: They have repurchased their own bonds at depreciated prices; they have purchased large quantities of American securities; and they have increased by a very considerable extent their cash balances in this country.

You may remember that the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, forecasting in his annual report of 1934, stated that—

> The foreign trade program would involve the risk of producing results other than those expected. The purchasing power which foreigners can obtain in the United States market, were they permitted to sell their goods here, might be left on deposit or invested in American securities. * * *

THE FALLACY OF GIVING FOREIGNERS THE MONEY WITH WHICH TO BUY OUR GOODS

Not only have they increased their purchasing power here by the sale of a large volume of goods but we have added tremendously to their purchasing power by our monetary operations. The results, however, have been substantially what the Secretary feared they might be.

This examination of the international balance of payments and the disposition foreigners have made of their increased purchasing power here ought to once and for all substantiate and justify the objections that we have made to making substantial concessions to countries from whom we already buy considerably more than we sell to them.

It has been argued that while we may have an adverse balance of trade with one country, we have a favorable balance with another, and that as a result of this triangular trading we still may have a favorable balance in the end. Of course, the fact is that our favorable balance of merchandise trade declined from $478,000,000 in 1934 to $235,000,000 in 1935 and to only $34,000,000 in 1936. If there is any net benefit to this country, it should show up in the general balance of payments, which includes all trade and commerce, including the so-called invisible items. But we have looked at the general balance of payments and we have seen that the conditions which the gentlemen have relied upon in defense have not at all been realized.

THE POLICY OF GENERALIZING THIS COUNTRY'S TARIFF CONCESSIONS

Let me say a word or two at this point about the generalization of benefits. First I want to refer to a statement made by the editors of the London Economist in their recent volume appraising the New Deal:

> It is fully possible * * * that Great Britain has already gained more from the concessions made by the United States in her treaties with other countries than could be obtained in a direct Anglo-American treaty.

This statement demonstrates better than anything else the imprudent policy which the State Department is pursuing. The administration is actually giving away our trading material.

Let me repeat at this point: I do not—nor do my colleagues—oppose the principle of most-favored-nation treatment but we do insist most emphatically that American commerce be accorded that same treatment by every country which obtains the benefits of our duty concessions. Something is wrong, gentlemen, in the administration of the program, for on the one hand benefits have been generalized to all but two countries—Germany and Australia—yet the State Department witnesses appeared before our committee and testified repeatedly that American commerce is discriminated against all over the world. Both of those things cannot be correct. If our commerce is discriminated against as widely as they imply, and I think they are correct in that, then they have failed in their responsibility in extending benefits in spite of that fact. They would have been correct in generally extending the concessions only if discrimination against American commerce were limited to the two nations they have selected as examples.

AMERICAN PRODUCERS SHOULD BE PROTECTED FROM UNFAIR FOREIGN COMPETITION

To protect American producers it is necessary that duty reductions be limited. To that end we of the minority propose to offer an amendment to the pending joint resolution to prohibit the reduction of duties below the amount necessary to protect American agriculture, labor, and industry from unfair foreign competition. We insist that this is a reasonable and desirable requirement for the conduct of trade-agreement negotiations. We urge the adoption of this suggested protection as an essential requirement for the maintenance and improvement of American economic conditions.

As the Trade Agreement Act now stands, the State Department is not in any way restricted from reducing the duties on competitive foreign products far below the actual difference in cost of production of such products and like or similar domestic products. The Secretary of State has indicated that he is only interested in reducing alleged "excessive" tariff rates, but the fact is that he has reduced the duties on many farm products, in spite of the President's statement back in 1932 that he knew of no "excessively high" duties on such products. Reductions have also been made on industrial products where the rate certainly could not be called excessive. Manganese is a good example. Regardless of State Department assurances, it is absolutely necessary to put language in the Trade Agreements Act which would limit tariff reductions, so that duties could not be reduced below the point necessary to protect domestic producers and American workingmen from destructive foreign competition.

VIEWS OF FARMERS COOPERATIVE CREAMERY, MILACA, MINN.

On Monday of this week I received a resolution adopted by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery, of Milaca, Minn., which read as follows:

> Be it resolved, That we request our Congressmen and Senators to not extend President Roosevelt's power to make these trade agreements with other countries without the approval of the Senate.
>
> STANLEY HELMEN, Secretary.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES TAKE BETTER CARE OF THEIR OWN PEOPLE THAN DO WE

At this point it may be pertinent to observe that there is no provision in the reciprocal trade law which will permit an American producer who may feel himself injured by reduced rates made in any trade agreement to appeal to another tribunal for protection and redress.

The Canadians are much smarter and have a higher regard for the welfare of their own people than have our officials, apparently.

At this point I desire to read a paragraph from a letter written to Secretary of State Hull by the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires on November 15, 1935, which is the date the Canadian trade agreement was signed at Washington by President Roosevelt:

In addition to the above, Canada undertakes to procure enactments at the next session of Parliament to modify a number of provisions in the customs act relating to the determination of the value of merchandise for duty purposes, and for providing opportunities to appeal to the Tariff Board respecting value for duty purposes where it is claimed that the importation of goods into Canada may affect prejudicially Canadian manufacturers and producers.

I especially want to call to the attention of my Democratic friends the last part of that paragraph, so I will read it again:

And for providing opportunities for appeal to the Tariff Board respecting value for duty purposes where it is claimed that the importation of goods into Canada may affect prejudicially Canadian manufacturers and producers.

Why does not the American State Department do as much for the American producer and manufacturer as Canada does for her people? Our trade agreements are made in secret session and we are given no information on what is being done until the act has been accomplished.

For the life of me I cannot understand how any Member of either House of Congress can bring himself to vote to deprive American citizens of benefits that are freely granted to the citizens of countries with which we have made treaties, and I am astonished that the American people will stand for it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, we from Wisconsin face the unfortunate situation that every time we ask for time we are reduced to the lowest common denominator. That is the position in which I find myself today; and, of course, you appreciate that I cannot make an argument in 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad indeed to have heard the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] state that he was in favor of protecting our agricultural products by insuring that at least the price of production plus a reasonable profit be granted to us in any reciprocal trade agreements that are formed. I intend to offer an amendment to this effect, and I hope it will not be ruled out of order. With your indulgence I shall read my proposed amendment:

Line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That after the enactment of this resolution no proclamation shall be made reducing any statutory duty on foreign agricultural products or provisions below the amount necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production, as defined in section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, of such foreign agricultural products and provisions and like or similar domestic agricultural products or provisions."

I listened very attentively and with considerable interest to the able presentation made by Dr. Sayre before the Ways and Means Committee. He is one of the most cultured, best educated, and, withall, one of the ablest men in the service of the State Department. He combines with these qualities a very charming personality. This makes a persuasive combination that is hard to resist; but, like all fanatics, on certain subjects he overstates his side of the case. The doctor, in my judgment, is overenthusiastic and makes extravagant claims for reciprocal-trade agreements. One of these claims is that they are great measures for promoting peace. While I think the doctor is right, that they do, in a measure, promote better relations, nevertheless, I am not so ingenuous or naive as to believe that the reciprocal-trade agreements will ever deflate the superegoism of Mussolini, Hitler, or Stalin; or that they will settle in a peaceful manner the struggle for world supremacy between fascism and communism. [Applause.] If the State Department is so concerned as to the economic difficulties of Europe that we must make a number of free-trade agreements to promote those interests, then I would call their attention to a statement appearing in the New York Times last Sunday in which this outstanding newspaper pointed out that the economic position of Germany was so grave that, unless it was relieved in the near future, that country would be driven into war because of economic pressure.

Let me urge upon the State Department that it at once put its efforts into operation to make an agreement with Germany in order to save this menacing situation instead of buying up the paper francs of France with our gold and listening to the arguments of Mr. Runciman, of Great Britain, that it is necessary for us to forego our neutrality policy if we want to make a reciprocal-trade agreement with Great Britain.

Yesterday before the Committee on Military Affairs an outstanding American, Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, made the statement that reciprocal-trade agreements, if we adopt a policy of neutrality, would be instruments of war rather than instruments of peace; and it behooves us to consider carefully any statement from Mr. Baruch, because he speaks from experience.

I would say to my friends who advocate these treaties: Let us at least remember that our neutrality policy is paramount. It is far more important to our boys and girls that we safeguard them from the horrors of another European war by mandatory neutrality legislation than it is that we rehabilitate some favored countries of Europe with our cash and our resources. Europe is bent upon self-destruction and our internationalists are so devoted to Europe that they seek to involve us in the plan of general ruin. If my memory serves me correctly, on two separate occasions the Senate of the United States refused to place its seal of approval on the World Court. Now our State Department seeks to accomplish indirectly, through trade agreements, what our people have overwhelmingly rejected; namely, entangling alliances. Reciprocal-trade agreements, whether a benefit or detriment from an economic point of view, and I claim they are a detriment, must be foregone, if in any measure whatsoever they jeopardize our neutrality policy. I for one would urge upon this body that its first consideration is to keep our nose out of European affairs and mind our own business. I repeat that we are seeking now through trade agreements to rehabilitate the countries of Europe and yet these same countries use the money derived from us for the purpose of building up huge armaments that in the future will be a menace to our own security and to our own people. [Applause.]

I agree with Dr. Sayre in his statement that the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act did a great deal of harm to our foreign trade, and I also agree with the good doctor when he says that "reciprocal-trade agreements offer the speediest remedy for the ills developed by the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act." My protest, however, is based upon an entirely different aspect.

DAIRY INTERESTS

My State of Wisconsin is the foremost dairy State of the Union, and dairy products have been traded off in three different trade agreements, namely, the treaties with Canada, the Netherlands, and Switzerland. The proponents of these acts tell us that the amount of dairy products traded off in these agreements is negligible as compared with the total amount of consumption in this country. That is true, but the menace consists in the effect upon the market, and our best answer is that the very day the Canadian treaty went into effect our cheese market broke 2 cents a pound, and was later on followed by a drop of another cent a pound. But our opponents say, "Your price has been better during 1936 than in any of the preceding years", and I concede that that is true, but I wish to point out that we have passed through two droughts and have destroyed 90,000 milk cows during that time. Ninety thousand milk cows, producing 5,000 pounds of milk each annually on an average, would mean a difference of 450,000,000 pounds of milk in a year for our State alone. That is a considerable item. If the proponents of these treaties claim that the trade agreements are responsible for the raise in the price of cheese will they also assume the responsibility for the drop in the price of dairy products if we have a surplus in 1937? You cannot claim credit for the gains and not also take the blame for the loss. The rule must work both ways.

CANADIAN OUTLOOK

The following quotation is taken from the Agricultural Situation and Outlook, 1937, issued by the Department of Agriculture of the Dominion of Canada. I quote from page 44:

Canadian cheese in London for the first 10 months of 1936 averaged 1.38 cents per pound higher than for the same period in 1935. The premium it received over cheese of the same type during the 10-month period averaged 1.3 cents per pound. A factor affecting price in Canada during 1936 was the marked increase in the quantity of cheese exported to the United States and the higher prices prevailing in that country.

Total cheese exports from Canada in the 10 months ending October 1936 were up 15,585,900 pounds, or almost 35 percent over the same period in 1935. In the 1936 period exports were 60,580,300 pounds, of which 47,704,200 went to the United Kingdom and 10,863,500 pounds to the United States. The increase to the United Kingdom over the 1935 period was 4,953,700 and the increase to the United States 10,533,300 pounds. The latter figure is significant when it is considered that less than half a million pounds were exported to the United States in the year ended December 1935. Imports of cheese for the 10 months ending October 1936 were slightly lower than in the same period of 1935 when 1,003,552 pounds were imported.

NEW ZEALAND

Point Blank, the official magazine of the Farmers Union in New Zealand, recently had an article about the demand for a tariff on butter and cheese imports. I quote from the December 1936 issue, page 21:

The most powerful argument being put forward to support such a tariff is that almost all dairy imports into Britain are subsidized. Though we New Zealanders can point out that this is not strictly so in our case, as the same price rules for butter in both the home and foreign market, the British farmer replies by pointing to our special rate of exchange. The Canadians subsidize their cheese to the tune of £200,000 a year ($1,000,000). The price ruling in the home market of Australia a year ago (stated to be the latest figures available here) was nearly twice that at which their produce was being sold abroad. There is much the same disparity in the case of Holland and Denmark and Sweden, who have subsidizing schemes for their butter, though these are not always put into operation.

IMPORT ACREAGE

Dr. Sayre stated in his argument, among other things, that "in 1935–36 our exports of agricultural commodities accounted, at average yields, for nearly 28,000,000 acres of productive land." Dr. Sayre did not say, however, how much of a yield of agricultural commodities, in milions of acres, was admitted into this country during the same period of time. We have been advised a number of times that our imports of agricultural commodities in 1935–36 amounted to approximately 30,000,000 acres of productive land. This, of course, was produced at a cost lower than our farmers can produce it, and meant that our Government had to overcome that influx by taking 30,000,000 acres of productive land out of agricultural production in this country and pay a good price for this policy. In addition, our Government also maintained a substantial fund in order to buy up certain agricultural commodities to help sustain the domestic market. If we added all these sums together, we would find that we had paid very dearly for the privilege of permitting the yield of 28,000,000 acres of agricultural products to be admitted into this country. But the argument is made that it is necessary to make some concession to build up our foreign trade.

HOME MARKETS FOR UNITED STATES

I believe that the home markets should be kept for our own agricultural products and that we could help out our own people to purchase commodities if we are willing to subsidize such an enterprise with the same large amounts which we have used to subsidize our trade abroad. The whole program, in its last analysis, amounts to giving our goods away, and that kind of business is not profitable.

Dr. Sayre made the statement during the course of the discussion with Mr. KNUTSON, of the committee, that the amount of the trade, export and import, was not so important as that there should be a profit. This was in reply to Mr. KNUTSON'S statement as to the fact that we bought more than twice as much from Brazil as we sold to that country last year. Surely no one contends that our exporters are in the business for fun and not for profit, and surely no one would contend that the Brazilian exporters who sold us these amounts did not make a profit on their transactions. We must assume that there is a profit for both exporters and importers, as they would not last long in the business if there were not.

IMPORTS OVER EXPORTS

I again quote from Dr. Sayre's statement:

To protect against huge excesses of imports over exports and the consequent outflow of gold, nations sought to cut down their imports by launching intensive drives toward national "autarchy", or economic self-sufficiency.

I want to call especial attention to the fact that Dr. Sayre emphasizes this outstanding point, namely, that "huge excesses of imports over exports" mean the outflow of gold. Our country is experiencing an ever-increasing excess of imports over exports in her trade with many foreign nations.

We have heretofore enjoyed a favorable balance of merchandise trade in our foreign-trade policy. The Ways and Means Committee's minority report shows that in 1934 that favorable trade balance was $478,000,000.

In 1935, the first year in which the Trade Agreement Act was in effect, it dropped to $235,000,000. In 1936 it fell to the lowest level in 41 years, namely, $34,000,000. We may expect this year to have an adverse balance of foreign merchandise trade.

INCREASED IMPORTS

In 1934 we had a net favorable balance of $375,000,000. In 1935, however, that balance of payments became unfavorable to the extent of $128,000,000. At the same rate of decrease, we can estimate the trade balance of 1936 to be unfavorable by several hundred million dollars more. The reason for this shift is the ever-increasing amount of imports pouring into our country from abroad. In 1934 to 1935 the increase in imports was $392,000,000, as against an increase of only $149,000,000 in exports. From 1935 to 1936 our imports increased $372,000,000, as against an increase in exports of only $171,000,000. In round numbers, this tells the story of our rapid shift from an export nation to an import nation. This being true, then, according to Dr. Sayre's own statement, it will be our money that will put Europe back on its feet so that they will be strong enough to start another war. In the last analysis, this policy will mean that we are rehabilitating the world at the expense of our people, mostly at the expense of our agriculture.

WAR DEBTS

Our people have overwhelmingly signified their opposition to the cancelation of the war debts, but we are indirectly accomplishing the same purpose by giving these countries our money, with which eventually they will make a grand gesture of some nominal down payments on their debts to us. In other words, by a trade device our people are furnishing the money which European countries are squandering for armaments in the hope that at some future date they will pay us part of what they owe us with it.

I realize that no change will be made in this policy, but that these trade agreements will be continued for the next 3 years, but I have certain recommendations which I respectfully submit to the House for its serious consideration:

First. That in all future reciprocal-trade agreements the American farmer be protected by admitting no foreign agricultural commodity which does not in its price meet the cost of production plus a reasonable profit of a similar American agricultural commodity.

Second. That in all future trade agreements no additional dairy products be traded off.

Third. That a full and open discussion be held on each trade agreement in the Senate and that that body approve before the same becomes effective. Many of our foreign cocontractors follow that practice, so why should not we? [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain data to which I shall refer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, it has always been my practice to be very liberal in yielding to my colleagues when I have been privileged to address the House, but on this occasion, on account of the rather limited time allowed and the fact I know the chairman has received many requests for time to speak, and he is anxious to accommodate all Members possible, I shall not be able to yield as I have heretofore.

The pending measure, House Joint Resolution 96, has for its purpose the extension for a period of 3 years of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, approved at 9:15 p. m., on June 12, 1934. This act was passed in response to a message from the President of the United States and was an important part of the recovery program of this administration. The splendid work done and the gratifying results accomplished under this program has caused the President of the United States to write a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, which is a part of the hearings on this resolution, requesting that the act be extended for another period of 3 years. The pending resolution is before the House supported by a unanimous report of the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

I violate none of the confidences of the Committee on Ways and Means when I make this reference. The report itself indicates that to be a fact. It is likewise true that the original Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act was reported by the Ways and Means Committee with the same kind of a division, all the majority members voting for it and all the minority members opposing it. It is in no sense surprising that the members should divide along party lines. One of the lines of cleavage between the two major political parties of this country, from the beginning of our Government down to this hour, has been the question of the tariff.

I invite the attention of the Members to the report filed by the Ways and Means Committee in support of this measure. I also invite attention to the splendid statements made before the committee by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, and the Chairman of the Tariff Commission, Mr. O'Brien, all of whom are outstanding authorities on this subject, as well as many other witnesses who appeared before the committee in support of this program.

Mr. Chairman, I heard every witness who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, and during my 5 years' service as a member of that committee I say here frankly I have never seen a clearer case made and I have never heard stronger evidence presented in support of any measure than was offered in support of the pending resolution.

It might be interesting in passing to remind ourselves of the fact that there was not a single witness who appeared before the committee in opposition to this program. Practically every one of them supported the program in its entirety. Those who did not do that only spoke with reference to some slight change or amendment that they thought might be helpful and desirable.

It is also interesting to observe that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, arose in the House several days before hearings were begun on this resolution and made the announcement that hearings would begin on a certain day, and he invited all of those interested in opposing this measure to be sure to appear before the committee in opposition to the resolution. Even though he appealed to the business interests of the country and exerted his efforts to try to secure witnesses in opposition, he was unable to produce a single witness to sustain him in his position of opposition to this measure.

It is rather significant, when we held hearings as long as any requests were before us, that we heard from the outstanding business interests of the Nation, as well as people in various other walks of life, and received strong and positive evidence as to the desirability of continuing this trade program. The president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and other representatives of that body, speaking for the business interests of the country, appeared and strongly favored an extension of the present Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act.

Mr. Chairman, it was with regret that I sat here yesterday and heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] indulge in unwarranted and unjust criticism of the distinguished Secretary of State and the distinguished Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre. Both of these gentlemen are among the most valuable and the most highly respected officials that this Government has ever had at any period of this Nation's history. [Applause.] I was really surprised that the cultured gentleman from New York would indulge in such unwarranted criticism of these two really great Americans. But it is a well-recognized custom that when a man finds he is unable to meet the sound logic of another, when he finds himself helpless before the majestic figure and the superior intellect of his adversary, he then resorts to such a practice as that.

I am happy to pay my tribute of respect, inadequate as it may be, to the character and public service of our great Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull. [Applause.] I take a great degree of pride in the fact I am privileged to come from the same State from which he comes. Mr. Chairman, he stands out today in bold relief as one of the outstanding statesmen of the entire world. [Applause.] The great work done by him and the splendid results accomplished under this program have challenged the favorable comment and admiration of the people throughout this country and the people of every other peace-loving nation of the world. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for me to pay further tribute to that great statesman.

I am reminded of the statement made by Benjamin Franklin in his magazine called Poor Richard, in which he stated:

> Dirt will stick to a mud wall, but dirt cannot cling to polished marble.

This program has gone forward expeditiously and with a remarkable degree of success in spite of the fact that in the very nature of things it requires time to develop a program of this kind, when you have to enter into negotiations with countries of the world and when you have to safeguard, as this administration has, the rights and interests of the people of America. It takes time to work out these negotiations, but in spite of that fact great progress has been made and most gratifying results have been accomplished.

Fifteen of these trade agreements have been negotiated. It is likewise true that in the short period of time that these agreements have been in effect it is impossible for us to receive an accurate estimate of the amount of good that has really been accomplished. Only one of these agreements—that with Cuba—has been in effect as much as 2 years. Ten others were negotiated during the past year. International commerce does not spontaneously move because of some change in the conditions with reference to trade barriers. It naturally takes some time for the movement of commerce to begin and to reach proportions that would make the type of showing that we are confident will be made when this program is carried on a little further.

Time will not permit me to undertake an analysis of these various trade agreements. I simply invite your attention to the splendid statement made by the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, for ample information on the success so far achieved under these trade agreements.

I shall refer briefly to a few of the outstanding points with reference to the success of this program. I invite attention to pages 101 to 113 of the hearings, with special reference to the effect on agriculture.

Let us remind ourselves of the situation that existed in this country at the time this program was begun. We know that at that time agriculture was bleeding at every pore. Our farmers were receiving the lowest prices for their products in all the recorded history of this Nation. We certainly know that evidence is apparent on every hand of the unmistakable improvement in the condition of the American farmers and agriculture generally. I am not claiming that all of this improvement has been due to this trade program, but I do insist that the record sustains the contention that it has been a very important and material part of it.

Then, Mr. Chairman, let us bear in mind that we produce enormous surpluses of major agricultural products in this country. Between 50 and 60 percent of all of our cotton has to be exported to some other countries in the world, because we produce that much more than we consume in this country. About 20 percent of our wheat, about 40 to 45 percent of our tobacco, about half of our packing-house lard, as well as vast quantities of many other agricultural products have to be exported. They have to be sold in the markets of other countries of the world because we produce that much more than we consume in this country.

Now, what is to happen to agriculture if we do not open these markets of the world to dispose of these enormous surpluses? What is to happen to industry when the enormous buying power of the farmers of this country is held down to a minimum? Why, Mr. Chairman, we readily recognize that this is a matter of far-reaching importance to all of the people of this country. Only one of two things can happen. We will either have to reduce the production of our agricultural products to the amount of consumption in this country or else we will have to find outlets and markets to dispose of them. This is the main purpose of this program—to dispose of our agricultural and industrial surpluses.

There is not anything very difficult to understand about this trade program. It simply means that the representatives of this Government say to other countries of the world, "We find that you need certain surplus products that we have in this country. You have to import them into your country from somewhere. We find upon investigation that you have certain products that we need and have to have in this country. We have to import them from some source." Just to illustrate, I mention two or three—rubber, coffee, raw silk, and a long list of others. The result is we simply say to the representatives of those countries, "Let us sit down at a table and discuss the question of exchange of commodities; the question of trade between our country and yours." If it develops that a trade in the interest and to the advantage of the people of this country can be negotiated, then such a trade is negotiated. We always should bear in mind the fact that if a trade in the interest of the people of this country cannot be made, our President and those designated by him simply do not have to make the trade.

Now, to refer briefly to some of the important items that I think should be borne in mind in the consideration of the measure now before this body, tariff and tax reductions and liberalization of import quotas have been obtained with respect to agricultural commodities that comprise nearly one-third of our 1929 agricultural exports. In addition to this, we have bound on the free list, or at favorable rates, agricultural products which account for almost another one-third of the 1929 exports of agricultural products. Literally hundreds of favorable concessions have been made by the other countries of the world for our agricultural products as compared with a very few agricultural concessions that have been made by this country.

I invite your attention to the definite figures given in the hearings at page 101. I shall not burden you by quoting all of these figures at this time, but they are of great interest to those who are really concerned and interested in the welfare of agriculture in this country.

A great deal has been said here about Canada and the agreement made with the Dominion of Canada with reference to agricultural products. Let us look for a moment to see what the real fact is with reference to that.

Canada made reductions ranging from 12 to 65 percent on fresh meat and lard and other meat products, and 13 other countries have granted similar concessions on these agricultural products.

Cuba, another country to which reference has been made here, which was the third ranking market for American lard and other products, reduced its duty on lard from an equivalent rate of 9.8 cents a pound to 2.3 cents per pound for the first year, and agreed to a further gradual reduction to 1½ cents to be reached in the third year.

In addition, Cuba has provided in the agreement that at the end of the second year to abolish its consumption tax of 1 cent a pound on lard.

Many illustrations of a similar type could be given. Six countries have agreed to continue their favorable treatment of imports of American cotton. Five have granted concessions on cotton yarns, 10 on various cotton textile manufactures, and 2 countries have granted concessions on cottonseed oil and cake.

Concessions directly beneficial to the tobacco growers and manufacturers have been obtained in eight agreements.

Another illustration with reference to pork products is that our exports to Canada of certain pork products during the time that this Canadian agreement has been in existence has increased more than three times as compared with the same period before the agreement was made. Lard exports to Canada have increased 70 percent.

Cuba's imports of certain pork products under the trade agreement has more than doubled.

Now, then, it would be interesting for us to observe some of the beneficial effects on industry, because we know that the welfare of the agricultural interests of this country and those engaged in industry must go hand in hand.

It is interesting to observe that the statistics of farm income and factory pay rolls of this country since the World War compare very favorably, showing the direct relationship between industrial production in this country and agricultural production. Let us see the beneficial effects, or at least refer to a few of the items with reference to industry. During the first 6 months of 1936 Canadian imports from the United States of industrial machinery affected by the Canadian trade agreement increased on the average by $1,500,000 per month over the same months of the preceding year. Canadian imports of our agricultural machinery during this period increased from $3,300,000 to $5,500,000, or by 67 percent. Exports of tractors and parts to Brazil during the first 6 months of the agreement with that country increased by 64 percent over the same period in the preagreement year. During the first half of the year of the Canadian agreement exports of electrical appliances and machinery to Canada increased from $3,400,000 to $4,500,000, or 32 percent. During this same period, in contrast to an increase of 49 percent in total exports of electrical refrigerators to all countries, such exports to Canada increased by 186 percent, to the Netherlands by 84 percent, and to Cuba by 92 percent, and so on. Other figures might be given showing the remarkable increase in the exports from this country to these countries with which we have negotiated trade agreements in these industrial products. That means, of course, that American workers were employed and American business profited by these products being produced and sold to these other countries.

In the few remaining moments I have I shall mention only two points that I heard stressed with any degree of emphasis by the opponents of the bill. The first was on the question of the ratification of these agreements. The opponents of the bill took the position 3 years ago, as they do now, that these trade agreements should be ratified by the United States Senate. The unmistakable fact is that our past experience shows that such a plan as that is impractical and unworkable, and I shall very briefly bring to your attention the record with reference to trade treaties requiring ratification and trade agreements not requiring ratification. Thirteen treaties under the general treaty-making power of the President were negotiated, of which 10 failed. Eleven treaties under special statutory provisions of the act of 1897, the so-called Dingley Tariff Act, all failed. Twenty-four treaties were submitted and 21 of them failed. That is the record made where ratification was required. Let us see the record for trade agreements not requiring ratification. Of 13 agreements made under the act of 1890, the so-called McKinley Act, 1 failed by nonapproval of the other country. The other 12 went into effect. Nine agreements were negotiated under a special provision of the act of 1897, referred to as the Dingley Act, and all became effective. Fifteen agreements have been negotiated under this Trade Agreement Act now under consideration. Fourteen of them have become effective, and the other will soon become effective. Therefore, we have 37 of this type of agreements that have been negotiated, and 36 out of the 37 have become effective.

On the other hand, of the agreements or treaties requiring ratification, 21 out of 24 failed. We have this very practical situation, whether or not we want to go forward with a beneficial and splendid program. This type of treatment that is proposed by the opponents of the bill could only have one practical purpose, and that would be the same as failing to pass the resolution at all or striking out the enacting clause. If we are to go forward with this program that has produced such gratifying results up to this point, the wise and proper thing to do is to pass this resolution as it is presented here, extending the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act for 3 more years, allowing ample time to continue to work out the trade-agreement program and let further beneficial results be accomplished by the American people.

There is one other point I desire to mention, and that is that the opponents of the bill assert that there should be more opportunity given for notice of hearing of the negotiations of these trade agreements. I shall give you the benefit of a little experience that I had. It was my privilege to serve during the last Congress as the chairman of the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee on tariff and foreign debts. Quite a number of bills and resolutions of various kinds were introduced with reference to this particular subject, these trade agreements, and they were referred to the subcommittee of which I had the honor to be chairman. I conferred with the chairman of the committee, and at his suggestion I went down to the Department and held a rather lengthy conference with the officials in charge of this program.

I went over the situation with them fully, and I say to you that under the type of notice that they gave and under the type of negotiations that they carried on with the business interests of the country, with all of those who expressed a desire to secure information about the program, those business interests and those desiring to secure information did receive all of the information that anybody should have needed or wanted. My limited knowledge of matters of that kind certainly is not comparable with that of those who have made this a life study, and have devoted particular attention to these special things. Nevertheless, I had no difficulty in finding out what was proposed and included in these negotiations, and anybody else with the interest to inform himself and who desired to examine these notices could have secured the same type of information. So that there is nothing to be gained by the proposal presented here by the opponents of the program. It is also interesting to observe that with the experience that has been gained in the administration of this measure, the Department itself has already issued regulations providing for even a wider degree of notice and information to the general public about the negotiations of these agreements.

With those two points, the only points worthy of mention that are raised by the opponents of this bill, explained as I have endeavored to do here, it occurs to me that the proper thing to do is to speedily pass this resolution as it is presented, and to allow this administration, which has been so overwhelmingly approved by the people of this country, to go forward with this great program in the interest of the American people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, we have had several hours of interesting discussion regarding the advantages and disadvantages of the reciprocal-trade agreements. It is my intention to discuss them for a few moments from the agricultural viewpoint, more especially the treaties with Canada and Mexico.

I believe we all agree that if we take the statistics of farm income and factory pay rolls since the World War and compare them, we will find that the total factory pay rolls follow very closely with the gross farm income, thus proving without a doubt that the prosperity of our industrial area is dependent on the prosperity of the farmers. In other words, as the farmers prosper so prospers the Nation.

The agricultural sections of the Middle West of the United States believe they are being discriminated against in the making of reciprocal-trade agreements in favor of the manufacturing and industrial interests. At the sixty-sixth annual meeting of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture on January 15, 1937, at Topeka, Kans., which was attended by elected delegates from the local units of organized agriculture, such as county farm bureaus, county granges, county farmers' unions, and county institutes, the following resolution was adopted:

> We believe the act authorizing reciprocal-trade treaties should be amended to require ratification by the United States Senate, and also recommend the elimination of the most-favored-nation clause. Countries enjoying wide outlets in the American market of commodities on the free list should be required to take in exchange commodities produced in the United States which they need.

I have read with much interest the statement and testimony given by Hon. Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, before the Ways and Means Committee, and note on page 108 the great increase in Canadian imports from the United States for the first 6 months of 1936 under the reciprocal-trade agreements. The following are notable increases:

An average increase of $1,500,000 per month over the same months of the preceding year for industrial machinery. Canadian imports of our agricultural machinery for this period increased 67 percent. During the first 6 months of 1936 Canadian imports of electrical apparatus and machinery increased 32 percent; exports of electrical refrigerators to Canada increased 186 percent; imports of American radio apparatus and equipment practically doubled during this same period. It is only natural that in order to make these great sales of manufactured commodities the United States must take something in return, and as Canada is largely an agricultural producing country we received in return large importations of farm products and livestock. It is my intention to discuss only one phase of the farm imports, and that is the importation of cattle.

It is interesting to note that on Monday, April 20, 1936, there were 125 carloads of Canadian cattle on a northern market—the St. Paul market—and the following Monday, April 27, there were 110 carloads of Canadian cattle on the same market. It is also interesting to note that the top cattle price paid at Kansas City on May 4, 1936, was $9.50, and on May 4, 1935, the top cattle market in Kansas City was $14.25.

According to figures submitted by the United States Department of Agriculture, there was shipped into the United States from Canada during the first 10 months of 1936, 140,334 head of cattle weighing over 700 pounds, while for the same period in 1935 we received only 59,090 head of the same cattle. Total importations of cattle of all weights from Canada, for the 10-month period just mentioned, was 222,708 head. From Mexico we received 21,435 head of cattle weighing over 700 pounds, during the first 10 months of 1936, while in 1935 we received only 5,986 head of this weight cattle, or practically four times as many of this weight of cattle in 1936 as in 1935.

It will no doubt be stated on this floor that the importation of cattle was only a small percent of the large number of cattle we produced and consumed in the United States and that the percentage was so very small it would not materially affect the price of cattle.

Every farmer and every livestock producer in the United States knows that it is the amount of surplus of any farm commodity or the number of head of livestock that largely determines the market value of the product. No one has stated that we have a shortage of cattle in the United States. In fact, the Department of Agriculture concedes that we have a surplus of cattle.

It is estimated that in 1936 we had 68,213,000 head of cattle in the United States; in 1935 we had 68,529,000, and 74,262,000 in 1934.

If we follow this reasoning to its logical conclusion, it might be said that while we have only 10,000,000 unemployed in the United States it would not be objectionable to admit several thousand alien laborers, or a small percent of our unemployed into this country, on a quota basis. No one would seriously consider this, yet that is what we do to agriculture under the trade agreements as drawn with Canada and other nations which come under the most-favored-nation clause.

The importation of live cattle is not the only serious competition facing the livestock producer. Millions of pounds of canned beef are imported annually from South America. The livestock producers of this country have been protected from the importation of live cattle from South America by an embargo or quarantine because of the foot-and-mouth disease, and at present are greatly concerned lest this should be removed. It has been estimated that a 700-pound steer in South America will produce about 150 pounds of canned meat. The present duty on this canned beef is 6 cents a pound. Therefore, the import duty on the canned beef from this steer would be $9. The transportation charges from South America to the United States on this 150 pounds of canned beef would be approximately 33½ cents or 22⅓ cents per hundred weight from Argentine to New York. It costs about 70 cents a hundred to ship a steer from the producing areas of the United States to Chicago and $1.10 a hundred to ship beef from Chicago to New York. This 150 pounds of canned beef from a 700-pound steer would bring the South American seller about $22.83. After paying a duty of $9 and transportation costs of 33½ cents, he would receive about $13.50 in American money. When this money is traded for South American pesos, he would receive an equivalent of $17.76.

If House Joint Resolution 96 is adopted, I sincerely hope that those in charge of making the trade agreements with other countries will seriously consider their effect on agriculture with a view of giving the American farmer the benefit of the American market. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the time during which I am allotted to speak on the question is limited to only a few minutes. I trust that after my allotment has expired that my time may be extended for a few minutes longer. I am sorry that those who are in charge of this proposed important legislation have seen fit to limit the debate on this question to such a short time.

This is one of the most important pieces of legislation that will come before Congress during this session. I want to express my opinion as to why the reciprocal-trades agreement, as it has been working and as it is proposed to be extended, should be amended.

In the first place, I am in sympathy with the doctrine of reciprocity. It is the policy of the Republican Party. At times it has been the policy of the Democratic Party. I feel that the principle of equality of treatment as between foreign nations is desirable and essential in a sound commercial policy.

However, I want to enter my objections—and I believe the objections of a great number of the people of the Middle West, at least—to the manner in which the program has been administered under the act of June 12, 1934. It has not followed a program of real reciprocity and equality.

A great deal has been said about the Republicans favoring reciprocity agreements. President McKinley, in his speech in September 1901, said:

> By sensible trade agreements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. * * * We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. * * * We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor.

In the administration of this act of 1934 we have neglected a large group of people who are, after all, the greatest asset to the prosperity of our Nation—those people who are the producers of the foodstuffs of the Nation. We are anxious to become agreeable and to be good neighbors to the other nations of the world, but we certainly do not want to neglect the folks at home.

I want to talk with you for a few minutes on behalf of the farmers of the Middle West, with particular reference to the livestock men as well as the producers of wheat and other farm products. A number of other Members have taken up the question of the dairy industry, the lumber industry, and other industries of the West and Middle West. I want to agree with the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, when he says that when the interests of one group of people are affected it either directly or indirectly affects other groups of this country.

I want to call your particular attention to the question of a very dangerous situation that is facing the livestock interests of the United States. It is a proposed modification of the foot-and-mouth disease quarantine, wherein we are about to permit the influx of thousands of head of livestock from South American countries that have heretofore been held back by reason of a strict adherence to the sanitary regulations having to do with the livestock malady known as the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. Fred Brenckman, a representative of the National Grange, who has given this matter a considerable amount of serious thought and investigation, calls attention to the fact that the dairy and livestock interests of this country have a particular interest in this question, for the reason that the foot-and-mouth disease has long been recognized as one of the most contagious and infectious diseases in animals ever known. It is prevalent in most of the countries of South America. In the United States animals infected with this disease are promptly destroyed by being killed and burned or buried.

There have been serious outbreaks of this disease in this country. In 1902 and 1903 it involved the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, and New Hampshire. In 1908 it occurred in Pennsylvania, New York, and Maryland. In 1914 it spread to the Middle States. During that year approximately 100,000 cattle were slaughtered, together with 85,000 hogs and several thousand sheep. The next outbreak was in 1924, when the disease made its appearance in California, and again in 1929. Foot-and-mouth disease attacks cattle, hogs, and sheep. It is extremely infectious.

Up to the present time we have had strict regulations preventing the importation of livestock or meat from any country known to have foot-and-mouth disease within its borders. The directors of the National Live Stock Marketing Association went unanimously on record against the present Argentine sanitary convention.

This sanitary treaty, which is pending before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, will admit the importation of meat products from what is said to be "disease-free zones" in Argentina. The livestock officials of all leading organizations have opposed this plan, because of the destructive nature of the disease, which has already cost this country millions of dollars. According to a resolution of the National Live Stock Marketing Association, most of the outbreaks in this country have been where they could be controlled, but an outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease which would contaminate domestic and wild animals of the open plains and mountain regions of the West would spread infection that would be uncontrollable and would almost annihilate domestic and wild animals and destroy the food supply of our Nation in one of our greatest industries.

Mr. F. E. Mollin, secretary of the American National Live Stock Association, has called attention to the fact that Argentina, up to this time, has not taken the precautions that are required in the United States with reference to the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Quoting from Mr. Mollin, he says:

> No one can fairly claim that imports of meat products from any zone of the Argentine under present conditions would not constitute a dangerous threat to our herds and flocks.
> When Argentina has paid the price of driving hundreds of thousands of cattle into trenches to shoot them and bury them in quicklime in order to eradicate the disease, as the United States has done, so that she may keep free of it—then she can come and demand access to our markets. In the meantime, the livestock industry, conscious of its importance in the field of agriculture and of the importance of its products in the industrial field, demands that there be no experimenting with the health of our herds and flocks in order to increase international trade in industrial products. In short, it demands the retention of the present embargo, and the consequent rejection of the Argentine sanitary convention.

According to the National Provisioner of January 9, 1937, of Chicago, Ill., it states that—

> Argentine hopes of exporting meat to the United States have been considerably strengthened by recent developments, according to La Res, Argentine meat magazine. The statement of President Roosevelt at Buenos Aires, in which he advocated the ratification of the proposed United States-Argentine sanitary convention, was especially welcome.

President Roosevelt is quoted as saying:

> The ratification of this convention by the Senate of the United States would eliminate an injustice without detriment, or prejudice of any kind, to the legitimate interests of the cattle industry of the United States, and without relaxing in the least full sanitary protection of our own livestock.
> I intend to present these facts clearly to the attention of the Members of the Senate of the United States, with the hope that our Senate may give its consent to the ratification of the simple instrument of justice.

Such an approval of the importation of these cattle from South American countries might at first seem satisfactory to a highly industrial section but it would be ruinous to the meat-producing States of the Middle West.

For many years it has been the policy of the Federal Government, through all administrations, to withhold importation of meat under sanitary regulations. And now at a time when the livestock men of the Middle West are fighting with their backs almost against the wall they are being threatened, not only with the chance of the destruction of their herds by this disastrous disease but by the influx of thousands of additional cattle, produced and raised more cheaply than we can raise them, which will be allowed to compete with our markets because of the letting down of these barriers.

Quoting from a report of the National Cooperative Council, held in Washington this week, it states:

> We further urge the Congress to enact legislation establishing sanitary restrictions upon the importation of all products of plant and animal life, which are equal to those established in the United States by whatever authority. In this connection we urge the State Department to discontinue its present practice of incorporating in each of the trade agreements a provision which binds the governments signatory to trade agreements not to strengthen their respective sanitary requirements as to imported products without mutual consent, and the establishment in the case of disagreement of joint commissions of technical experts to discuss any proposed new sanitary restrictions.
> The above seem to be the minimum requirments for maintaining a well-rounded foreign-trade program designed to protect home markets for domestic producers and to develop additional outlets for domestic agricultural products in countries which can consume them.

Under the terms of the measure we have before us we have taken away from the American producer, the American farmer, the right to litigate matters arising out of the trade agreements, if he wanted to do so. Under this act we have denied Congress, which after all represents the people, an opportunity to approve or reject these agreements, regardless of the effect they would have upon domestic producers.

We ignore in this proposed legislation the principle of the protection for American agriculture, industry, and labor by allowing tariff rates that have been fixed by Congress to be changed without reference to American domestic production costs. This act provides for the general extention of the concessions made under a trade agreement with a single country to all other countries in the world, notwithstanding the known existing discriminations against American commerce by many foreign countries. Under this act we do not even give the American producers an adequate opportunity to be heard as to the terms of the agreements before they become effective. I probably should modify this statement to the effect that I understand there is some kind of an advisory committee which is supposed to hear persons interested in the modifications of the tariff act, but not such hearings as would be held before congressional committees.

Under this act the hands of Congress will be tied, and it is for the Secretary of State and the President to make the adjustments, insofar as the tariff rates are concerned. Tell me, if you can, in what other important country in the world such exclusive authority is granted? In all except two countries where we have already approved agreements, the legislative bodies have in some way had a chance to examine the agreements, but this is not true in the United States. Neither the House nor the Senate has a chance to examine the proceedings. We do not even know what the agreements are until they have been put into effect. There is a vital distinction between allowing the Executive to put into effect, under certain conditions, rates of duties which Congress has specified in advance, and giving him blanket authority to determine the items as well as the amount of tariff reductions. When, can you tell me, has the Congress of the United States become so inefficient, so inadequate, that it is not even to be consulted as to the amount of the rates and the countries to which they are to be applied?

The Secretary of State has declared that he is concerned with reducing only alleged "exorbitant" rates; but, as a matter of fact, he has reduced the duties on wheat, dairy products, cattle, and other livestock. The President said in a statement made in 1932:

> Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties—

Referring to farm products—> should be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program. Every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

The Secretary of State also expressed his opinion to the effect that the duties on farm products should not be reduced. And yet, in the face of that statement, the duties on more than 80 farm products have been reduced since this act was put into effect, and in not one single case has the duty been increased. Neither, so far as I can find upon an examination of the record, has the duty been increased on products that are imported into this country that compete with the products of agriculture. We imported, free of duty, last year enough tapioca flour to take the place of 25 percent of the corn products that go into our breakfast foods.

I would like to call your attention to some figures which I think are of considerable importance.

We all agree that conditions have been bad. They were bad in 1933. They were better in 1934 and have continued to gain through 1936, but it might be well to call attention to a situation in which we are soon going to become deeply interested, and that is the fact that our favorable balance in trade from $480,000,000 in 1934 was reduced to approximately $35,000,000 in 1936.

The reports from the Department of Commerce show that for 11 months during 1936 our exports of crude foodstuffs to Canada alone were valued at $17,180,000. Manufactured foodstuffs exported to the same country amounted to $7,109,000, making a total of $24,289,000. Our imports of crude foodstuffs from Canada during the same period amounted to $75,492,000. Manufactured foodstuffs imported by us from Canada during this period were valued at $41,017,000, making a total of $116,509,000. The balance of trade in favor of Canada on crude and manufactured foodstuffs during the first 11 months of 1936 amounted to $92,220,000. These figures would indicate that the farmer and stockman, so far as Canada is concerned, have been pretty much traded out.

Mr. Sayre, who testified before the committee, said there was an increase in the importation of cattle from Canada, but stated that so far as percentage is concerned, it did not make much difference in the price thereof. I do not believe that any practical stockman will agree with such a statement.

On one day in April last year, 1936, 120 carloads of cattle from Canada were unloaded at the St. Paul market, and the following week 120 carloads more were unloaded there—and yet the advocates of this agreement would say the agreement does not affect the market of cattle.

Mr. Sayre would have you believe from his statements in the record that because most of the cattle coming from Canada weighed less than 700 pounds it would not affect the market. It just goes to show that he is not familiar with the livestock situation, because more cattle of any kind on any market will have a tendency to affect the general price of cattle.

The gentleman from North Carolina would have you believe that all prices of farm products have averaged higher by reason of these reciprocal treaties. So far as the cattle industry is concerned, according to the figures given us from the Agricultural Department, we find that the average price of cattle for the year 1936 was $8.85 per hundred. For the year 1935 it was $10.28 per hundred.

But, aside from that, it seems to me that the gentleman should be willing to take into consideration a number of other factors, such as drought conditions, scarcity of crops, and so forth, which materially affect the price of farm products.

The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina stated yesterday that the measure before us in its present form has the approval and recommendation of the United States Chamber of Commerce. I am wondering whether or not this great organization approves the method by which this question is handled, or does it just approve reciprocal agreements generally? If it approves the method by which livestock and farm interests have been handled, I just do not believe it is reflecting their opinion. Unfortunately or fortunately, the farmers of the Middle West do not have a membership in this powerful organization.

We have, in the past 2 years, permitted the South American countries to produce and process thousands and thousands of dollars worth of farm products, and have permitted them to come into this country to compete with the farmer and laborer of the United States. We have carried the situation so far that the American manufacturers of meat products, such as Swift, Armour, Cudahy, and others, have built their plants in Argentina, Brazil, and other countries, and are now producing and processing South American meat that is being sold in competition with our own products.

We are rapidly becoming a great import nation. In the first 11 months of last year we imported into this country 386,000 cattle and 86,000,000 pounds of canned beef, besides some 14,500,000 pounds of dairy products. Last year our exports amounted to approximately $2,000,000,000. Twenty-nine percent of these exports were agricultural products. Seventy-one percent were nonagricultural. Heretofore agricultural products were about one-half of our exports.

Last year, from Canada alone, we imported 48,000,000 bushels of wheat.

We are permitting the foreign people to do our farming and to provide foodstuffs to our country where we are charged with having an overproduction, and yet we imported last year more than $1,000,000,000 worth of farm products that could have been produced and processed in our own country. We do not want great tariff walls. We want reciprocal tariffs. But the people, through their duly elected representatives, should have something to say about the manner in which these tariffs are to be adjusted.

Let us give the American farmer and the American producer a chance to supply the American market, so long as he can reasonably do it. Let us protect the American market for the American farmer and the American workingman, so far as it is reasonable to do it. You can find no better market for your automobiles, your radios, your tractors, and your farm machinery, than the American farmer when he is able to buy. We have heard a great deal said about helping the farmer. Here is a chance to help the farmer and to help the American workingman to help himself.

The old tariff laws may not have been satisfactory in some respects. The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina has agreed that we all want a tariff program. He agrees this should not be a political question. Then why not go further and agree to amend this act so it will be fair, reasonable, and workable? Give the American producer a right to be heard before those who put these agreements into effect; and give him a right to approve or reject such proposed trade agreements. Give him the protection that he is entitled to have under the American form of government. Give his representatives an opportunity to examine the proposed agreements, either through the House or through the Senate of the United States. Protect his markets so long as he is able to supply these markets at a fair and decent return to himself and to his family.

I have received copies of resolutions from various farm and livestock organizations that I should like to include here. I am going to include a copy of resolutions that I received this morning, that were adopted by the American Live Stock Association in January of this year. Here is what they say:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT THE FORTIETH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION, HELD AT EL PASO, TEX., JANUARY 12–14, 1937

Whereas the President and Secretary Hull, on their recent trip to Argentina, openly advocated ratification of the Argentine Sanitary Convention, which would permit the importation of dressed meat products from zones in that country temporarily declared to be free from foot-and-mouth disease: Therefore be it

Resolved by the American Live Stock Association in annual convention at El Paso, Tex., January 12–14, 1937, That we urge our Senators to oppose ratification with every means at their command in order to protect the livestock industry of this country from disease infestation which would certainly follow any tampering with the present embargo.

Whereas the reduction in the tariff on cattle in the Canadian reciprocal trade agreement and the extension of the same reduction to imports from Mexico has been one of the major factors in causing a sharp decline in cattle prices, as a careful examination of official Government market reports clearly indicates; and

Whereas the tariff on agricultural products has been reduced to increase the export of industrial products; and

Whereas the imports have been received in such a manner as to effect a decline out of all proportion to the actual numbers involved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the Reciprocal Trade Act be repealed, or that all treaties negotiated under it be subject to ratification by a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That we request that until the act is repealed or the Canadian agreement is nullified or expires, the imports of cattle under this agreement should be placed on a weekly or monthly quota for 1937, in order to prevent dumping of large numbers on our markets in a short period, as was done in the spring of 1936.

Whereas animal fats and oils are an important byproduct of the cattle industry; and

Whereas the present tariff permits the importation of oils from foreign countries which replace the use of domestic fats in the manufacture of edible products; and

Whereas the only possible way to reestablish a market for domestic fats and oils is through protection against such foreign importations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a tax of 10 cents per pound be placed on all oleomargarine manufactured in this country in which less than 100 percent of domestic oils and fats is used, in order to provide an outlet for our domestic fats and oils and to encourage the consumption thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That we do protest against a further increase of any excise tax on various domestic fats and oils, and ask that needless restrictions, both Federal and State, against the use and sale of oleomargarine be removed.

Whereas it is estimated that the imports of canned beef for the year 1936 will reach the astounding figure of approximately 100,000,000 pounds, the equivalent of approximately 750,000 head of cattle; and

Whereas domestic production of livestock has increased substantially; and

Whereas the tariff of 6 cents a pound is entirely inadequate to protect domestic producers and is out of all proportion to the tariff on cattle and dressed meats: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we protest against trade agreements with South American countries which will permit the importation of canned beef in competition with our domestic product, and that we urge upon Congress an immediate increase of the duty thereon to the full 50 percent permitted under the flexible provision of the present tariff law.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include extracts from certain resolutions adopted at the annual convention of some of the farm organizations, which excerpts are quite brief; also, two short tables showing the exports and imports of agricultural commodities from 1933 to date.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I do not speak this afternoon as one who is opposed to the expansion of foreign trade. I do not speak as an opponent of reciprocal trade agreements. I represent an agricultural district whose principal crop in normal times goes partly into export channels, and I am, therefore, interested particularly in expanding our export markets for wheat. I voted against the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act 3 years ago because it appeared to me that, notwithstanding the desirability of increasing our export market for our surplus agricultural commodities, that under the procedure outlined in the act it would be impossible to do so. It would certainly be most agreeable to me if I could at this time stand on the floor of the House and admit that I had been mistaken, and that the effect of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act had been beneficial to the farmers of this Nation. Frankly and sincerely, however, whatever the effect of the act has been as to the producers of other commodities—and I know there are honest differences of opinion on that question—I do not believe it can fairly be contended by anyone that the industry of agriculture has been benefited. On the contrary, I think it has suffered some very distinct losses and has been put under numerous disadvantages by the terms of the agreements which have been executed. There will be others who will discuss the effect of the act in its entirety, but I shall devote the limited time which I have in discussing the effect which the present act has had upon the industry of agriculture.

I said a moment ago that the trade agreements so far entered into have been detrimental to agriculture. I do not believe that this statement can be successfully challenged. I have carefully read the hearings held by the Ways and Means Committee. It is noteworthy that although some witnesses representing industrial interests, such as the United States Chamber of Commerce, appeared before the committee and urged the extension of this act, that not a single representative of any agricultural organization took this position. It is noteworthy also that although the Secretary of Commerce appeared before the committee and urged the extension of these agreements, that the Secretary of Agriculture who urged the enactment of the original act 3 years ago was conspicuous by his absence, and that no one appeared before the committee representing the Department of Agriculture or any of the other departments of the Government which deal with agricultural problems.

There were representatives of several of the great farm organizations who appeared before the committee, notably Mr. Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange; Charles W. Holman, representing the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation; John D. Miller, president of the National Cooperative Council, and A. L. Loomis, representing the National Dairy Union. Did these spokesmen for agriculture join with the representative of the United States Chamber of Commerce and other industrial interests in urging the reenactment of this legislation? They most certainly did not. Every one of them pointed out the great disadvantages which this legislation had placed upon farmers and stated that if it was to be reenacted that certain very definite limitations and safeguards should be incorporated in order to prevent further discrimination against agriculture.

These witnesses were not, of course, speaking for themselves but for their organizations, and I should like at this time to include in my remarks copies of resolutions adopted by some of the great farm organizations of the country with respect to this legislation.

The resolution adopted by the National Grange at its annual meeting in Columbus, Ohio, on November 11, 1936, reads as follows:

Whereas it appears likely that Congress may reenact legislation authorizing the Department of State to enter into reciprocal trade agreements with other nations, which authority expires on June 12, 1937: Therefore be it

Resolved, That while we favor any expansion of foreign trade which is advantageous to our people, we are persuaded that so long as the protection system prevails, the American farmer is entitled to the American market, so far as he is able to supply the demand; and be it further

Resolved, That in the event of the renewal of this act, trade treaties with other nations should be ratified by the United States Senate before taking effect. Such treaties should not contain the unconditional most-favored-nation clause, under which policy we gain concessions from one nation while making concessions to practically all other nations producing and exporting any given commodity.

The National Cooperative Council which is a Nation-wide organization, composed of all leading farm cooperatives adopted the following resolution at its annual meeting of delegates on January 9, 1937:

As stated in the resolutions of the National Cooperative Council of last year, the sound policy for agriculture in relation to our foreign trade is to maintain all of the domestic markets for American farmers with regard to products produced within the United States and to encourage our farmers to produce products which will take the place of those now being imported whenever such a procedure is practicable. It is also essential to the continued prosperity of our people that every sound effort be made to regain and to expand our foreign-trade outlets, particularly outlets for agricultural products.

The record of our foreign trade for the first 10 months of last year makes it very questionable as to whether the present trade-agreement program of our Government is in the best interest of agriculture. The adverse balance of total trade as between the United States and the first six nations with which we have signed trade agreements during this period has increased to nearly $90,000,000. Looking toward the end of developing foreign trade, if the policy of trade agreements is to be continued, the following changes should be made in the act of June 12, 1934:

1. The right of the Senate to ratify trade agreements should be restored.

2. General application of tariff benefits should be abandoned so that only the nations signatory to such agreements should obtain their benefits.

3. Public hearings should be held on trade agreements before they are completed by whatever authority considers them.

The State Department should refrain from negotiating any further reductions in import duties on agricultural products, in binding agricultural products on the free list, and in binding the Federal Government not to increase nor levy internal taxes upon imported products which directly or indirectly compete with those produced on farms in the United States. The Congress should not shrink from abandoning the most-favored-nation clauses in most of the treaties which the United States has signed with other nations.

The American National Live Stock Association at its fortieth annual meeting held at El Paso, Tex., in January 1937 adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the reduction in the tariff on cattle in the Canadian reciprocal trade agreement and the extension of the same reduction to imports from Mexico has been one of the major factors in causing a sharp decline in cattle prices, as a careful examination of official Government market reports clearly indicates; and

Whereas the tariff on agricultural products has been reduced to increase the export of industrial products; and

Whereas these imports have been received in such manner as to effect a decline out of all proportion to the actual numbers involved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge that the reciprocal trade act be repealed, or that all treaties negotiated under it be subject to ratification by a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That we request that until the act is repealed or the Canadian agreement is nullified or expires, the imports of cattle under this agreement should be placed on a weekly or monthly quota for 1937 in order to prevent dumping of large numbers on our markets in a short period, as was done in the spring of 1936.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, which, as is well known, has been working in close harmony with the administration, adopted the following resolution with reference to the reciprocal trade treaties at its annual conference on December 11, 1936:

We reaffirm our support of reciprocal trade treaties which are negotiated primarily to restore agricultural exports by judicious lowering of industrial tariffs, thus admitting more goods into this country and making it possible for us to sell more of our farm products abroad.

We insist that this principle be adhered to in framing reciprocal trade treaties and that there be no reduction in present agricultural tariffs on any farm product that would have the effect of holding or reducing domestic price levels below parity on such product. We insist that prior to the conclusion of agreements opportunity be afforded official representatives of farmers to be heard in public hearings on questions at interest, and that the most-favored-nation clause be eliminated.

Countries enjoying wide outlets in the American market of commodities on the free list should be effectively encouraged in large part to take in exchange commodities produced in the United States which they require.

While the above resolution indicates the reluctance of this organization to criticize the administration's program, yet it clearly indicates its dissatisfaction with the procedure employed and the results obtained up to date in the negotiation of these treaties.

Surely there must be some reason for this unanimity of opinion on the part of farmers and their representatives that the reciprocal trade agreements have been adverse to their interests. Surely there is some significance in the fact that while industrial interests, at least in part, favor this legislation, farmers are almost unanimously against it, at least in its present form. A study of the results up to date in the administration of the act very clearly indicates, I think, the reason for this feeling on the part of farmers generally.

However, before going into a discussion of that matter, let me point out that it is most difficult to formulate a tariff policy which will be of definite help to all branches of agriculture. We have certain major commodities, such as cotton, tobacco, wheat, and pork, of which we normally produce an exportable surplus. If the producers of those commodities are to be prosperous and able to use their full productive capacity, they must depend in varying degrees on the export market. On the other hand, producers of important agricultural commodities such as dairy products, beef cattle, poultry and poultry products, sugar beets, and many other items of agricultural production do not produce an exportable surplus, and ordinarily find themselves in competition in our market with the same products from other countries. For them, adequate tariff protection is essential. In 1934, when the original Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act was enacted, both groups of farmers were in a seriously depressed condition. It was obvious that if both classes were to be helped there must be an increase in our exports of those commodities of which we had a surplus and a retention of effective protection against imports as to those commodities upon which we were on a domestic basis.

At that time there was a fear on the part of the producers of those products of which we are on an import basis that their interests might be sacrificed in attempting to expand our agricultural export market. Those fears have not been realized in just the particular form in which they were felt at that time, because our agricultural export markets have not been expanded. What is worse, however, the producers of agricultural products on an import basis have apparently been sacrificed on the altar of increased industrial exports, so that we find today both groups are suffering from the present trade policy of the administration—the export group from the fact that its markets have not been expanded but have further declined during the last 3 years, and those on an import basis from the fact that agricultural imports have increased, thus furnishing destructive competition.

I am aware that the answer will be made that the farm prices are higher now than they were in 1934 and that for that reason the farmer should not complain. That is not a valid argument, however. It is true that the prices of some farm products are higher now than they were in 1934; but, if so, it is largely because of the policy of restricted production or the drought. Farm prosperity will not be restored in this country until the farmer receives a fair price for a full crop. In other words, parity price means nothing unless it also includes parity income.

I am sure that no one who has seriously studied the question will contend for one minute that our tariff policy since 1934 has contributed one iota toward better conditions for agricultural producers. The test as to whether it has or not is easily found in the figures showing the trend of foreign trade in agricultural products since 1934. Had there been an expansion of our agricultural exports, as predicted and hoped for by those who advocated the enactment of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act in 1934, then it could be definitely said that as to those crops the act had been successful. Had the act been administered so that it did not increase our imports of competitive agricultural products then, in a negative way, at least, it might be said to be successful as to those products. The figures which I am about to present, however, clearly indicate that the opposite has been true in both cases and that the operation of the act has resulted in a further decline in our export trade and an increase in competitive agricultural imports. The following figures as to individual commodities are based upon both volume and price. In some cases the results would be different, if the factor of price only were considered, but it seems to me that price is a subject in itself, and the only fair way to determine whether export trade has increased or decreased is to use volume as the basis for comparison.

Reference to the above table discloses that in the case of all the commodities listed, which include all our principal export agricultural commodities, there has been a decline in the quantity, and in most cases the value, of the exports since the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act went into effect. The only exception is in the case of fresh vegetables for which item we have only the value and not the quantity. In this case it appears that there has been an increase in the value of the exports over 1933, 1934, and 1935. However, as will be noted, this is a relatively small item. It will be noted, also, that the figures for 1936 include only the first 11 months, all that are available at this time. It is possible that in the case of one or two other articles, especially canned fruits, the added figures for December may show an increase for the year. In general, however, these figures show a tremendous decrease in our exports of agricultural products. In this respect the act must be a tremendous disappointment to its sponsors because 3 years ago they were very emphatic in insisting that the act would result in great increases in our agricultural exports.

The above table thoroughly shows the great increase which has taken place in importations of the agricultural commodities enumerated since 1933 and also in most cases since 1934, the first year the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was effective. In most cases, 1936 showed an increase over 1935. In other words, there has been a steady increase in the importations of these commodities during all the time the act has been effective.

It will be noted that the figures for 1936 include only the first 11 months, which are all that are available at this time. The importations for the full year will, of course, make an even more impressive showing. To be specific, this table shows an increase in our importations of tallow, flaxseed, wool, wheat, other grains, including corn, meat products, butter, cheese, vegetable oils, and sugar, except that the imports of sugar for the 11 months of 1936 are not quite equal to the full year of the importations for 1933. Including December importations, however, there is no doubt but what these figures will show an increase also. The above table does not include importations of livestock, which everyone knows has increased tremendously as a result of the Canadian treaty. Some of the articles enumerated above are not the subject of trade agreements and it is not contended that the increase in the importation of such articles is necessarily the result of the enactment of any particular agreement. The table is used, however, for the purpose of pointing out that during the time the reciprocal-trade agreements have been in effect, our imports of farm products have increased, both as to volume and value. All of us will agree, I am sure, that this is not a desirable situation at a time when our own farmers have been urged for the last 3 years to reduce their production of farm products.

If I had the time it might be of interest to go into the matter of exports and imports from specific countries. That will, no doubt, be done by someone during the course of this discussion. All that I have tried to point out, however, in the brief time which I have taken is that as far as agriculture is concerned, the operation of the act up to date has been detrimental both as to crops which are on an export basis and those which are on an import basis, which means all of our agricultural production.

Under the operation of this act, our exports have greatly decreased and our imports have increased. The resolutions adopted by various farm organizations to which I have called attention earlier in these remarks and testimony of the representatives of agriculture before the committee all indicate that agriculture is not willing to see an extension of the act unless certain definite safeguards are incorporated. As far as I am personally concerned, I feel the same way. I should like to see an increase of our foreign trade in agricultural products. The present act has brought about just the opposite result.

If the act is to be continued it should by all means be amended so as to provide—first, for congressional approval of such treaties as are negotiated; second, that interested parties shall have the right to be heard before the governmental body which negotiates and approves the agreements; third, that no duties shall be reduced to a point below the amount necessary to protect American producers from unfair foreign competition; and fourth, that reduced rates shall not be generalized to nations which discriminate against this country in their trade policies.

I expect to support such amendments as may be offered along the lines indicated above and sincerely hope that they may be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, we are called upon to consider the bill to extend the authority of the President respecting our tariff problems. I have read with great care the views of the majority and the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means. I have also read with great care the committee hearings on House Joint Resolution 96, to extend the Reciprocal Foreign Trade Agreement Act for a period of 3 years. I have listened to the entire debate up to this moment.

From these reports and hearings I get the impression that not alone do we surrender our constitutional duties as representatives of the people but I fear that the plan of the administration to put the question of world peace ahead of the gist of the tariff problem may entangle our Nation in foreign alliances and eventually lead us into great international trouble, the result of independent bartering with foreign representatives through subordinate officials who are not responsible to the people of our country.

I am most concerned, Mr. Chairman, with foreign trade as it affects the people of my district in Nebraska. I am intensely interested in the American market for American producers. I believe that when an American farmer has anything to sell and there is a market for that American produce in the United States that market should be preserved for the American farmer. I am not averse to trade with foreign nations in the good old-fashioned Yankee manner. I believe we should continually work for a favorable American trade balance. I, too, believe in the promotion of world peace, but not for a program which would surrender the American market to foreigners at the expense of a theory which, in my opinion, has not worked for the welfare of the producers in my district. I believe that most Americans and most American farmers are willing to buy from our foreign neighbors most anything of which we have not a surplus. When we have a crop failure, we must buy foreign produce to meet our needs; but when we have abundant crops and have these to sell and there is a market for this produce in America, I, for one, am not willing to surrender that market to any foreign producers. I believe in the American market for the American producer first of all.

I am amazed at the degree of helplessness to which this original legislation has reduced the representatives of the people.

Take, for instance, the importation of fats and oils. I have figures from American organizations interested in the American fats and oils industry to the effect that by reason of the excise tax on Philippine coconut oil we have saved to the American producer of fats and oils an annual market amounting to about $250,000,000. No American farmer would like to surrender a $250,000,000 a year business. Yet this business is now threatened by reciprocal-trade agreement. It is threatened because today we are allowing another oil to come into our country free of duty. Eventually it may replace coconut oil and wipe away that market. If Members of Congress could be given some authority to put duty on that Brazilian oil and save this market to the American producers of fats and oils, something in the way of protecting the American market for American producers would be accomplished. But under this resolution Congress will have nothing to say, and the free importation of this oil and other foreign farm products will continue, and this market which belongs to the American farmer may be surrendered to foreigners.

Mr. Chairman, I called the attention of this House to this matter in the Seventy-fourth Congress, and I feel it my duty to again discuss this subject. We are informed that through the reciprocal-trade agreement with Brazil, millions of pounds of edible oil are being brought into our country duty free. Members should be apprised of this dangerous importation of this foreign oil. It appears to me that either the reciprocal trade agreement negotiators were woefully ignorant of the facts and the potentialities or else this amounts to a deliberate effort to replace coconut oil in the United States by this Brazilian oil product. I am in the position of inquiring if this is an attempt to evade the benefits derived from the tax on Philippine coconut oil by the American farmers? For information of Members of the House, I present some data on babassu oil furnished to me by the National Dairy Union:

A new vegetable oil is appearing in increasing quantities in the United States markets. This is babassu oil, which comes chiefly from Brazil. This oil first came to general attention by the reports of its use as an ingredient in oleomargarine during the year 1935. The Census Bureau reports that 1,838,000 pounds of babassu oil was used in oleomargarine in that year.

Interest increased when it was found that in the recently negotiated reciprocal-trade agreement with Brazil babassu oil was "bound" on the free list; not only that, but that the State Department on behalf of the United States Government agreed that it should not be subject to internal taxation into the United States. The legality of this latter part of the agreement is questioned, but the State Department maintains it.

About the same time as the announcement of the Brazilian agreement there was a noticeable increase in the imports, which have now reached a total of about 7,000,000 pounds a month.

Babassu oil is an edible oil when produced under proper conditions and is also a soap oil. Chemically it is closely related to coconut oil, containing an appreciable percentage of lauric acid, which is one of the valuable constituents of coconut oil. In the use to which it has been put it is a direct substitute for coconut oil and palm oil for both edible and inedible purposes.

Domestic producers of fats and oils, who have become alarmed by the increasing imports of this Brazilian oil and the peculiar provisions of the Brazilian reciprocity agreement, have found two amazing facts as they have begun to study this new threat against domestic industries.

One of these facts relates to the enormous potential supply.

The other fact relates to the threat found in this part of the Brazilian agreement against the long-standing coconut-oil trade with the Philippine Islands.

As Philippine coconut oil is now subject to a 3-cent tax, untaxed babassu oil can be bought by users in this country at 3 cents a pound less than coconut oil, and every pound of babassu oil used is, potentially at least, a substitute for and will replace a pound of coconut oil.

It is difficult to explain how the sponsors for the Brazilian agreement within the State Department can reconcile the damage likely to be caused by this agreement to the Philippine oil trade with their violent protestations in favor of the Philippine coconut-oil producers during the past 2 years. With reference to the potential supply the United States Department of Commerce has issued a special report (no. 36) dated October 25, 1935, on Brazil's Babassu Nut Industry. From this report it appears that the possible supply of babassu oil is almost unlimited. It has not appeared heretofore in the markets in large quantity because of the difficulty in cracking the very hard shell of the babassu nut. This difficulty seems to have been overcome. The oil is produced from the nut of babassu palm trees, of which there are 800,000,000 in one state in Brazil (Maranhao) and 400,000,000 in another state, with large numbers in four other states. These trees average 275 pounds of the nuts per year, the kernel of the nut averaging 33 pounds to the tree, and these kernels producing 60 percent of oil, or about 19 pounds of oil per tree. Of course, transportation and other difficulties must be overcome before any large part of this tremendous available supply can be released for commercial use. The oil, as stated above, is very similar to palm oil, contains lauric acid and replaces palm oil and coconut oil in their usual and ordinary commercial uses. When used in oleomargarine it not only replaces coconut oil but also replaces cottonseed oil, soybean oil, and other important domestic products.

The imports of babassu oil have become alarming since the 1st of January 1936. Imports for the first 4 months of this year are as follows:

	Pounds
January and February	18,502,076
March	5,083,506
April	5,596,601

If this level of imports is kept up it is evident that from sixty to seventy million pounds will come in this year. With the Brazilian trade agreement as a bar to any remedial action by the Government it seems evident that American oils and fats producers are in for another discouraging period in spite of the efforts which Congress has undertaken to protect this important branch of American agriculture.

If Members will take time to read the hearings on this measure, they will find testimony to show that the Brazilian oil to which I refer has been on the free list many years. They will also learn that there was not much of a market for this oil until we put a tax on coconut oil. Then the soap makers and the Oleomargarine Trust started looking over the world for a cheaper substitute for American fats and oils. Suddenly foreign importers learned about this Brazilian nut. They found this nut in the deep woods of Brazil. It was hard to get and hard to reach because of lack of roads. The nut was hard to crack. But roads were built and machines were made to crack this nut and extract the oil. Then, I am informed, the industry of the Brazilian babassu nut grew by leaps and bounds until its harvest has increased 400 percent in 1 year. To me it develops the belief that industries, anxious to get a cheaper substitute for American fats and oils, developed the Brazilian nut industry because we have been able, through the tax on coconut oil, to give the American producer some semblance of protection.

An excise of 3 cents per pound upon babassu oil would afford a more nearly reasonable protection from the competition of foreign fats and oils. In the Brazilian treaty which was executed about a year ago, babassu oil was specifically exempted from all forms of tariff and excise tax during the period of the treaty.

I have been asked by many people in my district to introduce a bill to put a duty or excise tax on the importation of this competitive oil. Of course, so long as the Reciprocal Foreign Trade Agreement Act is extended and, at least for the duration of the Brazilian treaty, sponsorship of any proposed legislation to fix an appropriate duty or tax would merely amount to a futile gesture. Because of the surrender of its independent function, the Congress has placed itself in the position of being unable to undo or amend by unilateral action that which has been determined independent of Congress through bilateral action, resulting in treaty obligations without even the formality of Senate ratification. In other words, under the act approved June 12, 1934, we have had to stand by and helplessly observe such invasions of our home market without benefit of the possibility of any legislative relief, and if this resolution succeeds, we shall have to similarly stand by at least until June 12, 1940.

Those Congressmen who represent districts where beef is raised should heed the warning given to me by Professor Gramlich, of the Nebraska State Agricultural College. Mr. Gramlich's services have been frequently used by this administration. He has been in Washington on several occasions. He is an expert on the fats and oils subject. His warning is to the effect that the price of the finished steer on American farms is based upon the price the American farmer can secure for the inedible fats which can be found around the intestines of that finished steer. If that be true—and I doubt not the word of an expert like Professor Gramlich—Members in this House representing the cattle raisers of this country should hesitate before allowing foreign fats and oils to flow into the United States from foreign countries. If this cheap oil comes to us free of duty and eventually controls the price of our own finished cattle, the future of the cattle raiser will indeed be dark.

There has been sufficient argument developed in the debate on this resolution to lead me to believe that through the trade agreements with Canada and the importation of meat from South America the American producer of beef is being penalized.

Mr. Chairman, I have contacted many producers of beef cattle in my district and they are opposed to the lowering of the tariff on cattle coming to us from Canada and from other countries. I have letters from farmers and even some merchants protesting against the importation of other farm products where they come in direct competition with American produce. The people whom I represent in this great deliberative body are opposed to anything that will surrender the American market to foreigners and I plead with you to give this matter your most serious attention on the basis of preserving the American market for the American producer.

I do not believe the American people can be fooled by the theory that these reciprocal-trade agreements will buy us world peace and the sincere good will of foreign nations. That has already been demonstrated to me by the actions of these foreign nations who have succeeded in getting more than 50 percent of their debts to the United States canceled and are now not willing to pay us back any of the reduced balance. I feel that this example set by certain foreign nations now trying to invade our market on the claim of world peace and good will underlies another effort to make a one-sided bargain with the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I know that trade agreements of some kind must be made between our country and foreign countries. But in these trade agreements I hope that nothing will be done which will in any way force us into foreign entanglements; nothing that will tend to sell our farmers and laboring men "down the river." I hope that we get a real honest trade when we bargain with these foreign diplomats. I pray that nothing will happen in these bargains with foreign nations which will tend to tear down our high standard of American living. From my experiences in foreign lands I know the sort of standard of living of many peoples. We have fought for many years to bring the American standard of living to a high scale. Let us not endanger that American standard. I do not wish American people to be pulled down to the plane of living standards now prevalent in many foreign lands that I have personally visited.

I want the American market preserved for the American producer. I am opposed to the importation of foreign-made goods which come into direct competition with merchandise made by the hands of good American laboring men and skilled mechanics. I should like to see the American union trade label on all American manufactured goods in order that Americans would know that they are buying goods made by Americans and not from the factories of foreign owners of human slaves. Unless we protect the market for the American farmer and the American market for the American workingman, we might as well become international and drop to the low level of living which exists among the pitiful humanity in some of the foreign nations which are surrounding our shores with their boatloads of cheaply made merchandise and cheaply grown farm produce. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I want to "buy American" and I want to preserve the "American market for American producers." I do not want to be pushed into the World Court or the League of Nations through the back door of what may be called "reciprocal trade agreements", and from which we may eventually have to back out with our faces very red. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the Progressive Party of Wisconsin properly voiced the sentiment of the farmers of the Northwest in its declaration that the American farmer should have his home markets, free from the foreign competition which has contributed greatly to the deplorable agricultural situation, which has been growing more serious and desperate for 15 years. This protest against the importation of farm products from foreign countries, where production costs are much lower, has been expressed repeatedly by all northwestern farm organizations.

The effect of reciprocal-trade treaties has been to reduce the tariff duties on farm products which were previously too low to provide for that difference in cost of production at home and abroad, which is absolutely essential to farm progress. That will continue to be the effect of such agreements. They will not only continue to whittle away the slight protection our farmers have had but they prevent action which will increase tariff duties on farm products to a proper level.

There has been much said about increase of prices on many farm products and the increased income from the farms since the low mark of the depression and since the new policy of trade treaties has gone into effect. An analysis of such statements proves that they are very misleading as to the plight and the deplorable circumstances of the majority of farmers.

The statement, for instance, that farm income for 1935 was $7,000,000,000 would seem to indicate that prosperity had again come to the rural people. However, the statement indicates that farmers, who comprise one-fourth the Nation's population, received only 11 percent of the total national income. It indicates further that the average income of the 6,800,000 farms was less than $1,100, from which must be deducted taxes—local, State, and National—before the average farmer received anything for his living expenses. Furthermore, about 40 percent of the total farm income is estimated to be the amount received by farmers from farm products produced and consumed on their farms for rental value of their homes, and so forth. The accuracy of such estimates may well be questioned, but even if accepted, they disclose that the cash income of the farmers for 1935 was little more than $4,000,000,000.

Such statements do not indicate the facts about the majority of farmers. In 1935 the farm income was less than in 1936, but a break-down of the estimates revealed that 35 percent of the farmers received nearly 80 percent of the total farm income, leaving only 20 percent of that income for 65 percent of the farming population. Presuming that the farm income of 1936 was distributed in about the same proportion, more than 4,000,000 farmers had an income of less than $1,500,000, or an average of less than $400—an amount equivalent to about 60 percent of the average of relief workers on the Government rolls.

There is ample evidence that farm prosperity is a long way off. It is estimated by one Government agency that over 1,000,000 farmers now are in need of some form of emergency or rehabilitation loans. More than half a million more are in need of loans to prevent their coming to a point where rehabilitation loans will become necessary. Over 1,500,000 farmers now are in that plight, and more than $400,000,000 is needed at once to meet the situation.

The farm mortgage situation also is in point. On October 1, 195,000 farmers were in default in their payments on farm loans made by the Federal land banks. It is reported that the Federal land banks have served notice of foreclosure on over 20,000 farmers. Insurance companies and other private agencies are holding a still larger number of farm mortgages on which there is default in the payment of both principal and interest, and likewise are foreclosing farm mortgages on a wholesale plan. Farm foreclosures now are being brought at the rate of 8,000 per month.

Our Government is spending billions trying to alleviate the distress of agriculture. It is preparing plans for further activities. Among other things, it plans measures to aid farm tenants. Restriction of crop production is another remedy prescribed.

In the face of a situation which presents so many discouraging phases, the same Government which plans so extensively persists in the policy of permitting the competition of foreign farm products with our own, displacing our farm production with that of foreign acres, and limiting prices on our farm products to the cost of production abroad, plus tariff rates already too low. Reciprocal-trade treaties have reduced the little protection the farmers have, and will continue to do so as more treaties are negotiated. They serve to add to the difficulties which have made the rehabilitation of agriculture our greatest national problem.

The foreign acreage devoted to products imported into this country reaches an enormous area. Argentina ships us 2,000,000 acres of flax, a million acres of corn, meat products which required more than a million acres to produce, along with dairy products which help lower our dairy prices. Canada and Mexico send in 300,000 head of cattle, raised on 3,000,000 acres of foreign soil. Canada ships in also barley, cheese, potatoes, in quantities which not only displace an equal amount of such products from our own farms but reduce the prices in our markets, at the same time depriving American farmers and their American acres of their opportunity.

These comparisons might be added to indefinitely. While restricting production acreage here at home, we are constantly expanding the acreage of foreign lands to supply our home markets. The whole tendency of the reciprocal-trade agreements is to still further sacrifice the American farmer, reduce his earning power and his purchasing power, in order to increase the prosperity of farmers in other lands who have a lower cost of production, a lower standard of living, and in most instances have other advantages with which our farmers cannot compete.

The Progressive Party of Wisconsin demands that the home markets shall be given to our own farmers. I heartily voice that demand. Repeal of the so-called reciprocal-trade law will be a step in that direction, and I favor its repeal.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of the State of New York are adversely affected by the reciprocal-trade agreements with Canada, and under the treaty agreement that applies to Canada it also applies to every nation with, I believe, the exception of two. What affects the State of New York with equal force applies to the entire industry in our Nation.

Our tariff laws, prior to this Hull trade agreement, protected the farmers and only very small shipments of dairy products came into the country from Canada, but under the reduced tariff of nearly 40 percent on cream and a little less on cheese our markets are thrown open to the world. There perhaps was some excuse in the trying times in giving the Chief Executive some extra powers, but we have learned a dear lesson, and even to suggest now to continue the powers for 3 years more will finish the farmer and go a long way in continuing the depression.

To make our Nation prosperous we must first have the farmers prosperous, and until they are on a paying basis the country cannot hope to get back to good times. There is no reason why the Congress cannot assume their responsibility and deal with the problems before us.

Men coming from all sections of the Nation have a far better knowledge of our needs than a man who has only free-trade ideas and listens to the ones to be benefited in the foreign countries, instead of the ones affected in the United States. We have given our sugar quota to Cuba and cut down the production in the States, Puerto Rico, and our other island possessions. We are losing our textile industry and getting the products from Japan, where girls work 60 hours a week in factories for 15 cents a day. There can be only two courses to take, we must come down to their wage level and standard of living or give protection to our workers if they are to have a job.

From the experience that we have had with these trade agreements we certainly are not justified in continuing them, and I hope that this legislation extending the powers to the Chief Executive does not pass.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain excerpts from the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, the salient points involved in the resolution to extend the Reciprocal Foreign Trade Agreement Act, now before the House, the legal authority for it, and the beneficial aspects of the trade-agreement policy which it represents, have been so clearly presented to the committee by those who have preceded me that I would be rather reluctant to avail myself of the time allotted to me this afternoon with the demands that are being made upon us were it not for the fact that those who spoke yesterday and who have spoken today in opposition to the passage of this resolution have paraded before us the specter of a ruined American agriculture.

I do not want to speak in generalities this afternoon, although I could easily be excused for doing so. If there are any of us who know what a ruined American agriculture was, it is those of us who, like myself, were engaged in agricultural pursuits between 1929 and 1933, and still are so engaged. Not a ghost, not a specter, but real stark ruin faced us then and faced not only agriculture but industry of all types. I could ask you gentlemen from the inland cities, from the mining districts, and from our seaport towns to go back and consider and compare the situation that your own people were in during those same 4 years and that which they now are in. The same comparison can be made profitably as to the state of agriculture in general in the United States then and today.

Because the farmer is relatively prosperous today and has more money to spend, American industrial employment has risen. As was pointed out by the gentleman from Tennessee a few moments ago, consumption of all kinds of goods, both those produced and manufactured at home and those normally imported, has greatly increased; but the opponents of any policy of foreign-trade expansion have stressed the fact that among these imports there has been a considerable increase in agricultural products. Their endeavor is to fasten upon the reciprocal trade agreement plan the onus, if any there be, of this increase. In this I feel they have been somewhat disingenuous.

It has been impossible to pin these gentlemen on the left down to an admission of the truthful facts, that the vast majority of these agricultural products imported in increased quantity are either those of a noncompetitive character, such as coffee, rubber, and silk, or those on which full tariff duty has been paid, such as the much-discussed Argentine corn imports, or commodities classed under the agricultural schedules but which affect the farmer only indirectly, if at all, such as beverages.

Anyone who has read the report of the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee cannot have failed to have seen for himself the exact division of competitive and noncompetitive agricultural products therein set forth and to have realized the truth of this.

As a matter of fact, even in the matter of Cheddar cheese, which the gentleman from Kansas complained about a moment ago, the United States producer sold a greatly increased quantity of his own Cheddar cheese in his own market at a higher price than he ever thought of receiving in 1933.

The relatively small imports of corn from the Argentine and elsewhere in 1935 actually decreased in 1936; and there never would have been any demand for such outside corn had we not gone through the heavy drought situation we experienced in 1934.

That the farmer who was actually engaged in raising corn, or hogs, or fruit, or vegetables, or cotton, or any other agricultural product is not greatly concerned about these small imports was patently shown in the election of last November, for the gentleman who led the minority party to defeat cast everything to the winds at Minneapolis when he came out flatfooted against the trade agreement bargaining which the Roosevelt administration had instituted. This opposition cost him votes throughout the country. It cost him votes from Republicans as well as Democrats. Wherever this was an issue, and my friends on the minority certainly endeavored to make it an issue in every congressional district in the country, the people sustained the Hull treaty-bargaining program.

I confess I do not know exactly what the gentlemen who signed the minority report mean. They are not opposed to reciprocity, they say. They are only opposed to the continuance of the Trade Agreement Act in its present form. They state, "We are in accord with the general policy of reciprocity which we understand to mean the exchange of mutually beneficial tariff concessions between nations."

So far as that statement is concerned, they stand in no different position from the majority of this House. The concessions which we have made have been concessions of real benefit to the nations with whom we have been dealing; and yet they have in every instance been safeguarded by the President in such a way as not to harm the American producer. For every concession we have given we have received more than one beneficial reduction of duty in exchange. Why, there are those abroad who claim that the trade agreements entered into have been at the expense of their own country and for the benefit of the United States alone.

Yet the minority still proclaims the isolationist doctrine of self-sufficiency, which would eliminate all profitable trade intercourse with foreign nations.

They forget that to carry into effect their doctrine would ruin in their own country great industries and great agricultural enterprises that have been built up over generations on the basis of selling surpluses to foreign nations. As to our own agriculture, I need go no further than to mention cotton, corn and its products, rice, and dried fruits, all of which and many more are produced in this country on a surplus basis, which requires either that the surplus be exported or that the home consumption generally be doubled.

For instance—and I quote from Foreign Trade in the United States in 1935—there was exported in 1929, 54.8 percent of this Nation's cotton production; 32.6 percent of the rice and rice flour; 53.5 percent of its canned sardines; 49.4 percent of its dried apricots; 35.5 percent of its raisins; 56.8 percent of its dried prunes; 22.8 percent of its canned fruits; 15.5 percent of the fresh apple crop; and 22.3 percent of the fresh pear crop. These are only a few of our agricultural surpluses. Where are we going to increase our home consumption sufficiently to take up these surpluses?

We have heard much about concessions we have given to take care of this situation; well, let us look at some of them.

Most of these have been explained before and will be covered further by some of those who follow. Let me just say a word about the cattle concession given to Canada. The reduced duty that we agreed to give in our negotiations with Canada applies to a quantity amounting to only three-fourths of 1 percent of the annual American slaughterings. This concession, while infinitesimal to us, was of vital importance to Canada, where it was equal to 15 percent of the Canadian cattle slaughterings. In return for this and the remaining few concessions that were given to Canada on agricultural products we obtained important concessions on fruits, vegetables, nuts, salt pork, eggs, and fish products. That these concessions were of real value can be briefly indicated by a reference to the actual quantity of a few American agricultural exports into Canada, to which reduced duties applied, during the first half of 1936.

So that there may be no misunderstanding or quibbling over whether the dollar was the same in 1933 as in 1936, I am going to use, as far as I can and as far as official figures are available, tonnage, and not dollar figures, because every farmer knows how many pounds or bushels he raises on an acre of land.

We see that the imports of American lettuce into Canada increased from 10,471,000 pounds to 29,286,000 pounds.

Fresh tomatoes, of which we heard something yesterday, from 3,285,000 pounds to 9,671,000 pounds.

Fresh apples from 945 barrels to 25,519 barrels.

Asparagus from 872,000 pounds to 2,296,000 pounds.

Canned fruits, from 353,000 pounds to 1,036,000 pounds.

Eggs in the shell, from 10,694 dozens to 83,462 dozens.

Cleaned rice, from 14,004 hundredweight to 25,319 hundredweight.

Salt pork, from 323,000 pounds to 844,000 pounds.

The available figures do not give the tonnage of dried fruits, I regret to say, a matter in which my State is particularly interested, but they do show the value. Oranges, which were made duty free during the months of January through April, increased in value by $297,000; grapefruit, by $175,000; and other fresh fruits, including plums and cherries, which were affected by the tariff reduction—and that is all I am talking about—by $110,000; and nuts to an additional value of $109,000 and dried fruits to an additional value of $62,000 were imported into Canada from the United States in the first 6 months of 1936 over and above the comparable figures for 1935.

I am not going into the question of the increase of industrial exports. They seem to be taken for granted in much of the argument to which I have listened, but what I am showing you is that agriculture itself has received proportional benefits of definite value through the agreements that have been entered into. This tonnage removed from home consumption certainly aided the home market.

Now, let us take the case of Cuba. Before I go into the increase of our exports to Cuba—and I trust I may have time to go into them fully—I wish to take a few moments to correct some misapprehensions which might have been left in the minds of the members of the Committee by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], of whom I endeavored to ask some questions yesterday. The tables he has inserted in the RECORD today unfortunately fail to take into consideration the exact tariff situation on sugar as between the United States and Cuba as it developed. There have been two reductions in the tariff duty on sugar as far as Cuba is concerned, and one as far as the world is concerned.

The first reduction on Cuban sugar was made in 1934 from 2 cents to 1½ cents. That was made, Mr. Chairman, as the result of a Presidental proclamation, and in consequence of the results of a Republican formula, a cost-of-production analysis, instituted and conducted by the United States Tariff Commission. It has nothing whatever to do with the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act. This reduced the general tariff on sugar from 2½ cents to 1.875 cents, which made a rate of 1.5 cents applicable to Cuban sugar by virtue of the 20-percent preferential granted to Cuba in 1902. This made the Cuban rate 1.5 cents per pound.

The second reduction from 1.5 cents to 0.9 cent was made in the Cuban trade agreement effective September 3, 1934. All of the figures and computations, therefore, which the gentleman from Michigan put into the RECORD yesterday, which were based on the 2-cent rate, should be revised in light of the fact that the reduction made by the trade agreement was only on the 0.6 cent made by and under Secretary Hull's negotiation. It is quite true that the revenue collections from Cuban imports were smaller than they would have been if the same amount of sugar had been imported under the same sugar-quota legislation and with a higher duty in effect, but I do not think there is anyone here who believes that the same amount of sugar would have been imported at the higher duty.

During the first 12 months of the operation of the Cuban trade agreement both the United States and Cuba collected more revenue on the aggregate of their imports than in the preceding 12 months, in spite of the fact their tariff rates were lower. As a matter of record, during the first 2 years of the Cuban agreement the duty collected on imports of sugar into the United States amounted to $93,336,000, or $10,583,000 more than twice the collections in the year previous to the agreement.

The sugar-quota legislation and the duty reduction in the Cuban trade agreement are integral parts of a single plan for the rehabilitation of the sugar industry both in the United States and in insular regions. The domestic producers of beet sugar, may I say in answer to a criticism voiced by one of the gentlemen on the minority, have not yet been able to fulfill the quota allotted to them under the terms of the Jones-Costigan Act. What is their plight? They have not been limited. They have had an increased, not a decreased quota. They cannot fill it, yet they have been protected. There is not a sugar-beet grower in California, and I think hardly any in the United States, who would return to the condition of competitive price selling of sugar under a world-wide open market.

I may say there did exist and still exists a disparity between the United States price and the world price of sugar; but when we took sugar into this trade agreement and made the tariff concession to Cuba, we erected a wall around ourselves and said, "So much and no more can you sell us; go to the rest of the world and sell your surplus for what you can get. It will not affect us, because we have protected the sugar producer at home." This was an intentional and outstanding characteristic of our sugar-control plan. The Cuban Export Association sells its quota in the United States at prevailing prices. Domestic sugar producers are the major beneficiaries of the higher sugar prices. The wholesale price of raw sugar in August 1934 was 3.24 cents per pound f. o. b. New York. It was 3.68 cents per pound in August 1936.

When the trade agreement with Cuba went into effect there were thousands of tons of sugar in warehouses in Cuba waiting to be sent to the United States. Unregulated competition, which would have resulted had the Cubans lowered their price by the amount of the tariff reduction, would have been disastrous to American producers. How would my Michigan friends have liked this?

May I point out to the committee that all this has been done without any increase in the price of sugar to the consumer, and in stabilizing our market we have protected the earnings of the beet-sugar grower and cane-sugar grower of America; yet it has not cost the consumer in retail prices a fraction of a cent a pound. Where the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] can have gotten his idea of a quarter of a million dollar cost to consumers, as a result of this agreement is beyond me. You have only to ask the housewife to know this cannot be.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I cannot yield unless the gentleman secures me some additional time.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman's side has most of the time.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman may have had in mind asking me, what about the Michigan beet-sugar industry? How has it fared under this administration? If so, I may say that the average annual production of beets in Michigan during the years 1928 to 1934, before this Democratic protection of the sugar industry was devised, was 612,000 tons, whereas the average annual production in Michigan since 1933 has been 917,000 tons. That is almost a 50-percent increase, all of which has been marketed at a profit. The fact is the planted acres of sugar beets in Michigan increased from an annual average of 83,000 acres in the years 1928 to 1932 to an average of 148,000 acres in the years 1933 to 1935.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman is answering me I wish he would yield.

Mr. BUCK. I cannot do it yet. I will at the end of my statement if I have time. The acreage has not come up to the 162,512 acres that Michigan was allotted under the Jones-Costigan Act. The price paid growers per ton has come up from $5.73 in 1932 to $7.27, including benefit payments in 1935.

So much for the sugar situation. Now I would like to go into a number of other matters with respect to our exports to Cuba from the increase of which farmers have benefited. Here are a few samples. The most important single product on which the Cuban duty was reduced was hog lard, which has resulted in increased sales of over $1,726,000 in the months of September 1935 to August 1936, over a similar period in 1933 to 1934:

Milled rice: Exports of which into Cuba were valued at only $2,000 the year before the agreement was entered into, amounted to $843,000 during the second year of the agreement.

Exports of white potatoes into Cuba increased from 239,000 bushels, valued at $211,000 in the pre-agreement year, to 856,000 bushels, valued at $516,000, in the second agreement year.

Exports of onions into Cuba increased from 4,110,000 pounds, valued at $52,000, in 1933–34, to 21,769,000 pounds, valued at $400,000 in 1935–36.

Dried beans increased from 2,213,000 pounds, valued at $77,000, to 4,685,000 pounds, valued at $132,000 in the second agreement year.

Canned sardines, in which my own State is interested, increased exports from 1,331,000 pounds to 4,479,000 pounds.

Canned asparagus, corn, and peas, from 70,000 pounds to 204,000 pounds.

Canned fruits, from 520,000 pounds to 1,772,000 pounds.

Soybean oil, from 376,000 pounds to 2,587,000 pounds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from California 3 additional minutes.

Mr. BUCK. Is there any gentleman sitting before me who can honestly say that the increase of these exports, which has relieved the domestic market of the back-log pressure of either overproduction or underconsumption, has not reacted to the benefit of the farmer? As our markets abroad in cotton, and rice, and dried fruits, and apples, and all these numerous products dwindled from 1930 on, the surplus of these products began to stock our warehouses at home. It is not possible for a nation overnight to begin to eat twice as many prunes as they did before. It is not possible overnight to consume at home the entire surplus of cotton and barley that may be grown in this country. Is it any wonder, therefore, that those of us who have had sincerely at heart the welfare of the producers of agricultural products were forced to the conclusion that it was a necessary part of any program of recovery to bring about a resumption of foreign trade at least in these products which are produced in surplus quantities in the United States? Such is the program that has been that undertaken by Secretary Hull under the authority extended to him by the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act of 1934. It has taken a long time to negotiate the 15 existing trade agreements—agreements which deal with a large number of individual items of import and export. The willingness of the United States to remove some trade barriers of its own in exchange for the removal of others that are strangling its foreign commerce has had a marked effect on diplomatic relations as well as the trade relations of the world. The task is not completed. Trade agreements which will be of great benefit to this country and which may help in a better understanding among nations still remain to be negotiated. It is utterly impossible to negotiate them by June 12, 1937. It is, therefore, of the highest importance that the authority given the President by the act of 1934 be extended for an additional 3 years that this same program may be continued so long as we may find friendly nations who will sit across the table and remove the barriers that they have erected against American agricultural exports.

The country is not deceived by the specious pleas that are made by those who oppose the enactment of this resolution. They would enact it with an amendment here and an amendment there, but every one of those amendments when analyzed is of such a nature that it would prevent the continuation of the work already carried out. Ratification by Congress: I need only refer you to the pathetic history of the reciprocity treaties, and I suppose they were real reciprocity treaties, the kind that the minority report refers to, negotiated by President McKinley, and all strangled in a legislative committee. Abolition of the most-favored-nation treatment would put us on the same plane of barter on which several European nations now find themselves. We would be the victims of our own discriminations. With every special concession that we might give to Barataria, we would find that Ruratavia would be protesting because it was not included and that it would start some system of retaliation against us. No, my friends; while the direct bargain plan may appeal at first sight, actually it is a proposal to sacrifice our own interests for the sake of tying ourselves up to one particular nation. I could cite you cases where as a result of our incorporating in the Hull agreements and most-favored-nation plan, we have already obtained additional reductions in tariff because the particular nation with whom we made the agreement subsequently made lower concessions to another country.

While the people of my own State, whenever the matter has been clearly put before them as a political issue, have overwhelmingly voted not merely their support of President Roosevelt but their support of this particular trade-agreement policy, I am aware that there are would-be agricultural leaders, generals without following, who oppose the extension of this measure. They do not even yield as far as my friends on the minority yield. They desire the repeal of this beneficial law. Perhaps they will refuse to see the light, but never yet have I met an intelligent farmer in California, to whom the fundamental principles and the actual working practices of the Reciprocal Foreign Trade Agreements Act has been explained, who has not agreed with me that it has furnished the best possible method of restoring the necessary outlet for California's surplus farm products.

Were it not for the fact that the farmers of the country would be so severely hurt by the rejection of this bill and of this policy, it would be an interesting experiment to see whether those who oppose the extension of this policy would be willing to sit down and double the quantity of rice and lard and salt pork and canned goods and prunes and other items which they will have to eat at home if the foreign-market outlets are not kept open, or to see to what other forms of agriculture they would divert the farmers now producing these surpluses.

We have an opportunity to experiment along self-sufficient lines in a small way right now. For the past 100 days at the ports on the Pacific coast, as a result of the maritime strike, the isolationist policy of no foreign trade has been put into full effect. No overseas shipments have moved out of the ports of San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, or Los Angeles. As a result, there are on hand in warehouses, canneries, dried-fruit packing plants, rice-cleaning plants, and elsewhere in California, and, I doubt not, in Oregon and Washington as well, unseasonable quantities far beyond the normal winter carry-over of these goods. A very great portion of these would have gone abroad but for the strike. This tonnage on hand over and above the normal rate of disappearance for this time of the year, I am advised, is about 22 percent in the case of canned cherries, 47 percent in the case of canned asparagus, 49 percent in the case of canned pears, about 38 percent in the case of dried prunes, about 40 percent in the case of rice, and so on. In the case of cotton, where 90 percent of the California crop is exported, inability to deliver has cost the farmer $1.50 per bale on 300,000 bales remaining to be shipped, in addition to the cost of the insurance, interest, and storage from bids to farmers. The California apple crop, of which about 40 percent normally is exported, is now mostly held in cold storage. Why go further?

This situation is not due to the failure of the domestic market, which has been good throughout the year. Domestic orders have been filled by rail shipments, and some foreign orders have been filled by rail shipment to eastern ports and overseas steamers thence. But as far as the west coast is concerned, foreign trade has been abolished for the past 3 months.

This is an object lesson in how the contraction of foreign trade affects directly the farmer and will soon affect the home market. What are you gentlemen who favor this isolationist policy going to do to see that these products now on hand are consumed at home? The time to sell them abroad in many instances has passed.

What are you going to do to relieve the distress of these California and Oregon and Washington farmers? You minimize the importance of foreign trade; well, foreign trade has been practically abolished in this case as a result of the maritime strike. As a result our farmers will pay the price; they must depend on foreign markets for favorable returns.

If there is any one branch of American activity that is dependent upon and benefited by these reciprocal-trade agreements, it is and has been agriculture. It has benefited directly from concessions given it by foreign nations, indirectly by the increased buying power of labor as a result of industrial concessions. Far from being "sold down the river", it is today the greatest beneficiary of these agreements.

I have just shown you what happens when you strangle foreign trade, as has been done on the Pacific coast. A more timely, though unfortunate, example could not be produced. I regret that I have not the time to go further into this, but I leave it to the minority to tell how they propose to keep our export farmers from paying the cost of the interruption of overseas trade with next year's crops. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I represent one of the largest coal, iron, and steel districts in the United States. I have not received any letters or telegrams opposing the measure which is being debated in the House today.

It seems to me that if this reciprocal-trade proposition were a detriment to business I would have received communications from the owners of the large business establishments located in my district. The fact that I did not receive any complaints signifies that a reciprocal tariff is not only constructive and practical but is also a very humane piece of legislation.

It has been frequently said that Japan, India, China, Turkey, Africa, and many other countries in Europe have not any laws prohibiting child labor. No doubt this statement is true, however, we Americans have no right to unjustly criticize other countries because in many States of our Union there is no legislation prohibiting children from working in the fields and industries. It is my opinion that the people of China, Japan, Turkey, India, Africa, and other countries in the world, as a class, are just as humane as we are.

There have been women and men in every country in the world, regardless of creed, color, or nationality, who have sacrificed their lives for the betterment of mankind.

I hope the time is not far distant when every country in the world will abolish child labor and those countries refusing to adhere to this humanitarian act will not be permitted to ship goods into those countries which have restrictions against child labor. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I opposed the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Resolution when it was under consideration 3 years ago. I am opposed to it now. I believe it is an unconstitutional delegation of law-making power; furthermore, that experience now fully demonstrates that the trade agreements so far consummated have worked to the economic detriment of the United States.

When the resolution to grant this power to the President to enter into reciprocal trade agreements was first before Congress, the alleged purpose stated in the resolution and proclaimed on the floor for doing so was to expand our foreign trade. Today the advocates of the resolution before the House for the renewal of this extraordinary delegation of power to the President have veered away from the originally avowed purpose and instead now put their major emphasis on world peace as their motive.

Those who will take time to read the hearings and examine the statements made by Secretary Hull and Dr. Sayre will discover that this resolution is urged as a means of softening the hostility of foreign nations, rather than to improve our foreign commerce. Commerce is made incidental to the softening process.

It is highly important that Congress does not surrender power and place it in the hands of those who in the use of it, in their zeal for buying good will, forget that their first duty is to the people of the United States. A page from past history may be relevant to the point. You Members will recall that Martin Van Buren when Secretary of State under Andrew Jackson had occasion to negotiate a trade treaty with Great Britain. This was in 1829. Secretary Van Buren dispatched instructions to Mr. Lane, then Minister at London, in which he instructed Mr. Lane how to proceed in conducting the negotiations.

Sometime later Mr. Van Buren was nominated as our Minister to London. His nomination was sent to the United States Senate for confirmation. Confirmation was vigorously opposed, and the opposition was led by Daniel Webster. In expressing his opposition to the confirmation of Mr. Van Buren, Mr. Webster specially cited the instructions dispatched by Secretary Van Buren to Mr. Lane, which were these:

> You will be able to tell the British Minister * * * that you and I, and the leading persons in this administration, have opposed the course heretofore pursued by the Government and the country on the subject of the Colonial trade.
> Be sure to let him know that, on that subject, we have held with England and not with our own Government.
> Their views upon that point have been submitted to the people of the United States; and the counsels by which your conduct is now directed are the result of the judgment expressed by the only earthly tribunal to which the late administration was amenable for its acts.

Now, let me quote from Mr. Webster's criticism of these instructions. He said:

> I think these instructions derogatory in a high degree to the character and the honor of the country. I think they show a manifest disposition in the writer of them to establish a distinction between his country and his party; to place that party above the country; to make interest at a foreign court for that party rather than for the country; to persuade the English ministry and the English monarch that they have an interest in maintaining in the United States the ascendency of the party to which the writer belongs. * * *
> I cannot be of the opinion—

Said Mr. Webster—

> that the author of these instructions is a proper representative of the United States at that Court. * * *

Continuing, Mr. Webster said:

> In the presence of foreign courts, amidst the monarchies of Europe, the American minister is to stand up for his country; * * * and far less is he himself to reproach either; he is to have no objects in his eyes but American objects, and no heart in his bosom but an American heart; that he is to forget self and forget party, to forget every sinister and narrow feeling in his proud and lofty attachment to the Republic whose commission he bears.

The Senate rejected the nomination of Mr. Van Buren.

Now after more than a century we find our Secretary of State under delegated powers from Congress negotiating trade agreements not with one country but with power to negotiate these agreements with all nations. Can it be possible that history has repeated itself and that the present administration in its negotiations has impressed upon foreign powers that it is opposed to the policy pursued by preceding administrations; that the policy of the present administration is not that heretofore taken by the Government and the country. I wonder if foreign nations have been instructed that this administration has held with them and not with its own Government.

I hope that foreign nations have not been instructed that their views have been submitted to and endorsed by the American people at the recent election.

It is a singular fact, however, that Canada seemed to feel a deep concern in the election last November. The Canadian Weekly under date of October 2, 1936, took more than a neighborly interest in the Presidential contest. I quote from the Canadian publication to which I have referred:

> The Dominion has this year much at stake in the outcome apart from the interest of a neighborly onlooker. Mr. Roosevelt has cultivated Canada. He has a summer home in the Dominion, and departing from the usage in a Presidential term, he visits it.

Still quoting:

> He initiated, through the Bennett government, the negotiations for a reciprocal pact in trade which ended in agreement. That agreement is of mutual benefit, but it has meant a lot to Canada in particular. Exports to the United States have been going up steadily, and in 8 months the increase is over $30,000,000. Imports are also up, but not to the same degree.
> Now such part of this trade as is attributable to the operation of the reciprocal agreement will go by the board if the Republican Party should win out. That party is definitely committed to repeal of the agreement at the end of its 3-year term if before that it could not neutralize its effects.

Canada having won our election in November 1936, there followed this announcement in Canada's weekly under date of December 11, 1936:

> The president of the Ford Motor Co. of Canada announced that $1,700,000 will be expended on building extensions and machinery at Windsor, Ontario, in the near future. Operations will begin in January, and the enlarged plant should be in full activity within 12 months therefrom.

I believe the trade agreement has softened the feelings of our Canadian friends, and now after the agreement has been in operation they know just how soft we are.

Frederic Hudd, chief Canadian trade commissioner in the United Kingdom, on January 1, 1937, made this report:

> During the year the development of Canada's export trade received the closest attention in many directions. Five new trade treaties were negotiated, namely, with the United States, Poland, Brazil, Uruguay, and Germany. The most notable was with the United States for obvious reasons—contiguity and magnitude of the market.
> The agreement came into operation on January 1, 1936; by the end of June the long-standing adverse balance against Canada was converted into a favorable one by over $32,000,000.

The trade agreement with Canada may have had a gentle, softening effect over there, but it has had a flattening effect over here.

Such evidence as this ought to put the Congress of the United States on inquiry—in behalf of our own welfare. Instead of 40 experts on high salaries working night and day for months to make a case against our domestic interests, such talent and research facilities ought to be utilized in support of American interests. It is no wonder that Canada felt that she had a great stake in the American election. In view of the attitude of this administration toward the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, it is perfectly logical that Canada should favor the ascendency of the party representing her interests and not the American interests.

Canada is in perfect accord with the attitude of this administration toward the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act; and why not? Here is what the Hawley-Smoot Act did, if a report of a Canadian publication voices the Dominion's views. I quote from the Canadian Forum under date of September 1932, which carried an article entitled "Canada and the American Tariff", in which the author points to the effect of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act upon the Canadian farmers:

> This act practically wiped out Canadian export of feeder cattle and of milk and cream to the United States. The farmers of the prairies found cattle a welcome source of cash income in times of poor wheat crops, and the dairy farmers of eastern Quebec and of New Brunswick had built up a profitable business selling to the metropolitan centers along the eastern seaboard of the United States.

Now, our farmers, especially the dairy farmers, were restive and uncertain as to what might happen to their tariff protection during the campaign of 1932, but many of them were reassured when they listened to the seductive assurance of Mr. Roosevelt in Baltimore on the eve of election in 1932 when he said:

> Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I declared that all prosperity in the broader sense springs from the soil. I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farm dollar by making the tariff effective for agriculture and raising the price of farmers' products. I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

The proposed trade agreements did not alarm the dairymen because they had not only the President's assurance but knew, or thought they knew, the attitude and convictions of the Democratic leaders in Congress with reference to the delegation of legislative powers to the President.

They knew that the present distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee would never surrender his legislative powers to the Executive. Was he not on record in these soul-stirring words:

The fathers who formed the Constitution wisely, in my opinion, left to Congress the initiating and enacting of laws raising revenue. The flexible tariff provisions giving the President the power to raise or lower tariff rates to the amount of 50 percent renders nugatory in spirit and practical effect this provision of the Constitution.

Then, true to his profound convictions on the subject of the delegation of power, our distinguished chairman exhorted the House in these stirring words:

My friends, this is too dangerous and alarming to contemplate; with all this power vested in the President of the United States, he becomes a colossus. It is too much power and authority to lodge in any man who ever has been or ever will be President of the United States.

I have quoted from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 17, 1929.

Then, too, was not the stanch farmers' friend from Kentucky on the Ways and Means Committee? His record of fidelity to the legislative functions of Congress had been proclaimed with vigor, zeal, and eloquence. I quote from his remarks:

We do not advocate autocracy and bureaucracy, yet there are men who permit their growth in the name of expediency. * * * The fathers who wrote the Constitution never contemplated the placing of the power to fix rates in the hands of the President.

But, beyond all this, please listen to the views of our former colleague, the present Secretary of State, made in his minority report on the tariff bill of 1930:

The Republican Party would not only retain section 315, the flexible-tariff provisions, but would considerably enlarge and expand it for purposes of broader tariff legislation by the executive department. The President would thereby be enabled to change the whole objects and purposes of the tariff law enacted by Congress. It is clearly unsound, unwise, impracticable, subversive of the plain functions of Congress, and should be speedily repealed.

Again, on May 9, 1932, Secretary Hull, then a Member of the Senate, quoted with approval his own remarks in the House at the time the President was given power to change tariff rates:

I am unalterably opposed to section 315 of the tariff act and demand its speedy repeal. I strongly condemn the proposed course of the Republican Party, which contemplates the enlargement and retention of this provision with such additional authority to the President as would practically vest in him the supreme taxing power of the Nation, contrary to the plainest and most fundamental provisions of the Constitution.

Then listen to his appeal to Congress not to surrender—

A vast and uncontrolled power, larger than had been surrendered by one great coordinate department of government to another since the British House of Commons wrenched the taxing power from an autocratic king.

We are told by the advocates of reduced tariffs that protection destroys external trade. Such is not the theory of our British competitors. I quote from Sir John Barnard Byles, a former distinguished judge of common pleas:

No nation has adopted the theory and protection to the same extent as England; no nation has the same time enjoyed so extensive and lucrative a foreign trade. For centuries the protective policy has been unquestioned and triumphant; for centuries our foreign trade has been steadily augmenting. The strictest protection in the world has coincided with the greatest trade in the world.

Then this distinguished author points out:

Under a strict and jealous system of protection we have seen the rise of Manchester, Birmingham, Sheffield, Leeds, Glasgow, Huddersfield, Bradford, Nottingham, Coventry, Leicester.

This same British advocate makes this statement:

One reason why Canada has not advanced so rapidly as the neighboring districts of the United States is that Canada had no manufactures but the United States had. Canada had none because our manufactures smothered all infant ones. The United States have manufactures because they have protecting duties.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman has held a beautiful mirror for them to look at. Evidently they have had their faces lifted. Who was the surgeon that lifted them? [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of New York. I will leave that for the gentleman to answer.

Again, showing the benefits of protection, the British barrister calls attention to Belgium:

Take, now, a small state, Belgium. In proportion to her area, her manufacturing industry is perhaps greater than that of any other country, not excepting the United Kingdom itself. But in Belgium not only has the protective system long flourished; Belgium is the very paradise of protection.

Such has been the philosophy and the practice of the British Government; yet shrewd diplomacy and subtle foreign propaganda aided and abetted by this administration is gradually accomplishing its disastrous work. Our greatest asset, the best cash market in the world, is to be thrown open to the world.

It took a long time for Canada to realize that only by protection could she hope to stimulate industrial development. Finally, it dawned upon her that with her low labor costs, her natural resources, her cheap power, and exceptional transportation facilities, water and rail, she too, might become an industrial as well as a rich agricultural country. Canada with this end in view placed higher tariff rates on her statute books in September 1930. At the expiration of 5 months a thorough and practical investigation was made by Norman M. MacLeod, for the parliamentary bureau of a foremost Canadian publication. The purpose of the investigation was to ascertain to what extent the tariff had been either beneficial or detrimental to Canada. Personal visits were made to various industries and both employers and employees were interviewed in order to obtain accurate information. It is Canada speaking now—not our State Department. Here is what the Canadian survey showed:

(1) The location in Canada of 20 branch factories of foreign industries involving a capital expenditure of $5,000,000 and employment for more than 2,000 Canadian workers. (The cheapness with which firms from abroad are able to locate here, which is a feature of the foregoing figures which will immediately strike one, is due to the fact that there is no scarcity of idle plants for them to occupy, and that in practically no case are they being required to erect their own buildings.)

(2) Plant-extension programs on the part of 9 existing Canadian industries entailing the spending of $7,045,000, and the employment when completed, of 3,500 more workers.

(3) The establishment of 5 new Canadian industries with expenditure loans totaling $1,600,000 and employment for more than 500.

(4) The reopening of 4 Canadian mills which have been closed for years, with employment for 400 hands.

(5) Increased operations in a host of industries, which cannot be measured in terms of new employment, but have meant full time and overtime in place of part time for thousands of operatives through the country.

(6) More inquiries within 3 months than have been received in the country within the last 3 years from foreign firms interested in locating in Canada.

STOREKEEPERS AND DEPARTMENT-STORE MANAGERS

Storekeepers and department-store managers report that today, as never before, buyers are asking: Is this article made in Canada? If it is not, they ask to see one that is. It is a tribute to Canadian manufacturing efficiency that rarely is it necessary today for a domestic article to lose a sale in comparison with a foreign one on the score of quality.

STEPPED UP PRODUCTION

These are the indirect results of the tariff. But to return for a moment to the direct results already quoted—employment for thousands of additional workers. Is that in itself no inconsiderable achievement for a tariff policy less than 5 months old, without considering the huge gain involved in making full-time out of part-time workers? The importance of this latter phase may be gaged from the fact that a large Quebec industry employing 8,000 hands was working at 51-percent capacity before the tariff changes and stepped its production up to 92 percent, a few weeks after. If the fruits of the new tariff are these, then Canadians are surely justified in maintaining the highest optimism as they ask, What will be its fruits at maturity?

TEXTILE MILLS

Imports of cotton textiles, which in 1926 had totaled $55,859,967—a formidable enough figure in itself for Canadian industry to contend against—kept rising steadily. In 1929, despite the fact that that year recorded the advent of the first really severe reaction in this country, they reached a high total for all time of $61,481,855. Bad times in Canada had not yet commenced to be bad times for exporters to the country; the Bennett government had not yet taken office.

Such, then, was the situation which faced the Bennett government when it framed its tariff policy. It was clearly a challenging outlook. Imports must be curbed; operations must be quickened so that part-time workers might be made full-time; jobs must be increased so that the absolutely unemployed might be absorbed into the industry once more. What has the tariff accomplished so far toward these objects?

The answer is threefold, viz:

(1) It has increased mill operations and enabled companies to engage in the manufacture of new lines hitherto imported into the country.

(2) It has made possible plant extensions.

(3) It has induced firms from abroad to establish branch factories here.

Quick results obtained under Canadian Tariff Act.

Hardly had the ink dried upon the new rates of duty before manufacturing plants were embarked upon a program of extensions unparalleled since the boom years of the war.

It was not that actual business responded at once to the increase. Rather it was that its whole psychology changed. For the first time in years gloom and despondency lifted from the industrial picture, and vigorous optimism resigned in its stead. At last Canadian industry saw before it the change for which it had been waiting.

It was a change which occurred literally overnight, but the basis for it is not difficult to find. The Government has gone the whole distance in affording a protective-tariff policy, and there was little question but that the foreign goods which had been flooding the Canadian markets would now be excluded. What that meant to the Canadian manufacturer a few figures will indicate. To the cotton makers it opened up a potential market, according to last year's import figures, of $32,000,000; to the woolen mills a possible market of $42,600,000; to the silk mills one of $13,000,000; and to the hosiery mills one of $4,800,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman the figures concerning the number of textile machines that have been exported to Canada?

Mr. REED of New York. I have them, but I have not put them in.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman put them in?

Mr. REED of New York. I will. [Reading:]

In industries other than textile the prospective benefits were similar. The manufacturers of electrical apparatus had had to contend with $47,000,000 worth of imported goods in their home market. Agricultural machinery had been flooding the country to an extent of more than $30,000,000 per year, while the total of iron and steel products, excluding agricultural implements but including many articles on which the rates were not changed, was some $210,000,000.

Industry, accordingly, had a reasoned basis for the wave of optimism which surged over it. If statistics meant anything—and if manufacturers in the past had been sincere in their complaints against competition from abroad—there was to be work and prosperity for everybody.

Among the industries which demonstrated by immediate plant extensions the justice with which they had blamed foreign competition for limiting their operations, the Quebec textile industry was foremost. The first company to act was the Canadian Celanese. With a plant here which already employs in excess of a thousand workers, it immediately broke ground for a new $2,000,000 extension, which has since been taking shape steadily until now a new dyeing house and a new weaving unit stand as imposing additions to the company's already impressive group of buildings.

Throughout recent months, when unemployment in Drummondville has been at its worst, upward of 250 otherwise idle men have been kept working busily upon the Celanese extensions. In addition the building-supply trades have had one of the worst years in the past decade alleviated by the development of this $2,000,000 program, for all plant materials, as well as all possible machinery, are being purchased in Canada.

BRANCH PLANT ESTABLISHED IN TORONTO BY READING, PA., COMPANY

Another classic instance of the effect of the tariff is to be found in the Herbert Hosiery Mills, newly established in Canada at Toronto. The parent company operates mills in Reading, Pa., and for years it has been manufacturing low-priced hosiery for one of the large chain-store organizations operating in the United States and Canada. When the emergency tariff was passed, it faced the alternative of losing the Canadian end of this business or of locating a branch factory here. It chose to do the latter. Premises were rented in Toronto, equipped at a cost of some $35,000, and operations commenced. A staff of 100 is being employed to start, with the expectation that the number will be increased to 150 at the height of the company's season. All the labor is Canadian and every worker owes his or her job to the Government's policy of tariff protection.

NEW JOBS FOR CANADIANS

In three branches of the textile industry, the new employment resulting this year from the tariff, providing it is only reasonably effective, will mean a total of 18,000 new jobs. Last year's average wage in the industry, men, women, and learners considered, was a little in excess of $900. On such a basis, this year's disbursement of wages to new employees, not considering the increase which full-time operations will bring to old, will reach a total of more than $16,000,000.

CANADIANS QUOTE LINCOLN

Abraham Lincoln once said: "I know very little about the tariff, but this I do know—that if we buy rails from Europe, then Europe has our money; but if we buy rails in the United States, then we have the rails and we have the money, too." Never has the case for protection been better stated.

It has taken the Canadian people many years to learn the economic lesson which Lincoln so clearly impressed. Now, however, they are learning it. In last September's tariff legislation they served notice on the Canadian dollar that its traveling days were, if not over, at least to be circumscribed. No longer was it to be dispatched lightly to Japan, the United States, and Czechoslovakia on the philanthropic mission of remunerating workers there while Canadian factory hands walked the streets idle.

What has been the result? Lincoln could have foretold it. Since the Canadian dollar is no longer to be sent to foreign industry, foreign industry is coming here to get it, and it is going to employ Canadian labor in the process. The past few months have witnessed almost a mass movement of plants to Canada from the United States and Great Britain. They have brought with them a new purchasing power for Canadian raw materials and new opportunities for the exercise of Canadian brains, technical skill, and brawn.

Dream of Canada's Trade No Longer Goes to United States—$2,000,000 in Electrical Equipment Business Diverted to Canadian Firms—$2,000,000 Campbell Soup Plant Secured—Tariff Works Despite Depression.

The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee would have the membership of this House believe that the last election was a mandate for the continuation of trade agreements. Long ago a great Virginian, a distinguished Democrat, in his monumental work on Constitutional Law, predicted with accuracy the circumstances and conditions that would produce the results which the Democratic Party obtained at the polls on the 3d of last November. I quote the words of Hon. Henry St. George Tucker:

When government advertises itself as the munificent almoner of indefinite charities, as the machine through whose grind benefits may be conferred on some at the expense of all and enterprise be fostered or destroyed at will, contestants for the prize of its power will spread their nets to catch the most powerful and combine the most influential until extravagance, plunder, and corruption will fill the land.

Elections, being the game for great stakes, will be controlled by political gamblers; money, not morality, will rule its results; and the Democratic patriarcha will become the paternal plutocrat of the country.

[Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, just a word to the older Members on the Republican side of the House and members of this Committee.

A lowered mental or physical vigor leads men to avoid an examination of complicated and changed conditions. Little by little, new facts become blurred through old glasses, fitted, as it were, for the needs of another generation; older men, assuming that the scene is the same as it was in the past, cease to explore or inquire into the present or the future.

I trust you recognize the quotation. Mr. Chairman, a splendid mirror has been held up by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] yesterday, and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] this afternoon, but the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House do not recognize themselves, although the mirror is a perfect one. These gentlemen were quoted exactly as to what they said at a former time, and they presumably meant it then. Now they look into the mirror, but they do not recognize themselves, and—as I had occasion to say a few moments ago—apparently their faces have been lifted by some marvelous physician. They are trying to excuse themselves as they now appear in that mirror for ever having looked like the picture presented. We can still look into the glass and acknowledge the reflection as a true one.

When a Republican newspaper or commentator refers to anything that our friends on the Democratic side do not like, they immediately proclaim that it is the ravings of a subsidized press. I take this opportunity to call to your attention something that the most important Democratic newspaper in the country recently stated. I quote from the New York Sun. Is this paper subsidized, and, if so, by supporters of which party?

Speakers at the national foreign-trade convention in Chicago this week have praised the New Deal's trade-treaty program. They have had a great deal to say about the stimulation of world trade, about the need for recovering America's foreign markets, about the stabilization of currencies. They have spoken as though the Hull trade agreements have been an unmitigated boon to this Nation. But the evidence is heavily against such a conclusion. Of all the experiments since 1933, the tariff-cutting trade treaties of the administration have been one of the most conspicuous failures. Fourteen treaties have been signed and hundreds of tariff rates have been slashed to let in more foreign goods that compete with goods made here.

In these trade treaties every cut in the tariff reduces rates for all countries, not only for the country signing each agreement. Reducing the tariff on rayon fabrics in the treaty with France allows Japan or any other country to send rayon goods here at the lower rate. The result is that imports have mounted steadily, and in the first 9 months of 1936 have exceeded our exports by $63,000,000. For the first year since 1893, the United States is buying more goods from abroad than it sells abroad. While exports to some countries have risen, as in trade with Canada, imports have risen much more rapidly. Imports from Canada since the trade treaty went into effect have shown an increase 60 percent greater than the increase in exports to that country. Agricultural and manufactured goods from other lands continue to threaten the employment of American farmers and factory workers. Last February, a trade pact with Switzerland went into effect, but in the first 8 months of the year exports to Switzerland declined while imports rose nearly $2,000,000. This is hardly the "Yankee trading" for which Secretary Hull planned.

And now, at the last moment, when arguments are presented, it is claimed that they are picayunish, and the cloak of peace is wrapped around the trade agreements that are so rapidly going sour. Father Coughlin talked finance under the auspices of religion. It did appear to be persuasive even then. I say to you that it may now be the cloak of peace, but it may end in a shroud. These are economic conditions that cannot be beclouded by peace platitudes. When the multitude, about which we talk so much, realizes what these trade agreements will have brought about in the near future, when they cause the loss of their jobs and foreign goods are being purchased in preference to our own, because cheaper, another force—public opinion—will reverse your present delightful, pleasing political situation. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a copy of resolutions adopted by the American National Livestock Association at its meeting held at El Paso, Tex., January 12–14, 1937. Resolution no. 2 reads as follows:

Whereas the reduction in the tariff on cattle in the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement and the extension of the same reduction to imports from Mexico has been one of the major factors in causing a sharp decline in cattle prices, as a careful examination of official Government market reports clearly indicate; and

Whereas the tariff on agricultural products has been reduced to increase the export of industrial products; and

Whereas these imports have been received in such manner as to effect a decline out of all proportion to the actual numbers involved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge that the Reciprocal Trade Act be repealed or that all treaties negotiated under it be subject to ratification by a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That we request that until the act is repealed or the Canadian agreement is nullified or expires the imports of cattle under this agreement should be placed on a weekly or monthly quota for 1937, in order to prevent dumping of large numbers on our markets in a short period, as was done in the spring of 1936.

Yesterday the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] was good enough to permit me to interrupt him for a moment while he was speaking on this question to call his attention and that of the House to the situation which existed last winter and early spring; that is, the winter and spring of 1936. The quota doors were opened on January 1, 1936, and under the trade agreement something like 170,000 to 190,000 head of cattle could then be brought in from that moment on at reduced tariff rates. I am somewhat familiar with the effect of that action upon the Buffalo market, and through acquaintances in the business I have learned something of its effect in the St. Paul market, both of which markets are close to the Canadian line, and to both of which markets Canadian cattle may be shipped over a short rail route.

Cattle came in in swarms in the late winter and spring. The word "swarms" is a curious word, perhaps, to use in connection with cattle. Both of those markets are small markets as compared with Kansas City and Chicago. Roughly, 30 or 40 additional cars of cattle on a Monday morning at the Buffalo market, over and above the usual receipts, has a most demoralizing effect upon the whole market. I have read the testimony given by Mr. Sayre before the committee. I certainly would not mean to disparage his motives, but I suggest that in all probability Mr. Sayre has never worked on a cattle market and has never visited cattle markets or done business with them frequently and over a period of years, else he would not reach the conclusion, and so advise the committee, that the arrival of those Canadian cattle classed as "mediums" had little effect, if any, on the price of American cattle classed as "prime steers." Of course, anyone who has operated in a cattle market knows that when a great surplus of one class of cattle suddenly arrives its effect is not only to reduce the price on a similar class already there, but to reduce prices on all classes of cattle. The effect is utterly demoralizing. Largely for that reason the price of American cattle in the stockyards at Buffalo and St. Paul, and somewhat in Chicago, during the first 5 or 6 months of 1936, when the Canadians were practically dumping their whole quota, dropped $3 per hundred pounds. As I tried to say in a very brief statement yesterday, many an American feeder took a terrible licking. That is the fact, and you can go to the Buffalo or St. Paul yards and talk with commission men and cattle feeders who do business there and you will find that statement corroborated.

You will notice that the American National Live Stock Association has noted that very point, and has urged in this resolution that, if this quota business is to continue, steps be taken to prevent the dumping of the entire quota in a short period of time; that it be distributed throughout the year, so that in no particular week or particular month shall one of the American markets be flooded and thus demoralized. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the remarks to be made by me are more or less unnecessary in view of the very capable and complete manner in which the distinguished chairman of our committee [Mr. DOUGHTON] covered this subject at the opening of the debate yesterday, and likewise other phases of the subject which have been covered very carefully and completely by other eminent members of the committee. But by virtue of the fact that there has been so much attention drawn to the effect of reciprocal-trade agreements on agriculture and in view of the fact that I represent an agricultural and farming district in a State of this Union that produces more of the major agricultural products of this country, with the exception of cotton and tobacco, than almost any other State in the Union, I feel under obligation to make a few remarks with reference to the manner in which these reciprocal-trade agreements have really affected the farmers and the agricultural population of this country.

After all is said and done, much of the debate on both sides of the aisle is a little beside the point, when we view the improvement in the business condition of this country, which has seen an increase from $39,000,000,000 in national income in 1932 to $60,000,000,000 in 1936. But, despite that fact, perhaps it is proper that we go into some of the details of this proposition, because throughout the debate we have been challenged from time to time with reference to the fact that we are afraid to meet or cope with the details and the individual facts in connection with the respective agreements and products affected by them.

Of course, those of us in the farming business realize that America is primarily a surplus-producing country with reference to major agricultural products. The opposition in the campaign just passed and in the debate that they are concluding today, and in the debates that have occurred upon other agricultural bills which have been before this House, have taken the inconsistent position that America, being a surplus-producing country, can absolutely refuse to carry on trade relations with other nations of the world in order to absorb those surpluses, and, at the same time, refuse to limit the production of those surplus products in this country, and still be prosperous. That position is certainly profoundly inconsistent. It is difficult to conceive of such a national program, such a negative national program, as has been offered to this country by the minority as a result of taking such a position.

I believe it is a good thought to keep in mind, as a foundation for the argument on reciprocal-trade agreements, as an argument in connection with the soil-erosion control program or any other similar legislation that deals with agriculture.

The old saying is that you cannot have your cake and eat it, too. That is exactly what the opposition has been trying to do in the past few years. We had a very vivid illustration of what happened to the agriculture of this country under the highest protective tariff in the history of the United States, the Hawley-Smoot bill. At the conclusion of that period in 1932, and during that campaign, the opposition were presumptuous enough to propose that perhaps one of the remedies for the situation was to raise the tariffs on agricultural products.

Mr. Chairman, we might take wheat as an example. A tariff could be put on wheat, a tariff could be put on almost any surplus agricultural product in this country of $10 a bushel, or $10 a pound, or at any other proportionate rate, and it would have no effect upon the American price; because, after all is said and done, living in a nation where surplus agricultural products are produced we must keep in mind the fact that they must either be marketed in some other country or be permitted to pile up in America and destroy the price structure. If in the process of refusing to market them abroad and attempting to monopolize the American market we drive down the price of agricultural products, as we did in 1932, to ruinous levels, we cannot possibly expect prosperity for American farmers.

I said in the campaign, and it has already been said in this debate, that if Iowa producers, who produce more corn than the farmers of any other State in the Union, want to stop the importation of Argentine corn, which is an infinitesimal item as compared with the total national production of the product, there is a way to do it. From some of the conversations and speeches I heard in that campaign I was prompted to think that when I got up in the morning I would go out on my farm and have to wade in Argentine corn clear up to my knees. In reality, however, importations of Argentine corn amount to only a fraction of a percent. Now, the best and the most effective way that American farmers could stop that importation of Argentine corn would obviously be to put the price of the product down to 10 cents a bushel, where it was in 1932 under the highest protective tariff America ever had, and then no one would be troubled with importations of Argentine corn—a very simple remedy, and evidently the minority would like to adopt it.

I would remind you that we have also heard much about the United States being a creditor nation and about the importance and the necessity of collecting the debts that are owed to the United States Government. Now, if the opposition are willing to take the position that all foreign debts to the United States ought to be canceled, then, of course, they have a right to continue complaining about increases in imports into the United States. If, however, they take the position that they ought to be paid, then certainly they must not under any possibility criticize the United States Government as a creditor nation in attempting to collect those debts in the form of a balance of trade about which they have been talking on the floor of this Congress through much of this debate. [Applause.]

A creditor nation like the United States must buy in order that debtor nations may discharge their obligations in goods—in final analysis the only means of payment.

This truism is as incontrovertible now as it was in the days when the gold standard was functioning, with exchanges stable, foreign investment carried on in orderly fashion, and payments between countries adjusted by relatively small gold shipments. Except to a limited extent, gold movements today no longer reflect current transactions, but result from a shifting of capital. That explains why during the last few years of negligible favorable trade balances, which I assume our opponents desire to court, we have nevertheless received on net balance stupendous amounts of gold—$1,739,000,000 in 1935 and $1,117,000,000 in 1936.

We should have learned by this time that we cannot, year in and year out, sell more than we buy and demand large cash payments to cover the difference. Sooner or later we would bankrupt our debtors who are not already in that condition.

The opposition must recognize this obvious economic fact, and I want to remind them in this connection also that one of the reasons for the increase in the importation of agricultural products, as compared to the percentage of exports of American products as a whole, is due in large part to the fact that the United States was faced with two national droughts in the last 4 years, during which we have been operating under reciprocal-trade treaties; and, obviously, that would naturally reduce the exports of agricultural products and increase the imports. In fact, the first reduction of a tariff rate by the President was the removal of the duty from hay for the benefit of farmers suffering from the drought. When we have more things to sell, obviously we will have a better opportunity to increase the percentage of our agricultural exports abroad, and it will follow that agricultural imports will decrease unless farm commodity prices continue to go up. If they do, there may be some imports in certain fields, but higher prices are what we are seeking. But there are some details with reference to the matter of agricultural imports to which I want to call your attention.

I want to remind the leaders in the excessively high protective tariff camp that for the 10-year average of the fiscal years 1925 to 1934, during the majority of which we had in effect the Smoot-Hawley bill, or similar high protective tariff measures, the average value of the total agricultural imports that came into this country per year was $1,660,252,000, while for the fiscal year 1935, when we began our reciprocal trade relations program in earnest, the value of the total agricultural imports was $970,853,000, or a reduction of over $689,000,000.

They are a bit inconsistent when they take the position they have in this debate with reference to agricultural imports and the extent to which they have increased. They have not yet explained the reason for agricultural imports under their own program. I want to remind you that in 1935 the agricultural income in the United States was $8,009,000,000, and in 1936 it will be about $9,050,000,000 under a program of reciprocal-trade agreements. Benefit payments, a factor that might be brought into the debate by the opposition, amounted to less than $500,000,000 in each of those 2 years.

I would also remind the opposition in this debate that receipts from the sale of farm production, particularly as shown by the report of the Department of Agriculture, show a steady increase during 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 over 1932.

I also want to discuss briefly now the matter of the Canadian agreement, about which we have heard so much, especially with reference to cattle. It so happens that I am in the business of feeding and raising livestock on an Iowa farm, and no one is any more personally interested in this than I. I should like to remind the House with reference to cattle that in the first 6 months of 1933, 460 head of Canadian cattle came across the border. Farm income from cattle for that period was $175,000,000. For the first 6 months of 1936, 158,000 head of Canadian cattle came in. During this period of 1936 income from cattle was $382,000,000. Which of these conditions do American cattle producers prefer? I want to say to the producers of cattle—and I am one of them—I want to say to the producers of dairy products—and I help produce dairy products—that you cannot take one single agricultural industry—and I might include even the matter of lumber and related agricultural products—and segregate and set aside any one separate and distinct unit and say, "Thou shalt prosper to the exclusion of all others."

That cannot be done under a sound philosophy of economics in the United States. You have got to see American agriculture as a whole advanced, and the figures I have quoted with reference to national income of the United States, which apply in proportion to American farmers, indicate that is exactly what has happened since the adoption of a program of reciprocal-trade agreements.

To go on with the matter of cattle, about which some people are so concerned, let us take the years 1927, 1928, and 1929. Under the administration of the Republican Party and under the flag of a high tariff I find that in 1927 we imported into the United States 283,486 head; in 1928, 277,986 head; and in 1929, 247,876 head. This is from Canada alone. We had total imports in those years ranging all the way from 436,000 head to 523,000 head. If it is a good thing to keep cattle out of America now, why in the name of common sense was it not a good thing to keep cattle out of the United States under the administration of Herbert Hoover? [Applause.]

I should like to have the leadership of the minority answer that question during the course of this debate. The income of farmers from principal livestock and livestock products increased in the following amounts from 1932. In that year it was $2,591,334,000; in 1933 it was $2,627,012,000; in 1934 it was $2,992,273,000; in 1935 it was $3,796,896,000. In 10 months of 1935 it was $3,012,000,000, as compared to $3,484,000,000 in 10 corresponding months of 1936.

I would remind you of something else in connection with the importation of cattle from Canada.

The price in the American markets of middle-grade steers, into which grade the bulk of the slaughtered cattle from Canada fall, held up better under the heavy domestic marketings this year than did the prices of higher grade steers, of which the imports were very light, as will be borne out by an examination of market reports for the period.

It so happens that I am in the cattle market at South Omaha quite frequently when I am in Iowa, and I have some knowledge also with reference to what happens to cattle markets under all kinds of circumstances. The duty reduction on calves weighing under 175 pounds, which was also 1 cent a pound, was limited to one-fourth of 1 percent of the total domestic slaughterings, as the gentleman from Kentucky brought out yesterday. The imports from Canada during the first half of the year of our agreement amounted to 34,000 head valued at some $480,000. No figures are available for 1935. But we must remember in connection with the cattle imports that after all is said and done, a considerable portion of the imports that have been coming into this country, not only in the field of cattle but in the field of every other agricultural enterprise, has incorporated a certain percentage of importations that were never protected under the Hawley-Smoot bill, and, in the second instance, upon which there has been no reduction of duty rates whatever under the reciprocal-trade agreements.

In connection with the market price of cattle I should also like to deal very briefly with the market price of pork and the matter of hogs as they are affected by reciprocal-trade agreements. I think anyone who is informed upon the matter of livestock markets will admit that the price of pork has a tremendous bearing upon the price of beef. They are very closely related on all of the major livestock markets of this country and they have a strange relationship in the price levels that you see in the Department of Agriculture charts which indicate the rise and fall of the prices of the two commodities. The exportation of pork products from the United States under the Hawley-Smoot Act descended to a negligible amount. Under the treaty with Cuba the most prominent single product involved was hog lard, and despite what was said with reference to the importation of other products the most prominent single item as far as the welfare of farmers as a whole is concerned was hog lard on which the most important Cuban market had declined under increasing duties and reduced purchasing power to nearly one-tenth of its former value.

Under the agreement Cuba made a drastic cut in the lard duty, and there followed an immediate recovery in the United States exports of lard to Cuba with shipments during the first agreement practically doubling in quantity from 17,000,000 to 33,000,000 pounds, and tripling in value from one and one-tenth million dollars to three and three-tenths million dollars. This large increase took place despite a decline of about 40 percent in hog lard production in the United States resulting from the drought of 1934 and to which I referred earlier in my remarks, and at a time when our total lard exports had declined nearly 70 percent. While the 1934–35 level was not fully sustained during 1935–36, the second agreement year, partly due to the low level of domestic production and considerably higher export prices in the United States, which we most certainly desired, the shipments during the latter period were one and seven-tenths million dollars above the preagreement level. There was a considerable amount of deferred purchasing awaiting a further reduction in the Cuban Treaty and removal of the consumption tax, effective September 3, 1936, for reports from Habana indicate exceptionally large importations during the period immediately following.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, because I want to deal briefly with the matter of Cheddar cheese, in which some of the gentlemen on the other side are interested. They are very greatly concerned about the condition of dairy products and the effect upon dairy producers of reciprocal-trade treaties. There has been some criticism of the fact that Cheddar cheese has suffered.

Let us see how much Cheddar cheese has suffered. May I remind you that in 1932 the opposition cannot deny the fact that they had 100 percent of the American markets under their own program, and they produced $32,000,000 gross in Cheddar cheese at an average price of 10 cents per pound. What happened in 1936, about which they are complaining so bitterly in the House at the present time? They claim they have only about 96 to 98 percent of the American markets, and maybe they do not have any more than 96 to 98 percent of the American markets. I might even admit that; but I want to remind them that in 11 months—not 12—they had a national income for Cheddar cheese of $71,000,000, as compared with $32,000,000, at an increase in price per pound from 10 cents to 15.3 cents per pound. Is that affecting adversely the dairy producers of the United States, when a condition like that prevails following the adoption of a program of reciprocal-trade agreements?

May I say that similar figures are available for the importation of cream, and I trust someone who follows me will deal with that subject.

When we examine the record, it is obvious that we have seen a widespread improvement of American agriculture as a whole, when you look at it as a body, not as a segregated unit here, there, or somewhere else, over what it was in the good old days of the Hawley-Smoot protection that brought hundreds of thousands of farmers to the brink of bankruptcy and ruined as many more. When you look at the situation from the standpoint of national income and national purchasing power, you have before you the spectacle of a splendid improvement for American farmers, with promise of far greater things in the immediate future. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH].

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain brief charts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, immediately following the World War practically all of the leading nations of the world, including the United States, developed strong nationalistic tendencies. Each nation striving to become self-sufficient. This meant, of course, a great falling off or slump in world trade.

Unfortunately for this country, this unhappy condition was aggravated by the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff in 1930, providing the highest tariff rates in the history of our country. Our leading world customers, including Canada, France, and England, immediately retaliated by enacting prohibitive tariff legislation. As a result, world trade diminished almost to the vanishing point.

Frequently someone says that we should find world markets for our surplus commodities, and should stop the importation of goods into this country which we can produce at home. Some gentleman said on the floor recently that the United States was about to become an exporting nation. Anyone who has studied the question knows that it must also become an importing nation when it becomes an exporting one. We are now, in fact, both an importing and exporting nation. It should be borne in mind that our country can sell in the world markets an amount of goods equal to that purchased by us from other countries, and no more. This is fundamental. The person who attempts to discuss any question involving world trade, without understanding and recognizing this fact, is, of course, completely lost.

Of course, it can be stimulated for a little while, as was done by a former administration, by lending money to foreign countries with which to purchase our products. The matter of travelers and tourists and some other small items enter into this, but, as a general, fundamental proposition, no nation can sell in the world markets more goods than that nation buys from the world markets.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the same thing applies to individuals?

Mr. SOUTH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. There has to be a balance of trade between individuals as well as countries?

Mr. SOUTH. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Brookings Institution, a nonpartisan, endowed body, recently made a study, and in their report of Income and Economic Progress, on page 50, said:

> Trade, whether domestic or foreign, is trade—involving an exchange of certain kinds of goods for other kinds of goods. While international trade is conducted through the medium of foreign exchange operations rather than by direct barter, the aggregate value of the goods and services exported by the people of the United States must nevertheless equal the aggregate value of the goods and services imported from abroad. If we were to furnish more goods and services to foreigners than they were furnishing to us, we should simply be making them a present of the excess. Credit aside, if we are to increase our exports of certain types of products, we must be able to increase our consumption of imported commodities; otherwise foreigners would not have the means with which to increase their purchases in our markets.

TEXAS PROFITS MOST

Texas should be, and is, especially interested in this legislation. Our State handles a larger volume of export tonnage than does any other State in the Union. Ninety percent of Texas cotton is exported. In 1929 this amounted to $426,713,000. In that year we exported $126,000,000 worth of petroleum and petroleum products, $28,000,000 worth of wheat, $16,000,000 worth of sulphur, our total exports amounting to $657,560,000. The foreign trade of the United States in 1929 was valued at $9,600,000,000. In 1932, after the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff and before the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, the foreign commerce of the Nation had shrunk to less than $3,000,000,000 and the value of Texas products entering directly into foreign markets was only $297,651,000. Our cotton exports had been reduced more than 50 percent; our petroleum exports had declined 60 percent; our wheat exports had declined more than 70 percent; and so forth.

It would be fine if we could sell all of our surplus commodities at a good price and refuse to buy anything from abroad that we could produce at home. Unfortunately, this cannot be done. If we do not permit Canada, France, Japan, Belgium, and other foreign countries to sell us some of their surplus commodities, these countries will not and cannot buy our surplus cotton, petroleum, sulphur, pork, and so forth.

CANADIAN AGREEMENT

A great deal has been said about the Canadian trade agreement. I am particularly interested in this agreement because it involves the importation of some 220,000 cattle, and I represent one of the greatest cattle-producing districts in the entire United States. I am engaged in cattle raising myself on a small scale. Certainly I would oppose any agreement which would be unfair to the cattle producers of this country. Let us examine this particular agreement. Under its terms the duty on cattle weighing above 700 pounds, not to exceed 156,000 head, is reduced 1 cent per pound. The duty on calves, and very small calves at that, weighing less than 175 pounds, has been reduced 1 cent also, but not to exceed 52,000 head, and 20,000 milk cows.

During the campaign particularly a great deal of misinformation was spread throughout the country regarding this agreement. It was contended by some that not only could Canada send into this country the number stated above, but that Mexico and all other "favored nation" countries could send in an unlimited number of cattle at this reduced rate of duty. Such is not the case. When this number has been reached by imports from Canada, Mexico, and all other countries, then the quota has been filled and all cattle coming in, from whatever country, must pay the regular duty or tariff.

Strange as it may seem, during those years when imports of cattle were heaviest into this country our prices were the best.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is not that what brings imports into this country?

Mr. SOUTH. Of course.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is, when you have a real price for the commodity or the product?

Mr. SOUTH. That is right.

As shown in the above table, 427,325 head were imported from Mexico and Canada in 1927, and yet the average price per hundredweight of beef steers in Chicago for that year was $11.36, but in 1923, when only 148,934 cattle were imported from these countries, the average price of beef steers in Chicago was $9.40, and again in 1928, when 516,981 head were imported from Canada and Mexico, the average price of beef steers on the Chicago market was $13.91 per hundredweight. Mark you, the year when the greatest number of cattle came into this country from Mexico and Canada, more than one-half million head, and more than twice the total number which can come in under the Canadian agreement, from all countries, the price was the highest we have ever enjoyed. Compare that with 1933, when only 63,329 head came in from both countries, when the average price of beef steers in Chicago was $5.42 per hundredweight. No well-informed person can say, therefore, that the importation of a few thousand cattle has ever, or can, demoralize domestic prices. Neither does a high tariff always mean a high price. In February 1929, before the Smoot-Hawley Act, prime beef steers on the Chicago market were selling at $11.92, while in February 1932, after the high tariff had been in operation for more than 1 year, these same steers on this same market were selling at $4.80 per hundred. It should be noted also, that whereas we granted concessions on 20 agricultural products in our agreement with Canada, we were given concessions on 125 agricultural and horticultural products. In 1935, 364,000 head of cattle were imported from Mexico and Canada, paying the full duty, and most of the cattle that came in during 1936, both quota and nonquota, would have come in had our reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada not been in force.

Between January 1 and August 1, 1936, quota imports of cattle of all of the three classes totaled 193,402 head, of which 88½ percent came from Canada, while imports of nonquota cattle, 175 to 700 pounds, upon which the duty remained unchanged, coming in from Mexico, amounted to about 113,000. During this same period only approximately 26,500 quota cattle, about which we have heard so much, came in from Mexico. In other words, the quota cattle from Mexico during this period was less than one-fourth the nonquota cattle.

In 13 of the 14 completed reciprocal-trade agreements, including Canada, concessions of one kind or another have been granted us from foreign countries, on packing-house products. From 1927 to 1930 our average annual exports of packing-house products amounted to $183,000,000. In 1932 this had fallen to $19,000,000. Should we have made no effort to improve this situation, which is so vital to our stock raisers? Did this decrease in exports of livestock products affect them adversely? Most assuredly it did, and it goes without saying that our exports have been greatly stimulated by reason of the improved world-trade markets, which have resulted from the reciprocal-trade agreements.

PRODUCTS OF FARM AND RANCH DISCRIMINATED AGAINST IN FORMER TARIFF SCHEDULES

I wish to call your attention to the fact that the agricultural industry throughout this country, which includes the livestock industry, has been discriminated against almost since the beginning of our Government. The people of the South and of the West are not free-traders at heart. We were pauperized by having to buy in a protected market and sell in an unprotected market. We wanted one of two things. We either wanted to sell in a protected market or buy in an unprotected market. We were entitled to this. I am not a free-trader, Mr. Hull is not a free-trader, the President is not a free-trader; but we are demanding, and we who are from agricultural districts have the right to demand, equal treatment. If we are going to protect the man who makes watches, automobiles, furniture, and shoes, why not protect the man who raises cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, cotton, corn, and other agricultural products?

We are asking for nothing more than this. No industry, perhaps, profits more than the livestock industry by reason of increased purchasing power and higher standards of living on the part of laborers, farmers, and, in fact, our entire population. These reciprocal-trade agreements have done much to bring about this improved condition, and are indeed an important part of the President's recovery program, and he so regards them, as shown by the following letter which he wrote Chairman DOUGHTON a few days ago:

LETTER SENT BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TO REPRESENTATIVE ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WITH REGARD TO THE RESOLUTION (H. J. RES. 96) INTRODUCED BY MR. DOUGHTON TO EXTEND THE TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT FOR A FURTHER PERIOD OF 3 YEARS

JANUARY 14, 1937.

The Honorable ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: By the act of June 12, 1934 (Public, No. 316 of the 73d Cong.), the Congress authorized the Executive to enter into foreign-trade agreements for the purpose of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States. This authority was conferred for a period of 3 years. I am very happy to learn that you have introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution (H. J. Res. 96), providing for an extension of this authority for a further period of 3 years. Such an extension is highly desirable in the interests of our Nation.

At the time of the original enactment, the world was moving in the direction of a progressive destruction of international commerce. Trade barriers had risen to unprecedented heights, and exclusive preferential arrangements were supplanting the rule of equal treatment in commercial relations. As a result of enhanced obstructions to trade and of increasing adverse discrimination on the part of other nations, our foreign trade had suffered an even more drastic decline than the catastrophic fall in world trade as a whole.

If our agricultural and industrial interests, which had been severely injured by the contraction of their foreign markets, were to regain their deserved place in the international trade of the world and to expand foreign outlets for their products, it was necessary for our Government in a time of such emergency to be in a position to bargain with other governments by means of energetic and decisive negotiations. The executive branches of virtually all other important trading countries already possessed power to act promptly. By the act of June 12, 1934, the Congress placed a similar authority in my hands.

Through the exercise of that authority, foreign trade agreements have been concluded with 15 nations. Improved opportunities for our trade have been secured in such important markets as those of Canada, Cuba, Brazil, France, Belgium, The Netherlands, Switzerland, and Sweden. Through our policy of demanding and granting equality of treatment we have obtained removal of discriminations where they existed in the trade-agreement countries and guaranties of equal treatment in the future. At the same time our policy has served to reduce discriminatory practices in many other countries.

In the process of obtaining improvement in our export position the interests of our producers in the domestic market have been scrupulously safeguarded. This was made possible by painstaking effort on the part of the Government agencies concerned with the negotiation of trade agreements and by the helpful cooperation of the business community and the general public in making known to the Government their views and desires in the matter and in supplying valuable pertinent information.

Our vigorous initiative in the field of liberalization of commercial policies has been an important factor in arresting the world trend toward national economic isolation, which seemed almost irresistible 3 years ago. Striking evidence of this is furnished by the actions of individual countries and by the discussions and recommendations of such international gatherings as the recent Buenos Aires Conference.

But while accomplishment has been substantial and gratifying, the task is by no means completed. In international trade relations emergency conditions still exist. Barriers operating against our trade are still excessive. Their reduction continues to be an essential requirement of a full and balanced economic recovery for our country. In the period which lies immediately ahead our ability to act swiftly and effectively in the field of commercial policy will be indispensable, if the present favorable and promising trend toward a normalization and expansion of international trade, upon a friendly and constructive basis of fair dealing and equal treatment, is to go forward.

"The development of liberalized trade practices has another effect, which transcends in importance even the material benefits conferred by trade improvement." Economic strife, resulting from inordinate or discriminatory trade barriers, is one of the most fruitful sources of political animosity and military conflicts. A policy designed to reduce excessive trade barriers and to establish equality of trade rights is a powerful instrument of economic appeasement and stability. It thus serves to strengthen the foundations of world peace.

In the present unfortunate state of world affairs we dare not, in justice to ourselves, relax our effort, or abate the vigor of our leadership, in a world-wide movement for durable peace through economic prosperity.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN], in his effort to show the beneficial effect of the reciprocal-trade agreements as they pertain to agricultural exports to Cuba, very adroitly refrained from making any mention of the trend of exports to Cuba during the second year under the treaty.

During this period lard exports dropped from 32,600,000 pounds in the previous year to 23,400,000 pounds. Pork exports dropped from 10,600,000 to 5,100,000 pounds.

Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that the increase in our exports to Cuba in 1936 over the period before the agreement amount to about 1 percent of our production. Why did not the gentleman give the available figures for 1936?

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Not now. The gentleman would not yield to Members who wished to interrogate him.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. THURSTON. I have here a resolution adopted by the American National Live Stock Association in annual convention at El Paso, Tex., January 12, 1937. It reads as follows:

Whereas the reduction in the tariff on cattle in the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement and the extension of the same reduction to imports from Mexico has been one of the major factors in causing a sharp decline in cattle prices, as a careful examination of official Government market reports clearly indicates; and

Whereas the tariff on agricultural products has been reduced to increase the export of industrial products; and

Whereas these imports have been received in such manner as to effect a decline out of all proportion to the actual numbers involved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge that the Reciprocal Trade Act be repealed, or that all treaties negotiated under it be subject to ratification by a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That we request that until the act is repealed or the Canadian agreement is nullified or expires, the imports of cattle under this agreement should be placed on a weekly or monthly quota for 1937 in order to prevent dumping of large numbers on our markets in a short period as was done in the spring of 1936.

Mr. KNUTSON. What date was that?

Mr. THURSTON. About 2 weeks ago.

Mr. KNUTSON. Now, this resolution was drafted by cattlemen who are not drawing $10,000 a year as Members of Congress, or the Secretary of State, who draws $15,000 yearly, and they know just as much about it as the United States Chamber of Commerce or congressional agriculturists. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a table of figures.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, realizing that if this bill is enacted into law, it will be in operation for a period of 3 years, I am compelled to heed the advice of the matrimonial minister, "Speak now, or forever hold your peace." If I wish to speak, it must be now, for I will not have another chance to express myself on this very important piece of legislation.

American industries demand and must have protection against foreign competition, which I feel they are not getting at the present time. At the outset I want it understood that I am tremendously interested in the problem confronting some of the industries of this country, because I know the threat that is hanging over the manufacturers in many of the Massachusetts communities that I have the honor to represent. I have been the recipient of personal calls and many letters of complaint from these producers about the continual flow of foreign goods into our markets from abroad, particularly from Japan, and they have beseeched me to try in every way possible to minimize this competition. To place the industries of my home State at further disadvantage would mean their complete collapse, and would affect very seriously the communities in which they are operating. Massachusetts, as a result of its industrial decline, has, with the exception of the drought States, suffered as much, if not more, during the last 15 years as any State in the Union. Contrary to the opinion of some people, there has been no substantial improvement in industrial activity and employment there in the last 2 years. Being an industrial State, we must depend chiefly on the industries to get along. It is estimated that 90 percent of the wealth of Massachusetts is created by the great variety of industrial activities within our border. The employment increase in 1935 over the preceding year was hardly more than 3½ percent, while the increase in 1936 over 1935 was but 4 percent. I mention that at this time because the figures show that we are still 37 percent below our employment figures of 15 years ago, and they further show that the wages in the same period have dropped nearly 50 percent. We have a long way to go before we can say that we have reached full recovery in Massachusetts.

We are now considering whether or not to extend the Trade Agreement Act in its present form, and you must know, in weighing my words, that I am in full accord with the general principles of reciprocity, understanding it to mean the exchange of mutually beneficial tariff concessions between nations. Protection and reciprocity can go hand in hand when considering trade pacts with any countries of the world. Consideration must be given to the difference in cost of production in this country and the cost of production in those countries which wish to compete with us. The tariff adjustment must be the difference between the two with an allowance for a reasonable profit to the American producer. I am not in favor of an excessively high tariff law. That is not necessary or advisable and should not be tolerated, but the businessmen in this country should be given a fair opportunity of meeting foreign competition, especially from those countries that have low wage scales and inferior standards of living.

That our manufacturers are not being given that opportunity is illustrated no more graphically than by the fact that at this very moment American industrial leaders, representing the great textile industries of this country, are in Japan endeavoring to arrange for an agreement with the officials of that country to minimize, as much as possible, the flood of exports of cotton goods to the United States. This, it seems to me, should be the duty of the administration here in Washington and not that of our producers, but the administration, apparently, is unwilling, for some reason or other, to intervene. If we are to have as weak a foreign policy as that, I do not feel that I could approve the enlargement of administration responsibility in reciprocal matters.

President McKinley, in his inaugural address, in words that we should remember, said:

The end in view always to be the opening up of new markets for the protection of our country and granting the concessions to the products of other lands that we need and cannot produce ourselves, and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people but tend to increase their employment.

When we consider that we here in the United States consumed in the peak days over 90 percent of our total production, we must keep in mind that after all the American market is the one that we must safeguard for the products of this land.

Those who will be in charge of the negotiations of these trade treaties are actuated by the feeling of the friendly brother. They honestly feel that by promotion of trade with other countries we can promote the peace of the world. That is a laudable position for anyone to take, but what we should be interested in is to maintain peace within our own borders and provide work for the 9,000,000 men and women who are still unemployed. We cannot accomplish that if we permit the flow of foreign-made goods, produced by the cheap labor of Europe and Asia, into this country to compete with the products of our own men and women. So when we think about peace in the world we should think first of maintaining it here in the United States. The records of the last few years show that we have been getting the short end of the stick in the field of foreign trade. As an illustration: Between the years 1934 and 1936 exports have increased $320,000,000, or about 15 percent, while imports have increased $764,000,000, or 46 percent. Our balance of trade in 1934 was $477,745,000, while in 1936 it was $34,258,000, a drop of 93 percent.

Table of exports and imports

	Export [1]	Import [2]	Balance of trade [3]
1929	$5,240,995,000	$4,399,361,000	$841,634,000
1933	1,674,994,000	1,449,559,000	225,435,000
1934	2,132,800,000	1,655,055,000	477,745,000
1935	2,281,860,000	2,047,287,000	234,513,000
1936	2,453,487,000	2,419,229,000	34,258,000

[1] Increase, 1934-36, 15 percent.
[2] Increase, 1934-36, 46 percent.
[3] Decrease, 1934-36, 93 percent.

This table should give us something to think about when considering the American market and the American producer.

While this influx of foreign goods has been coming from all parts of the world we find that in the industrial field Japan is our most dangerous competitor. In the report of the Tariff Commission it states that the Japanese population is increasing at the rate of about one million a year, and because of this increase Japan has been forced to enter the industrial field to give employment to its people, the physical resources of that country being insufficient to take care of them. They have now turned to the processing of raw materials to give employment to a large part of the labor supply. The rate of wages paid these workers varies from 15 to 40 cents a day, and the employees in large mills, for example, work from 8 to 11 hours a day and obtain from 2 to 4 rest days per month, in addition to some holidays during the year. Workers in smaller factories and in household industries generally work longer hours and enjoy fewer days of rest. There is no labor problem in Japan because of the large supply available.

We can understand, because of these facts, why our American manufacturers are deeply concerned over the threatened competition they are facing. Imports of cotton cloth to this country from Japan, which affects our largest single industry in Massachusetts, has increased from 789,244 yards in 1932 to over 70,000,000 yards in 1936, an increase of over 9,000 percent; and it is interesting, also, to note how Japan is spreading its tentacles to all parts of the world. Not only is it reaching into the great American markets but to every other one it can possibly penetrate. A further comparison to show world exports of cotton goods from Japan and world exports of cotton goods from the United States—in 1929 exports of cotton cloth from the United States totaled 539,356 square yards, which dropped to 223,481 square yards in 1934; while Japanese exports in the same period increased from 1,790,560 square yards to 2,570,233. That shows how Japan has been taking away our foreign markets for cotton goods, and it is not at all likely that we will regain those lost markets because of our higher wage schedule and cost of production and the probable unwillingness of the people of these other countries to pay our price when they can get just as good a quality of cloth at a much cheaper price from Japan.

A recent report from Portugal tells us that textile industry representatives of that country implored their Government to aid them in meeting Japanese competition in Portuguese colonies. The industrialists said that the Japanese are deluging Portugal colonial markets with cheap goods and threaten to annihilate Portuguese industry. So we are not alone in our complaints about the Japanese threat. The same situation faces other American industries. Our manufacturers are forced to compete, not only with inexpensive cotton goods but also with woolens, hats, electric bulbs, and many other Japanese imports. Other countries of the world, whose trade is being jeopardized by Japanese exports, are now being subsidized by their respective governments in order that they may meet this kind of competition in the world market.

The President, in his Budget message to Congress this year, called on American industries to employ more people in their manufacturing establishments. But how can they do so when they are confronted by such a problem of competition as we find in the hat-body industry, for instance, which Japan did not enter until 1935, when it shipped into this country 2,703,514 hat bodies, and in 1936, 6,582,626 hat bodies, thereby absorbing already about 25 percent of our domestic market? Imports of hat bodies, from all countries, in 1936 reached the grand total of 21,275,245. This startling illustration shows us how fast this menace is creeping on us, and if it is not stopped another unit of our once great textile industry will be but a memory.

Please understand that I am not speaking in a manner intended to be unfriendly toward the Japanese people as a whole, but I fully realize the problem with which the industries of this country are contending and that Japan is our most severe competitor today, and will be in the future, unless we put a check on it. Some of the manufacturers of my home State have told me that they have been denied an adequate opportunity to express their views on the actual terms of the agreements before they become effective. That has been one of the most unfortunate provisions of the present act. These manufacturers do not know, when trade agreements are being considered in hearings, whether their particular industries are being affected by negotiations which are contemplated with foreign governments. Certainly we in Massachusetts are interested in preserving our industries there. They are the very lifeblood of our communities. Wages have, in 15 years, dropped over 50 percent in those industries, and today there are a quarter of a million less people employed in the factories of that State than 15 years ago. Add to that the natural increase in population in this period, estimated at 8 percent, which still further aggravates the economic conditions of our State. This does not take into account the many other thousands of people who are dependent on the purchasing power of the wage money of our factory workers. Relief costs have reached amazing heights, and all too many property owners are unable to continue to bear the burden that has been heaped upon them in the past few years. Massachusetts, to be sure, suffered considerably by the migration of industry in this period when it lost 100 mills employing 22,800 people, principally due to competition within our country. A majority of these mills migrated to the South where they enjoy the benefits of tax exemption, low wages, and other concessions distinctly favorable to them and impossible in the North. The cotton industry, which I stated is the largest single industry in Massachusetts, in 1920 employed 113,145 workers; in 1934, only 49,297, a drop of 56 percent. In 1920 wages in this industry totaled $130,000,000, whereas in 1934, $36,000,000, a drop of 72 percent. According to the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, the average weekly earning of a textile worker in the South in 1934 was $9.90, as a result of which the average weekly earning of a textile worker in the North dropped from $17.21 in 1919 to $13.50 in 1934. It is obvious that if there is to be any competition from abroad in the field of textiles the mills of the North, because of the higher cost of production, will be the first ones to suffer. Keep in mind, also, the fact that out of every $100 spent in the cities of Massachusetts approximately $20 goes toward the maintenance of our welfare departments, mainly to take care of our unemployed.

In view of this existing condition, how can I be expected to vote in favor of trade agreements, under the present setup, and thereby encourage the continued threat on remaining Massachusetts industries which, under the present administration, are not receiving the protection against imports to which they are justly entitled?

I am in favor of a reciprocity-agreement tariff, such as was contemplated under the McKinley tariff walls, which would not be disadvantageous to our domestic markets and which was based on terms representing real reciprocity. I am, however, unalterably opposed to opening our markets to foreign-made goods by bartering away our American industries. I am not in favor of that kind of reciprocity that results in breaking down our industrial activities in order that some other parts of the country may benefit by it. We have much in common, those of us who are engaged in diverse productive activities, and we should protect each other to the fullest extent. If we do not provide employment for our own people by safeguarding the materials they produce they will soon be forced to stop making those articles and, like others, will soon join the dreaded army of the unemployed. We must face the issue on a realistic rather than an academic basis, keeping the extremely important fact in mind that the high wage levels in the United States are not equaled by any other country in the world. In the wool-textile industry, for example, wages paid factory employees in this country are two and one-half times as great as those paid in England and 10 times those paid in Japan. Assuming there is a reasonable comparable degree of efficiency in manufacture, a free exchange of products means that we either must bring European or Asiatic wages to a scale substantially equal to ours or face a drastic reduction in our own wage rates. We pass laws to limit the number of immigrant workers who may be admitted to this country, yet we permit the products made by those unadmitted aliens to be shipped here and sold at prices even lower than the cost of American production.

To be sure, under this Trade Agreement Act the President is empowered to make any agreements with such other nations as he sees fit. Yet I am not unmindful of the fact that the one who is foremost in negotiating these treaties is our own Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, who enjoys a very excellent reputation with those who know him. But Mr. Hull has always been looked upon as a disciple of the open-door policy. He plainly stated before the hearing on this bill that the major thing in his mind, and the thing that he was more interested in than anything else, was to maintain peace in the world, and he honestly believes that this can be accomplished by promoting international commerce. There is a very wide difference of opinion on this matter. Under the present tariff law the President may make an increase or decrease of 50 percent in the present statutory rate. If any of the statutory rates are excessive, they can be reduced and, under this system, fair competition could be allowed; but the implied understanding in the present tariff law is that the cost of production, plus a reasonable profit, must be respected. I recall very distinctly in 1929, when shoes were flooding our market from Czechoslovakia, materially affecting our industries and the men and women employed in them, that the Congress of the United States, through the enactment of that law, put a check on the tremendous imports of shoes made with the peon labor of Europe. As a duly elected Representative of a congressional district where there are many industries located of the type I have mentioned here, it is my duty to know, and I am interested in knowing, how the power we are taking from ourselves, if we extend the Trade Agreement Act, will affect the industries in general in my home State. Are the abuses of the past and present to continue into the future? Is there going to be a stopgap to the present influx of manufactured articles and other commodities which is making it difficult for our industries to compete, and which, in the end, will mean the complete demoralization of our industrial life? I want to be sure that the present conditions are not aggravated by any vote that I may cast as a Member of Congress. I believe that every effort should be made to enlarge our commerce with other countries, but not at the expense of our American working men and women who are employed in our industries and depend on them for their very existence. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] presented to the committee today some exceedingly interesting and valuable information relative to the Canadian reciprocal trade agreement. He has quoted from high Canadian authority, giving us information indispensable to a complete understanding of the problem before us. He has enlightened us all, I think, upon what is being done in that country, having as its purpose the expansion of its industrial and agricultural activities, to the point where its citizens may not only supply their own market, so far as they reasonably can, but where they may more successfully invade the markets of the world. They have made great progress in that direction. Today their workers are employed, their farmers are reasonably prosperous, and are not subsidized by their government.

Instead of seeing ahead only years in which millions upon millions of her citizens will remain unemployed, Canada today is looking into the future unafraid. She is rapidly expanding her industrial activities. She is rapidly developing great agricultural areas and resources. She is encouraging immigration to the end that there will be the necessary man-power to carry forward the great program she has undertaken. In fact, she is doing exactly what every forward-looking nation in the world is doing today. She is expanding, not contracting, her activities. She realizes, as do many of the nations, that the only avenue to a constantly improving standard of living for her people lies along the line of constantly increasing production. She knows that the people of no country can have more of the necessities, the comforts, and the luxuries of life than they can use, because human desires are insatiable; but Canada knows this one thing further: That unless she produces more of these things—because production carries with it the creation of consuming power—her people cannot move to the better economic and physical environment of a progressive country.

Our country is the only one I know of to embark upon a policy of scarcity, which policy, if pursued, carries a nation first to arbitrarily reduced employment, with its attendant reduction of purchasing power through reduced wage outflow, thereby in turn reducing the demand for these products.

Second, the policy inevitably leads to higher prices for all the commodities which enter into the needs of our daily life, because of increased unit production costs, again still further reducing the number of those who have the financial resources with which to purchase the everyday needs of the household. The result then is that it requires fewer workers to supply that reduced demand, and men lose their jobs and join the ranks of those unable to buy, and again the demand for commodities is reduced, and we are once more in the thrall of that vicious downward economic spiral which leads to general unemployment, hunger, suffering, misery for the great mass of the people.

It seems we have not yet learned our lesson. Our experience with the N. R. A., and the unsatisfactory results of attempting to regiment industry to the end that production be reduced and employment increased, is still fresh in our minds. We know now, or at least we should know, that production cannot be reduced and the rewards and the volume of employment increased at one and the same time. And yet we hear rumors to the effect that the N. R. A. is to be revived and made constitutional through some mysterious judicial legerdemain. Is it possible that the way this is to be accomplished was pointed out in the Presidential message presented to the House this afternoon?

None of us have forgotten that the old N. R. A. was given an honest and fair trial. I voted for the act. I traveled over my district and at public meetings asked the people to support the law wholeheartedly and make it successful, if possible.

Mr. Chairman, it is such an obvious fundamental economic law that it at times is amazing that anyone could even for a moment be blind to it, that consumption is indissolubly allied to production. It is obvious that without consumers there can be no producers, and that out of the very act of production flows the power to purchase, which is a part of consuming power, because in the ultimate consuming power is indicated by the power of the people to purchase.

Everybody seemed of the same mind in regard to the N. R. A. Everybody wanted the President to have a fair chance to prove the value of his remedies, and they tried to make this expedient work. They failed, and even before the Supreme Court had invalidated the act it had been abandoned almost by common consent.

It must be apparent that any legislative or administrative program that curtails any line of productive activity without supplying some other line of activity of equal value in return is as economically unsound as the N. R. A. itself. It takes from our people the right to produce the things which will give them the greatest reward for their efforts. Whether that curtailment is brought about by arbitrary mandate of some bureaucrat, or brought about by displacement in our own market by products raised or produced in foreign lands, the result is exactly the same.

Mr. Chairman, my mind goes back to the days when the Committee had the bill under consideration originally. I recall that the Republican minority offered and vigorously pressed an amendment that would have authorized the President to use the articles on that long free list as trading stock in negotiating these agreements. This list is composed almost exclusively of things which we do not produce in this country. They furnish practically no competition to either our farmers, our workers, or our invested capital. There is today no restrictions whatever to their importation. Foreign peoples can bring into this market all they can possibly sell, and for this privilege we charge them not one red cent.

I think it is recognized that we offer the finest market to be found anywhere in the world for these products on the free list. Certainly we pay as much, and frequently we pay more, for them than the peoples of other nations pay. That this is no small privilege we extend to foreign producers is apparent when one scans the records of such imports over a period of years.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I desire to insert in the RECORD a table showing the value of the annual imports for consumption from the years 1922 to 1936, inclusive. This table shows imports on the dutiable as well as the free list. It is interesting to note that during this period foreign producers have been permitted to bring into this market, free of duty, products to the value of the enormous sum of $28,868,449,000. This is 63 3/10 percent of all products imported during this period.

I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that the sale of such a bill of goods during this period of time is a privilege of some value to the vendors. I think I am safe in saying that no country in the world extends the same privileges to the same extent as we in this respect.

This is a materialistic world. Every nation is, I believe, conducting its affairs in a way which will promote the best interests of its people. I am sure Dr. Sayre and others in the State Department, when negotiating these treaties with foreign nations, find those with whom negotiations are conducted very alert in protecting the interests of those they represent. When one considers the shifting of the balance of trade that has taken place under these agreements and learns that today, instead of enjoying a balance of trade in commodities, we find ourselves for the first time in 43 years exporting less than we import, he must be impressed with the fact that the foreign negotiators have not failed in their responsibility to those whom they represent.

In analyzing this picture of world trade, Mr. Chairman, we must not forget this fundamental fact, that 95 percent of the total market for all the products of our farms and industries of the United States lies within the territorial confines of the United States. Our own people provide in themselves 95 percent of the market for their products. It would seem obvious that our first concern should be for the 95 percent of the market at home, and our second concern for the 5 percent abroad, and that on a basis of fairness—the good neighbor, if you please—to arrange trade agreements with those countries which can provide us with the free-list articles not in conflict with our own producers, and us to provide to those countries in turn with those commodities not in conflict with the products of their workers. That, as I see it, constitutes a sensible, sane, economic, fair basis of world trade and should be the governing policy.

I realize fully, Mr. Chairman, that exchange of commodities does not give one the full picture in international balances. It is only when we contemplate such balances that we can arrive at a conclusion as to whether or not we are dealing on a basis of equality with the world. Of course, one can only reach an understanding and appreciation of the administration's foreign-trade policy by scanning the results. In 1934, we had a balance of trade in commodities of $478,000,000. Under the Trade Agreements Act, during the first year it was in effect, this favorable balance dropped to $235,000,000. In 1936, this favorable balance disappeared entirely, and we find ourselves with a deficit for that year in our foreign trade of $4,579,000.

It has been stated in the minority report, Mr. Chairman, that the imports and exports of merchandise are not the only things we should consider. It is my opinion that the state of our international balance of payments is of equal significance. We cannot arrive at a proper conclusion regarding our international financial and commercial operations without taking into consideration our net balance of payments on service items, as well as merchandise. The former include transportation service, immigration and charitable remittances, governmental transactions, tourist expenditures, interest and dividends, and silver purchases. These are the intangibles. In 1934 in these items we had a net favorable balance of $375,000,000, and this included neither capital items nor gold movements. In 1935 the balance of payments became unfavorable to the extent of $128,000,000.

I quote from the minority report:

> In 1936, although final figures are not yet available, we can estimate the figure of at least several hundred million dollars more unfavorable than in 1935, because of the disappearance of the merchandise trade balance and the large net imports of silver.

I continue to quote from the minority report, Mr. Chairman:

> If we were to take into account our huge imports of gold, our adverse balance of international payments would be further increased by more than a billion dollars.

The records disclose that our imports are increasing much faster than our exports. The records also disclose that the imports of commodities on the free list are declining in percentages and the commodities on the protected list are increasing in percentages. The table I have inserted above, Mr. Chairman, will be most illuminating to those sufficiently interested to scan the figures with care. It shows that under the administration of these trade agreements the percentage of imports on the free list is constantly and rather rapidly declining. This can mean but one thing, and that is that in endeavoring to prove ourselves the "good neighbor" and to promote the peace of the world we are contributing a substantial part of our market, which we can ourselves supply, to producers of foreign nations, without in most instances exacting any concessions in return.

A moment ago I stated this is a very materialistic world in which we are living. I call attention to the fact that representatives of other nations drive hard bargains, and when I think of this, Mr. Chairman, I am reminded of the days when the bill was first considered and we were asked to approve the bill and give to our State Department an opportunity to do a little "Yankee" trading. Judging from results, it would seem to me that the "Yankee" trading as we have long known it was indulged in almost exclusively by representatives of foreign governments.

In considering the question before us today, we cannot understand the questionable possibilities of our foreign commerce in the years to come without knowing what has been done to vitally affect the development of that commerce and make it impossible to accomplish the objective of the administration.

Our Democratic friends have maintained that because of the high tariffs promulgated by the Republican Party in recent years, we have found it impossible to carry on our international trade. Of course, they were as wrong in this instance as they always have been when discussing the policy of a protective tariff.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that there has been over the years a falling off in our exports, particularly of manufactured commodities. But this has been because the American industrialist found that he could export his factory by moving it to his market, and then produce for his foreign market at a cheaper cost by reason of cheap foreign labor and cheap foreign materials in the country in which they exist. By avoiding a long haul with its consequent cost of carriage, and by avoiding frozen capital in transportation and insurance charges, he thereby can meet foreign competition on its own ground.

This is the reason why, over a long period of years, there has been the phenomenal flight of American manufacturers to foreign countries; it was not because of the American tariff walls, although it is true that foreign tariff walls set up further obstacles which contributed to the erection of these branch plants in foreign countries.

But if there was not a vestige of tariff existing, either here or elsewhere, if the whole world were today on a basis of free trade, the American industrialist, if he would serve his foreign markets at a price which could compete with producers in those foreign markets, would be compelled to maintain foreign branch factories. That fact is so apparent that I think no intelligent person would for a moment assume to contradict it.

Mr. Chairman, I am placing in the record at this point a table from Senate Document No. 120, issued in 1933, which is a report from the Department of Commerce, in response to Senate Resolution 138 of the Seventy-second Congress.

Present investment and employment in foreign producing units by years in which established, all countries

This is a report on American branch factories abroad, together with an analysis of returns from United States producers with investments of $50,000 or more in foreign plants in 1932. This shows that a total of approximately $2,177,693,244 was at that time invested by American industry in foreign branch plants. The number of plants approximated 1,800. And keep in mind, ladies and gentlemen, that this list is wholly incomplete, because, in the first place, it embraces only plants in which more than $50,000 per plant is invested, and, secondly, it does not include any plants or activities established and maintained by American capital which operates no American plant; and, third, it does not include many plants concerning which some American firms refused to report. And further, it does not include those American investments and activities in foreign countries which do not provide competition for American production.

This whole program of building branch plants is not one that has been alone developing in Canada, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has addressed himself this afternoon. It indicates what is going on in the world at large. It points to the difficulties we will meet in attempting to reestablish our past volume of exports. Certainly we cannot hope to make substantial progress unless we abandon the policy of making a reciprocal treaty with one nation, immediately extending all the benefits given that nation to all other countries with the exception of Germany and Austrialia without securing from those other nations something in return.

In connection, Mr. Chairman, with this question of establishing American branch factories in foreign markets to supply these markets, another and equally important consideration must be faced, and that is that over these years we have not only been selling to foreign nations the machinery by which to manufacture in supplying their own needs, but we have been sending our engineers and technicians abroad to teach them how to produce goods according to American mass-production methods. With such facilities the other nations of the world can become independent of our industrial output. It must be apparent that we cannot continue to supply foreign competitors with our latest machinery and continue to sell the products of machinery in the foreign markets also.

Certainly we cannot expect to make substantial progress, Mr. Chairman, by giving up our markets here at home which we have previously had and are now fully capable of supplying. We cannot make substantial progress, Mr. Chairman, unless we follow the lead of other nations and use the same methods in our negotiations with them that they now use with us. We have a splendid market in this country for those things which we do not produce. I have previously referred to this. If we are to make the progress which we have a right to expect, we must protect our present markets abroad and trade for more by using the trading advantage of our free-list market, which we now give freely to all the world, and which free-list market affords our most valuable trading asset available for the purpose. In other words, we cannot continue to trade away our domestic market for the things we ourselves produce without inviting economic disaster.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot continue to go down the years making trade agreements with foreign countries and continue selling the American farmer down the river. I hold in my hand a report from the Department of Commerce dated February 2, 1937, which discloses the fact that our agricultural exports are constantly decreasing, while our agricultural imports are constantly increasing. It shows, Mr. Chairman, that whatever benefit accrues to American producers as a result of these treaties accrues to nonagricultural activities and at the expense of our great agricultural industry. I offer this report at this point for the RECORD:

Analysis, by economic groups, of domestic exports from and imports into the United States for 1936—Continued

[Value in thousands of dollars]

The facts I have quoted from Senate Document No. 120 show that the manufacturing industry can and does, when deemed necessary, jump across the oceans and establish branch factories in the markets abroad which it wishes to serve. But the American farmer cannot do that thing, Mr. Chairman. His base of operations is irrevocably and irremovably fixed in the soil of this country. He cannot at will move a portion of his factory, the farm, to Canada or to Argentina or to any other country. He is destined by the very nature of his calling to remain fixed, and yet we are here seriously considering whether we shall continue the policy of sacrificing his interests, taking advantage of his helplessness, crucifying him on some theory that we are going to benefit America by so doing.

By adoption of this resolution we acquiesce in the policy that has been followed up to this time and approve the discrimination against the farmers of the country who constitute the largest single class of our citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, Henry Thomas Buckle, in his History of Civilization in England, says that the great reforms of the English-speaking race have consisted not in doing something new but in undoing something old.

We are now engaged in one of the greatest reforms of this generation, undoing something old, undoing some of the greatest legislative mistakes in all the history of this Republic—the Fordney-McCumber-Harding High Protective Tariff Act of 1922 and the Smoot-Hawley-Hoover tariff of 1930.

I am not surprised to hear the old-guard Republicans, and especially the ones most responsible for these iniquitous tariff laws, criticize the Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, who is taking the lead in working out these far-reaching reforms.

In my opinion, Cordell Hull is not only the greatest and most farseeing but, measured in terms of benefits to mankind, he is the most valuable member of any cabinet in the world today.

They call him "visionary." I am glad he has some vision. Holy Writ tells us that "where there is no vision the people perish." And many of them would have perished, and our American institutions might also have perished, if we had not substituted the sympathetic vision of this administration for the smug complacency, the blue-print and slide-rule policies of the Hoover administration.

Victor Hugo once said that nothing dies harder or more thoroughly than an old regime. We are now witnessing the death struggle of the few remaining high-tariff veterans of the Republican old guard, who "die but never surrender."

In working out and negotiating these reciprocal-trade agreements, Cordell Hull is rendering a service to mankind second only to that of the President of the United States. He is not only restoring the trade of the world by thus breaking down these vicious tariff barriers, but he is also promoting the peace of mankind. Nothing that we could do would strengthen the hands of the administration in this great work more than the passage of this resolution to extend the time for the negotiation and execution of these reciprocal-trade agreements.

I witnessed the passage of the Fordney-McCumber-Harding Act. I saw the party then in power disregard the rights of the masses of the American people, and especially of the farmers of the country, and pile upon their backs the highest protective tariff ever known in times of peace. It was the most deadly blow ever dealt the prosperity of the American farmers. It was one from which agriculture never recovered until it finally collapsed under the impact of the Smoot-Hawley-Hoover tariff of 1930, which swept us into the worst depression this Nation has ever known.

A tariff is an indirect tax. They levied a tax upon everything the farmer has to buy, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the lining of the coffin in which old age is laid away. They even went beyond the grave and levied a tax upon his tombstone by placing a tariff upon the rock from which it is made.

One of the best informed men I ever heard discuss the tariff said during the Coolidge administration that the tariff was then costing the American consumers on an average of $4,000,000,000 a year; of that amount $600,000,000 went into the Treasury and $3,400,000,000 went into the pockets of the beneficiaries of that law. Think of it! Four billion dollars a year wrung from the masses of the American people for which they got practically nothing in return. Legalized robbery. Thievery within the law! Using the powers of government to take billions of dollars annually from the unprotected masses, the people least able to pay, in order to swell the fortunes of the favored few. It was a crime for which the Republican Party has at last paid the extreme penalty. "The wages of sin is death."

Passage of the Tariff Act of 1922 sowed the seeds of the depression. No country on earth could have stood it without disaster, and only America, with her unbounded natural resources, could have stood it as long as she did. The advocates of that measure made no attempt to conceal the fact that it would rob the cotton farmer. They brazenly ignored his welfare, knowing that he would have to sell his cotton in the open markets of the world in competition with cotton raised by the cheapest labor on earth and then purchase his goods in a protected market and pay two, three, or four prices for everything he had to buy. The tariff could not possibly benefit him, for the reason that we ship millions of bales of our cotton out of the country every year, while very little, if any, is shipped in.

Besides, if the tariff had benefited agriculture as much as it did industry, it never would have been enacted. Its advocates would not have wanted it. The small bait they threw to the farmers of the grain and livestock sections of the country was really pitiful. It could hardly be compared to the scattered crumbs which Lazarus gathered from beneath the banquet table of Dives.

I shall never forget the debate between the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Tincher, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LUCE, over the proposal to put a tariff on hides. Mr. Tincher called them "cowhides", and Mr. LUCE called them "cawfskins." [Laughter.]

The old-guard Republicans had placed a tariff on everything the big manufacturers produced, and then voted down the proposition of putting a tariff on hides for fear it would give the farmer a few more pennies for a cowhide out of which Massachusetts manufacturers were making shoes to sell at $10 or $12 a pair.

During the Coolidge administration a farmer in my district said he took a cowhide to town and sold it and then went into a store to buy a hame string and had to pay more for the hame string than he got for the hide. [Laughter.]

Old-guard Republicans now talk about what the tariff did for the farmers, instead of talking about what it did to the farmers. You had a tariff of 42 cents a bushel on wheat, and yet wheat was 10 cents a bushel higher in Winnepeg, Canada, than it was in Minneapolis, Minn. You had a tariff of 25 cents a bushel on corn, and corn was higher in foreign countries than it was in the United States. That tariff on wheat and corn, under those conditions, was not worth a penny to the farmers of this country, and the tariff advocates knew it. They were merely using it for political "bunk", until the farmers became wise to it and swept them from power.

In order to placate the dairymen of the Northwest, they placed a high tariff on all dairy products, which finally killed the goose that laid their golden eggs. As soon as the prices of dairy products rose out of proportion to the prices of wheat, corn, and cotton, farmers of the South and West began to build up their own dairying industries and take that market away from them.

The South is now the coming dairy section of the world. You have driven us to it, and now you cannot drive us away from it. You cannot compete with us. We have a gentle climate and a fertile soil that produces every kind of grass and forage crop the dairyman desires. We have an 8 or 9 months' grazing season and an abundant rainfall that keeps our pastures fresh and green throughout the larger portion of the year. Our soil is saturated with iodine, which prevents those terrible thyroid diseases that affect so many hundreds of thousands of people in the States along our country's northern border. The tick has long since been eradicated, and our cattle are free from tuberculosis, rendering our dairy products the safest and most wholesome to be found on the face of the earth. In addition to all that, we have a superabundance of dry feed in the form of cottonseed and cottonseed meal and hulls, produced on every farm. Our semitropical climate contributes to the health and growth of our dairy cattle and eliminates the necessity of building heavy or costly barns. Compared with any other part of the country, the South is a veritable dairyman's paradise. As I said before, it is the coming dairy section of the world.

By imposing a high protective tariff and making it unprofitable for us to grow cotton, you have given the dairymen of the North and East a competitor with whom they cannot compete and one that is here to stay.

By penalizing agriculture for the benefit of industry with your high protective tariff, you have driven the South and West into building up their own industries and leaving yours without a market. You are now reaping what you have sowed.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, who spoke a few minutes ago, talked about their failing industries of Massachusetts. They overbuilt, thinking they could continue to unload upon the American people and upon foreign countries their goods at exorbitant prices.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In connection with Massachusetts I want to say that from 1921 to 1933, 12 years of Republican rule in the Federal Government, and practically all that time in control of the State government of Massachusetts, we lost 166 textile mills in New England. Our textiles moved from New England during Republican rule. We have many thousand more spindles operating today in Massachusetts and New England than we had 3 years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. That is just what I was coming to. Of course, I was referring to the other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. McCORMACK. I knew that. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] points to the fact that you were rapidly losing your textile industry. Why? Because you made it more profitable for the people in the South to operate textile mills than to raise raw material. As a result, today more than 75 percent of the active cotton spindles are in the Southern States, and the rest of them will go there if you leave this tariff wall where it stands today. That would be the worst thing that could possibly happen to the New England States.

You cannot trade with foreign countries without letting them trade with you. I wish I had time to go into some of the restrictions they have placed against American goods of all kinds in retaliation for these tariff walls. The only way to lower these tariff walls is by reciprocal-trade agreements. If we will bring them down in that way, it will do more to restore the prosperity of the average American, it will do more to restore international trade and eliminate international disagreements, it will do more to perpetuate the peace of mankind than any other one thing that could be done at this time.

The Republican high protective tariff policy, founded upon consummate dishonesty, robbing one man for the benefit of another, has borne its bitter fruits. It impoverished our farmers, destroyed the home market for your industrial products, and made competitors of your former customers.

It stimulated industry in certain sections for a time and coaxed into this country millions of aliens seeking employment, to leave upon the hands of your children a problem that it may take generations to solve.

It provoked retaliation upon the part of every foreign country, caused them to emulate the example you had set, shut American goods out of their markets, and drive our commerce from the seas.

It taught other peoples of the earth how to restrict trade and provoked them into practicing it, until the very map of the civilized world became a barbed-wire entanglement of tariff barriers, behind which world trade had become stagnant and world commerce had become paralyzed.

It wrought the ruin of agriculture, destroyed our foreign trade, made enemies of our former friends, caused a collapse of the very industries it was originally designed to serve, drove this country into the darkest depression in all history, and almost wrecked the civilization of mankind.

We are now engaged in the arduous work of restoration, restoring the prosperity of American agriculture, rebuilding our foreign trade, placing our industries upon a sounder basis, eliminating international hatreds, and restoring the peace and good will among the nations of the earth.

These things we are now accomplishing, not by doing something new but by undoing something old. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 30 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from North Carolina has 24 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, first I want to state most emphatically that I am opposed to reciprocal-trade treaties in principle, in the way such treaties have been entered into, and in the results we have secured through the treaties we have entered into.

Two years ago I voted against this, to my mind, uncalled-for delegation of power, or perhaps it would be better to say that I believe the elected representatives of the people should never delegate to an administrative body or agency the power to levy taxes or to set the tax which our people should pay.

As a Democrat I want to state that no real Democrat, so far as I know, has ever knowingly advocated the enactment of tariff rates which would permit of the delivery into our American market of foreign-made goods or products which goods or products compete in the American market with the products of American workers or farmers at total landed costs which are less than the American costs of production of such goods or products.

Last session I presented and I am still hopeful of securing the passage of legislation which would impose an additional tax on imports. This tax would represent the difference between the landed costs of foreign goods or products and similar competitive goods or products produced by American workers or farmers.

Under our present tariff rates any number of articles and commodities are being dumped into our Atlantic seaboard markets at total landed costs which are considerably less than our American cost of production.

Surely, with Congress appropriating a billion dollars this year for the relief of those unable to get a job, we should not authorize the State Department, behind closed doors, and without the slightest knowledge on the part of the Congress or the American people to reduce even the present inadequate tariff rates and thus force additional thousands of American workers to be dependent on our Government for relief. [Applause.]

Many Members of the House would strenuously oppose our delegating to the State Department, or the Department of Labor, the authority to enlarge the quotas for admission of aliens. Yet I note among those who cry the loudest for the strictest enforcement of our immigration laws, yes, who would close our doors entirely to the entry into the United States of aliens, those who advocating this extension of the authorization for the Department of State to enter into reciprocal-trade treaties with foreign nations, treaties which make it easier for the cartels and trusts of these foreign countries to dump into the American market the products of the very peoples whom we debar from entry into our country.

What is the difference, may I inquire, between our permitting the entry of these aliens, the people of foreign countries, and our admitting to our country the products of these same people?

Surely we would be acting more in keeping with our history, more in harmony with our cry "The land of the free", if we opened our doors and permitted these oppressed, yes, one might well say, enslaved people the freedom and the liberty which all persons prize most highly.

We have an Asiatic exclusion law. What value is that law in protecting the job opportunities of American workers when the products of the labor of these debarred workers are permitted entry into our country to the known and admitted knowledge of our Tariff Commission at total landed costs which are less than the American costs of production of similar or competitive goods?

If we permitted the entry of these Japanese workers—and I am not advocating any such policy—the employers of such workers would be compelled to pay for their labor at least 500 percent more than is now paid to these workers.

Our laws supposedly prohibit the existence of trusts. We loudly boast of our opposition to monopolies. Yet a careful reading of the testimony presented to the Appropriations Committee on independent offices shows that we not only tolerate and accept the domination of cartels and trusts of foreign countries but we permit these foreign cartels and trusts to fix the actual duty which is paid by the importers of foreign goods to our Government. We do this when we accept from these foreign monopolies such valuations as they care to place on their exports even after our governmental agencies have found that the valuations or other information upon which the Government is dependent have been found to be false.

I refer to the testimony shown on page 566 of the hearings before the independent offices appropriations committee. This testimony shows that the Tariff Commission and Treasury Department admit that they are dependent for the valuations upon which we collect revenue on the valuations or prices fixed by a monopolistic agency in Japan. If this is true in this case, why not others? In this case they found and admit finding what is known as false invoicing.

Page 567 of the same hearings shows that the Tariff Commission states that 43 percent of all the household tableware yearly purchased in the United States is the product of Japanese workers. The Tariff Commission stated—I quote:

> Computing the value in the United States of the (Japanese) articles at two and one-half times their foreign (Japanese) value, imports in 1934 would represent about 43 percent of the estimated American consumption of such ware in that year.

Here the Tariff Commission reports to Congress that in order to place the products of Japanese workers which compete in the American market with the products of American workers on an equality as to costs of production a tariff rate equivalent to 150 percent would be necessary. Yet I note that the same Tariff Commission found in its report on pottery for 1934 that the tariff rate in effect was equivalent only to 85 percent. This means that the American workers are under a handicap in that they cannot get a job so long as the Japanese products have this advantage, or perhaps this advantage possessed by the importers of the products of Japanese workers permits these importers to secure extortionate profits at the expense of their exploitation of the American consuming public.

Last year we enacted the Walsh-Healey Act, the purpose of which is to prevent American chiselers from selling goods to the United States Government.

Everyone is familiar with the fact that one of the essential needs of our War and Navy Departments is an available supply of copper and other metals.

It is my understanding that those who constitute the American Copper Trust act in concert with the International Copper Trust or Cartel.

Further, I noticed in the press recently that the American Copper Trust increased their price of copper after the International Copper Cartel or Trust had sent word from Europe that the price of copper was to be increased. I understand that the divisions or the subsidiaries of the American Copper Trust have complied with the Walsh-Healey Act, but the parent companies, those who actually control the divisions and the subsidiaries, not liking the laws enacted by Congress, are participating in a sit-down strike against their own Government by refusing to bid upon or supply the Government with copper, as to do so they would have to comply with the Walsh-Healey Act.

Incidentally, my attention has also been called to the fact that continued employment of many thousands of workers employed in what are termed "independent metal-producing and fabricating plants" is seriously endangered through the refusal of the American Copper Trust to permit these independents to purchase sufficient copper and other metals to meet the needs of their business. Yet the State Department has taken no action in this matter which so deeply concerns our people, our Government, and our national defense.

Instead of negotiating trade treaties with foreign countries through which treaties we will or may add millions of our workers to the list of the unemployed, and which make it easier for these foreign cartels and trusts to dump the products of their underpaid workers into our American market, it would be far more constructive were the State Department to advise Congress of the number of cartels and trusts, legal in their own countries but illegal in the United States, which are operating in the United States through controlled divisions or subsidiaries. The elimination of these foreign cartels and trusts, to my mind, operating in the United States through controlled subsidiaries, and in this way exploiting the American people, depriving American workers of employment opportunities and defying or ignoring our laws, as well as depriving our Government of the revenue which it should receive, is of far more importance than the work they ask we again authorize that they do.

Much has been said of the benefits we have secured through treaties we have already entered into.

First, I would suggest that the advocates of the passage of this bill tell us definitely who are meant by the term "we."

Labor has not benefited and has manifested its continued opposition to these reciprocal-trade treaties and the policy which underlies them.

The farmers allege that some of these treaties have been ruinous to them.

The other two elements who make up our productive life are the manufacturers and the bankers.

The manufacturers of New England are, from what I have been able to learn, unanimously opposed to these treaties.

The automobile manufacturers, the Cigarette Trust, the Remington Rand type of manufacturers, the Radio Trust, the Beef Trust, and others who export some 5 or 10 percent of their production, all of whom deny to their workers the benefits of law which Congress has enacted, and who pay to their unorganized workers such wages only as their conscience compels, probably are in favor of this type of legislation. Why? Because they are in the habit of doing business behind closed doors and they generally profit through such transactions.

The bankers, especially the international bankers, such as the Chase National and the National City, who deal in foreign exchange and who have large holdings in lands or securities of foreign countries, of course, will endorse a continuation of a policy through which they receive large profits.

It is possible that some Members of the House sincerely believe that the State Department, behind closed doors, might write a better tariff bill, because that is what we are authorizing in this bill, than Congress might write.

Having only a limited time in which to discuss this measure I will confine my illustrations of what the State Department has actually done to those specific cases which we find reported on by the tariff cases and cited on pages 570 to 574, inclusive, in the hearings of the appropriations committee on independent offices.

I believe that these two citations are fair examples of what a detailed examination of all those treaties we have entered into would show.

I note that some eight sugar importers, among them the Chase National and National City Banks, which banks I understand own more than 60 percent of the sugar lands of Cuba, are listed as sharing in this $27,000,000, less in revenue paid to the Treasury, while at the same time, even with the reduction in duty, the wholesale price, and surely the retail price of sugar has increased since these duties were lowered.

No Yankee trader ever represented the Government when such a deal was made, but it is highly probable that some Yankee traders represented the banks and the other sugar-land owners.

I note on pages 573 and 574 of the hearings, I have before referred to, that the Tariff Commission reports that the reduction in duties on cigarette papers enriched the Cigarette Trust some $600,000 last year, and, of course, the same amount each year that this treaty with France continues, while the American consumers of these French-made cigarette papers did not benefit at all.

In addition, I might add some reference to the Canadian treaty. A lot has been said of those instances wherein the American farmers and livestock raisers have suffered; little has been said of the duplicity whereby the producers and distillers of Scotch whisky secured a reduction in the tariff duty without any treaty's being entered into with England or Scotland.

Of course, being a wet-voting and dry-drinking Member of Congress, perhaps I do not see the joker as quick as some others, and, then again, perhaps this little joker might be overlooked. I deem this instance an indication of the extent to which those who are negotiating these reciprocal-trade treaties will go in order either to curry favor with representatives of foreign governments, the representatives of the international bankers or representatives of foreign cartels and trusts.

We entered into a treaty with Canada and we specified that whiskies of all types would benefit by the reduction in the duty from $5 a gallon to $2.50. Those who negotiated this treaty might not have a very good knowledge of whiskies. It is barely possible that their taste demands wines.

However, it is common knowledge that the American public are large consumers of Scotch whisky and also that we have not as yet, so far as the Congress is aware, entered into a reciprocal-trade treaty with either England or Scotland. Yet the Treasury has lost several millions of dollars in revenue and there are but few, so far as I am aware, who will admit that they can purchase good Scotch whisky at any less price than they paid prior to this reduction in tariff duty.

Mr. Chairman, the citations to which I have referred show that our entry into these reciprocal-trade treaties has not been helpful to our own country.

At this point I might dwell for a moment upon the fallacy of the State Department's entering into treaties with those foreign nations who have had the foresight to protect the job opportunities of their own workers.

Under our present tariff system we place our duties on the value of the goods in the foreign countries, even when there is little if any market for the sale of such goods in that country. The foreigners, however, are a lot smarter and they place their tariff duties on the value of the imported articles in their own countries. Consequently, the State Department can secure few, if any, real major concessions except for the benefit of the mass-production industries or the American monopolies wherein the labor cost of the production of such products is less than 10 percent through our entry into these reciprocal-trade treaties.

Mr. Chairman, the United States Tariff Commission recently issued a report entitled "Bases of Value for Assessment of Ad Valorem Duties in Foreign Countries." This report lists various countries, but I will only read the statement as to those countries with which we have more important trade. As to the value of goods landing in the United Kingdom, I read from the report as follows:

The value of any imported goods for the purpose of this act shall be taken to be the price which an importer would give for the goods if the goods were delivered to him, freight and insurance paid, in bond at the port of importation, and duty shall be paid on that value as fixed by the commissioners.

As to Japan—

Duty upon an article subject to ad-valorem duty shall be levied according to its value on arrival at the time of importation.

As to the Netherlands—

Commodities subject to ad-valorem duties, the value of each article figured according to the current price in this country on the date of the declaration.

As to France—

The value to be declared for the application of the customs duties is that which the merchandise has in the place and at the time when it is presented to the customhouse. This value includes the purchase price of the merchandise, plus all necessary importing expenses (transportation, freight, export duty, insurance, commission, cost of packing where not dutiable separately) up to the place of importation, exclusive of import duties.

As to Canada—

The fair market value of such goods in the usual and ordinary commercial acceptation of the term, and as sold in the ordinary course of trade, such value in no case to be lower than the selling price thereof to jobbers or wholesalers generally at the time of shipment direct to Canada.

As to Australia—

Current domestic value of the goods, or the actual market price paid or to be paid for the goods by the Australian importer, plus any special deduction, whichever is higher.

For Austria—

For ad-valorem duties the value of the merchandise is to be taken as the price which an article of like kind and quality would bring, exclusive of the duty, in the customs territory. Average values can be established by administrative regulations.

As to Belgium—

The value may not in any case be less than the normal wholesale price of similar goods on the Belgian market at the time of importation, less the amount of the duties (under the minimum tariff) which such products would pay on import.

I am opposed to the principle of reciprocal-trade treaties, believing, as I do, that the elected representatives of the people should never delegate a taxing power to any administrative agency; and I believe a cold-blooded analysis of the results of those reciprocal-trade treaties justifies the House in rejecting this measure, which calls for an extension of the authorization for the State Department to enter into such treaties with other foreign countries.

In conclusion, I want to say merely this to my dear friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who spoke about the mills of New England, and to my dear friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], who spoke about the mills under the Republican administration—that our mills are not moving from Massachusetts into the South any more; they are moving into South America. They are raising cotton in South America, paying cheap peon wages, and they are making textiles in South America, paying cheap peon wages. They are going to ship these textiles into the United States and take the market away from the southern cotton grower, from the southern textile mills, as well as from the northern textile mills, and they are going to do this with the help of these reciprocal treaties. In other words, we are going to help them to kill our own home industries. Let this sink in on my friends, the Members from the South, for their own toes are being stepped on now. I got this information—and it is authentic—from the manager of a steamship company which has already taken six new England mills, with all their machinery, down into South America. I appeal to the Members on my own Democratic side to think this matter over carefully when they cast their vote on this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an extract from the minority report.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it is most refreshing to listen to a Democrat from the State of Massachusetts who is willing to stand before the Congress and tell the truth about conditions as they exist as a result of the legislation being considered by the Committee. He is to be commended for his courageous stand, and for not being willing to be a rubber stamp for a group who desire to continue legislation here that is against the best interests of the American people.

I have always had a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Mississippi, who just addressed the committee, and for his judgment, but after listening to his discussion today and reading the testimony of some of the men who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in behalf of this legislation, I must say that politics makes strange bedfellows, for we now find the gentleman from Mississippi sleeping in the same political bed with the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, both being in favor of the same legislation, trying to put through something here that will be detrimental to agriculture in the Northern States and detrimental to a large portion of American labor.

I was surprised also to learn from the gentleman from Mississippi that he intends to punish, or it is his policy to punish the farmers of the Northern States, particularly the dairy farmers, by having the southern farmers take away the dairy business just as he claims they are doing in connection with taking away the spindles from the New England States. We in the Northern States and the dairy interests do not object to a gradual normal expansion of the dairy business in the Southern States, but we do object to the present policy of having the Government finance large dairy herds and creameries throughout the South so that the farmers in the Southern States may go into the dairy business and take the business away from the farmers up in our country who have been engaged in that business for the past 50 years. Our people are not subsidized. In the dairy business they have not been subsidized under the present New Deal program that has been in effect during the last 4 years. We have asked for no subsidies. All we ask for is that we may have the American markets for the products we produce from the dairy cow without foreign interference.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. May I ask the gentleman if the Government bought the dairy herds for the farmers of Minnesota?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. No. The dairy herds of the farmers of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, and other dairy States have been built up over the past 50 or 60 years through a gradual improvement of the herds, and they now have some of the finest herds in the world.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And this was all done at the expense entirely of the farmers themselves?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. At their own expense and through the trial-and-error system, which has been so successful in this country.

The farmers in the United States 4 years ago were asked to take 40,000,000 acres of land out of cultivation because we were producing too much in the way of agricultural commodities. The farmers, generally, complied with that. They were glad to work out something that would improve their condition and the condition of the economic structure of the United States. But they found as soon as they had taken their land out of cultivation in this country the administration, by its free-trade and reciprocal-trade policy, was inviting foreign farmers to produce more and to ship those commodities into this country to take the place of the commodities our farmers were required to produce less of. This is the most un-American scheme that has ever been forced on American agriculture.

It might be said in this reciprocal-trade policy our farmers are being benefited or someone is being benefited. I realize if it were not for the fact someone was being benefited, the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce would not appear before Congress and ask to have this legislation enacted into law. I will tell you who is receiving the benefit. Some of the large machinery manufacturers of this country, and particularly the manufacturers of agricultural machinery, who have increased their exports of farm machinery to foreign farmers so that these foreign farmers can produce more of the things we have taken out of production and ship them into this country to be sold in competition with the things that we should have our own American markets for.

Mr. Chairman, I want to see our export trade increased, but I do not want to see it increased at the expense of the farmers and of the American laboring men here in the United States. Do you realize we still have around 9,000,000 people unemployed and that we have between fifteen and twenty million people on the relief rolls in the United States despite the fact it is claimed by the present administration prosperity has returned to this country? Why, we could put back to work more than 5,000,000 American citizens today in factories and on the farms if we would only protect the competitive market in the United States for the American citizens and let them have this market without foreign interference. [Applause.]

Yesterday, when this bill was up for discussion, I understood the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY] to say that no specific objections were being raised against the continuance of the reciprocal trade agreement powers in the hands of the Executive. Evidently the gentleman failed to understand the specific objections raised by the many witnesses who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, of which he is a distinguished member, as I am sure he would not deliberately mislead the members of this Committee or the people of the country.

As a matter of fact, serious opposition has been registered against the reciprocal-trade policies of this administration by many individuals and representatives of reputable organizations. In order to keep the record straight, I wish to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the American Farm Bureau, the National Grange, the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, the National Dairy Union, and the National Cooperative Council have all gone on record either asking for a repeal of the law or demanding the adoption of amendments to circumscribe the authority of the President to negotiate trade treaties or agreements.

In order that the country may know that there are specific objections to the continuation of the administration's reciprocal-trade policies, I desire at this point to quote seven objections raised in the minority report:

House Joint Resolution 96 continues the present Trade Agreements Act with all its defects, without change. It is subject to the same criticisms which we interposed with respect to the act when it was originally under consideration, and the results since its enactment have justified our objections at that time.

It continues, first, to delegate to the executive branch of the Government, contrary to the Constitution of the United States, the tariff, taxation, and treaty-making powers of Congress.

Second, to take away from American producers the right which they ordinarily would have had under section 516 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to litigate matters arising out of the trade agreements, including the question of constitutionality.

Third, to deny the Congress an opportunity to approve or reject the trade agreements, however injurious may be their effect upon domestic producers.

Fourth, to ignore the principle of protection for American agriculture, industry, and labor by permitting tariff rates fixed by Congress to be altered without reference to domestic production costs.

Fifth, to deny American producers an adequate opportunity to be heard on the actual terms of the trade agreements before they become effective.

Sixth, to provide for the general extension of the concessions made under a trade agreement with a single country to all other countries in the world, notwithstanding the known existing discriminations against American commerce by many foreign countries.

Seventh, to permit the Executive, in effect, to bind the hands of Congress by "freezing" the existing tariff or excise treatment of articles with respect to which the Congress may, in the exercise of its constitutional responsibilities and duties, wish to legislate in the future.

In addition to the objections raised by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, I wish to again call your attention to the fact that we still have millions of unemployed in this country as well as scores of millions on public relief. Our main effort today should be to find work for our unemployed citizens, rather than to continue the policy of giving work to foreign farmers and laboring men so that they may produce more competitive products for shipment into this country.

It is estimated that if our own farmers and laboring men could have the full benefit of the American market on competitive products, more than 5,000,000 farmers and laboring men could be put back to work on the farms and in the factories of the United States. Under the present un-American policy we are providing work for foreign labor and a market for their products wholly at the expense of the American people.

Why beat around the bush and continue to try to fool our people with honeyed words? Why not be honest about it and give them the truth, and then get down to business and legislate for the welfare of this country and its people?

The President might feel that he has a mandate to continue giving away our domestic markets. If he has that opinion in regard to his vote in Minnesota, he is mistaken; for the majority of our citizens on the farms and in the cities and villages are bitterly opposed to the present reciprocal-trade agreements and the continuation of the law which gives the Executive the right to negotiate them.

I realize the futility of any attempt to defeat this resolution; but, as far as I am concerned, I would be derelict in my duties as a Representative from Minnesota if I did not raise my voice in protest and urge the defeat of the resolution which continues the authority in the President to negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries. It is my hope that when the final vote is taken there will be enough Members here who are willing to forget partisanship and begin their voting for the benefit of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief excerpt from the Brazilian agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OR FREE TRADE

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat puzzled by the doctrine which has been enunciated here as to whether or not the gentlemen of the majority stand by their platform in favor of protection or not. The party platform was rather clear in the enunciation of that principle when the gentleman was questioned yesterday. Before the Committee on Ways and Means the very able Under Secretary stated, according to the reports, that no one now seriously contended in favor of the principle of free trade. That statement may well be commended to the consideration of his distinguished chief, who has been for a political generation an arch advocate of the evils of protection and the virtue of free trade. There seems to be great difficulty in finding out where we stand.

The Smoot-Hawley tariff is denounced as being responsible for the very distressing conditions which have prevailed in the United States, yet it has remained upon the statute books for 4 years under the present administration. The only changes that they have had the legislative fortitude to enact were those that resulted from reciprocal-trade agreements, which it must be admitted have been very much moderated by their hesitation in ending the prosperity of the industries for which they assume to stand.

SMOOT-HAWLEY BILL

If the Smoot-Hawley bill is responsible for all our troubles, why has it not long since been repealed? If the principle of protection is responsible for all our ills, why are we not privileged to try out something else beside the somewhat milk-and-water prescriptions of free trade which we have received in recent days? The steady change in the balance of trade against the United States under the 3 years of the operation of the reciprocal-trade agreements is very definite indication of the direction in which we are pointed.

CANADIAN AGREEMENT

I want particularly to refer to the Canadian agreement as one experienced not only on this side of the line with the agricultural activities in my own State of Maine, but also one associated for a period with a rather large agricultural operation in western Canada. There I learned that what the Canadian farmers desire is to buy cheap American machinery. They were insistently demanding the lowering of the tariff barriers on American machinery and automobiles in order that they might secure these cheap products of the mass industries of the United States. Meanwhile the same farmers very earnestly desired to penetrate the great markets to the south—to swap 10,000,000 consumers in Canada for 110,000,000 consumers in the United States. My criticism of the Canadian agreement is that in large measure those thrifty Yankees to the north traded us tariff concessions on farm machinery that they very much desired in exchange for a lowering of our farm tariffs upon products we did not at all desire. If the Canadian agreement means anything, it means lowering machinery tariffs in Canada and lowering farm tariffs in the United States. In other words, they win both ways.

The present situation in my own State with regard to potatoes need not blind us at all as to the consequences of admitting Canadian potatoes over our tariff walls in any period of normal production when it spells disaster to the producers in this country who have demonstrated their capacity to supply every legitimate demand of the American market throughout a long period of years.

MOST-FAVORED-NATION CLAUSE

I want also to call attention to the most-favored-nation clause, which provides that every concession we make to any country goes immediately to the other 80 countries with which we have commercial agreements. Yet in the Canadian agreement we are excluded from the benefits of any concessions Canada may make to any one of the British commonwealth of nations covering one-fifth of the population of the globe. So far as Uncle Sam is concerned, this is the "least-favored-nation clause."

BRAZILIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

In the Brazilian trade agreement, as a result of the violation of every sense of decency in some of the earlier agreements by those with whom we traded, they have introduced a clause which prohibits the levying of taxes upon any internal products in this country or on any internal taxes upon imports higher than those that now prevail.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER The Brazilian agreement, with this most extraordinary Article VII, which appears, so far as I know, for the first time in this agreement, presents a challenge as to the power of this Congress to abdicate its legislative power. I read you a portion of that clause where it says that—

All articles produced in this country or Brazil after importation into the other country, shall be exempt from all internal taxes, fees, charges, or exactions other or higher than those payable on like articles of national origin, except as required by laws of either country in effect on the day of the signature of this agreement.

We are told that this provision was the result of one of our good neighbors who, after the execution of an agreement with us giving us concessions, imposed internal taxes that practically prohibited the exportation of our apple crop, about which my friend from Virginia spoke yesterday. Very well; is not this a compelling illustration of the difficulties which the United States faces in dealing with other nations with a moral atmosphere, apparently, very different from our own, when we are committing ourselves with obligations which are not recognized by our good neighbors overseas? Thus we are not merely entering into an agreement, but we are tying our hands against the possibility of levying any taxes in this country, no matter what crisis may subsequently develop to demand that we shall legislate along these lines. The extraordinary character of this provision——

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why should we not in this law provide for eliminating that portion of it if such a condition arises?

Mr. BREWSTER. The gentleman will have to ask the people who negotiated the agreement.

Mr. McFARLANE. I mean why should we not be able to handle that at this time by writing a proper provision into this law by way of amendment?

Mr. BREWSTER. I should be very glad to join the gentleman in supporting such an amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Maine will certainly not support the position that the language in the Brazilian trade agreement divests the Congress of the United States of the power to levy taxes upon any article that may hereafter be imported?

Mr. BREWSTER. I trust the gentleman will take some of his own time to interpret this language in any other possible way.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman think that such language in a trade agreement would take from the Congress the power to legislate?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is certainly designed to do that. I will ask the gentlemen who happen to be here whether they can interpret this language in any other way:

All articles—

I do not enumerate the details—

shall be exempt from all internal taxes, fees, charges, or exactions.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Of course, that could not have any effect on subsequent legislation by the Congress.

Mr. BREWSTER. Then does the gentleman say the Congress of the United States will violate this agreement?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No; I did not say that.

Mr. BREWSTER. How else can they do it?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But they have the power to do it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes; they have the power, but they would be violating an agreement into which your State Department has entered with a foreign nation. With this notice of this provision in the Brazilian agreement before you, you will be giving an unqualified extension of the Presidential powers for 3 years, with full knowledge that the Secretary of State has exercised under this authority so extraordinary a power as to bind the Congress of the United States against the imposition of purely internal taxes. And I say it is absolutely wrong.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman has not indicated one article upon which he would suggest a tax. Take coffee, for instance.

Mr. BREWSTER. Oh, just 1 minute. I wish the gentleman to use his own time to expound this matter. I am stating my views here now, and I trust the gentleman will take his own time to do that.

That is the most amazing article to be found in the entire history of these agreements to date. If my friend from Kentucky is correct that it clearly exceeds the power of anyone to enter into such an agreement, it is another demonstration of the unwisdom of these acts.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Is not that the theory of this entire administration, that the legislative power shall be taken away from Congress and lodged in one or two individuals in the executive department?

Mr. BREWSTER. In increasing measure, both the judicial and the legislative powers would seem to be transferred to the Executive.

The consequence of these trade agreements we do not fully yet sense, because I am ready to recognize that they have moved with some degree of moderation and circumspection. But during the next 3 years I predict a holocaust that will sacrifice large sections of our population both in labor and agriculture, and I predict an overwhelming repudiation of this course.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. With their paying 4 cents an hour to girls in Japan in the textile industry, how long is it going to be possible for the textile industry in North and South Carolina or Massachusetts to continue to exist?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is not going to be until the end of the next 4 years, I think we are safe in saying, and I predict that as a consequence of this policy, when it sinks into the consciousness of the American farmer and wage earner, if they shall have the courage to carry out the things they now contemplate, many American dollars will be transferred into alien pockets to the sorrow of American farmers and laborers alike.

THE CANADIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

The recent firm potato market must not blind us to the effects of the Canadian trade agreement in admitting Canadian potatoes in any year of normal potato production in the United States.

POTATO PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES

No one has ever questioned the capacity of the United States to produce all the potatoes that are required both for seed and table stock. Every car of foreign potatoes entering our markets depresses to that extent the price and the prospect of the American producer—just as an opportunity comes to recoup in some measure the terrific losses of recent years when potatoes descended to 10 cents a barrel.

Protection for American farmers and laborers has been the pledge of both great political parties in recent campaigns. This pledge is deliberately violated by the admission of products which the United States farmer is able to turn out in sufficient quantities to supply all American demand.

Temporary concessions that may be necessary as a result of catastrophes of Nature afford no warrant for continuing reductions in duty which are provided by the existing agreement with very great prejudice to the American farmer and laboring man.

PROTECTIVE PRINCIPLE

The protective principle is not susceptible of partial application. Everyone alike is entitled to its beneficence, if all are to enjoy the normal advantages of living within the protective tariff wall.

All parties now render lip service to the protective principle in their party platforms. It is increasingly evident, however, that the protective principle would be much more intelligently and considerately applied by its lifelong friends than by its historic foes.

BALANCE OF TRADE

The steady shift in the past 3 years in the balance of trade against the United States is sufficient indication as to the objectives that are in view. Continuance of this policy must mean the ultimate wrecking of the economic structure of the United States.

If the high-tariff policy of a former administration was responsible for the economic crisis of 1929, why in 4 years has the present administration not possessed the legislative fortitude to proceed for modification of this policy along historic lines and with equality of treatment to every nation on the earth?

Would not this be a far more effective and honest application of the policy of the good neighbor?

ONE-THIRD OF PEOPLE IN DISTRESS

We were recently told by one high in authority that after 4 years of this administration one-third of the people of the United States were undernourished and underfed and underhoused. How long before one will be justified in concluding that these unfortunate conditions are in some measure the result of the tariff policies pursued by the administration in power now?

BRAZILIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

The Brazilian trade agreement contains a novel clause that will again seriously test the powers of the Congress to abdicate its legislative authority. Article 7 of the Brazilian agreement provides:

All articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States of America or the United States of Brazil shall, after importation into the other country, be exempt from all internal taxes, fees, charges, or exactions other or higher than those payable on like articles of national origin or any other foreign origin, except as required by laws of either country in effect on the day of the signature of this agreement.

Articles of growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States of America or the United States of Brazil enumerated and described in schedules I and II, respectively, after importation into the other country, shall be exempt from any National or Federal internal taxes, fees, charges, or exactions other or higher than those imposed or required to be imposed by laws of the United States of Brazil and the United States of America, respectively, in effect on the day of the signature of this agreement, subject to constitutional requirements.

TIES CONGRESS ON TAXES

If the provisions of this article are to be taken at face value the consequences upon the tax structure of the United States in years to come may be profound. While these agreements do not attain the authority of a treaty they yet will present constantly hampering problems in the exercise of the taxing power of the Congress and possibly of the legislatures of the States.

This clause was apparently introduced as a result of the attempt of some nations involved in earlier trade agreements to take domestic action that should nullify the effects of the agreement with the United States. This illuminates the difficulties which we face in the application of this policy if good faith shall be lacking upon the other side. It reveals the problems and the perils of the agreements and the resultant obligations when the "moral atmosphere" of the obligated nations may be as far apart as the poles.

The substantial maintenance of the tariff structure of the much condemned Smoot-Hawley schedules with notable exceptions is sufficient evidence of the vitality and the justice of the protective tariff principle. Witness particularly the evidence of Under Secretary Sayre that no one now seriously urges the principle of free trade. This testimony may be cordially commended to the attention of his distinguished chief—the arch advocate throughout a lifetime of the wickedness of protection and the advantages of free trade.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, let me preface my remarks by saying that I expect to support this resolution. I believe that the reciprocal way of dealing with the tariff problem as affecting our foreign trade is the most sensible, scientific, and practical method that has yet been devised. We all know the deplorable condition into which our foreign trade had fallen when the act was first passed, and while probably all of the benefits that have resulted to our export trade in the last two and a half years have not been solely because of the reciprocal trade agreements, yet they doubtless have been of considerable advantage in bringing about the revival in our foreign trade that has taken place. We cannot make progress economically if we maintain a policy of isolation and self-sufficient nationalism.

We have in existence at the present time an Antidumping Act, and when the Trade Agreements Act was first passed, the antidumping law was not repealed. This indicates one is considered the necessary complement of the other. We have in effect at this time laws in this country relative to the Federal Trade Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission regulates practices in domestic trade. We should have a code of fair practice for import trade as well as for domestic industry. This can be accomplished through the enactment of a modern antidumping act. The present statute was passed in 1921, and because of restrictive court interpretation, depreciated and managed currencies, coupled with subsidies and other changes that have come about in world trade, the act is of little value today.

I believe we need in this country a new antidumping act, so that there may be a regulation of import trade as well as a policing of domestic trade. No tariff will meet the situation that confronts us with reference to importations from many of these low-cost producing countries, and I have in mind particularly Japan. Japan gives ship subsidies. Many industries are feeling the stifling competition of low-cost producing nations, particularly Japan. Standards of living are not American standards in these countries. Japanese labor receives about one-tenth as much a day as American labor. With its depreciated currency, government subsidies to manufacturers and to shipping, its child labor, and production of many articles under sweatshop conditions, American industry cannot compete with Japanese production. I believe that the Congress should give consideration to the drafting of a new law which would prevent the dumping of merchandise manufactured in these low-cost producing countries into our country, to the detriment of the American workingman.

The American cost of production in this country, both for farm products and for the products of efficiently managed industry, should be taken into consideration in the making of reciprocal-trade agreements. Restriction of quantity should be made in the case of highly competitive products. Otherwise we will be flooded with a great deal of merchandise from these low-cost producing countries, and instead of building up employment in this country we are going to have less employment and greater unemployment among American labor.

Dumping of foreign merchandise into the United States at prices below its fair value is an unfair practice, and jeopardizes our domestic industries beyond any protection that can possibly be given them by usual and ordinary rates of duty, whether such rates be established by the Congress or by the President under some special trade agreement authority that may be vested in him. Freedom of competition in world trade should not be broadened into license to foreign producers to throttle domestic production and control our markets. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

CONGRESSMAN TREADWAY AND THE TRADE-AGREEMENTS PROGRAM

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and his colleagues on the Republican side have made a number of somersaults in opposing the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. On one hand they give lip service to the encouragement of foreign trade and the reciprocity idea, which, by the way, Republicans in the past have with good sense supported; and, on the other hand, proceed to suggest a string of amendments that will effectively hamstring and obstruct its operation. Surely, if Mr. TREADWAY and his Republican friends have a sincere interest in having the United States increase its foreign trade, they should unqualifiedly support the pending resolution for the extension of the act. It provides the most effective reciprocity measure ever devised for obtaining the reductions and removal of foreign trade barriers and which assures, through competent and experienced governmental agencies, only such limited reductions in our tariff as is necessary to effect reductions in foreign trade barriers. The limited and well-guarded concessions are made only after careful examination and study of the facts in each instance. As a result international trade, which was largely lost through the drastic retaliation by foreign countries following the passage of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1930 has been expanded. Surely the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is aware that this country has always been most prosperous when its foreign trade imports as well as exports have been at highest levels. This is not a mere coincidence. A large import and export trade means greater production, greater consumption, more employment, and a generally higher purchasing power and standard of living for American workers.

The New England States have an important stake in the foreign trade of the United States. In 1929 merchandise, estimated at $200,000,000, was exported from that area. By 1932 the export trade of the six New England States had fallen to about $57,000,000, a decline of 72 percent.

In my State of Connecticut exports dropped from $53,000,000 to $15,000,000 during that period. But since the first treaty was promulgated under the reciprocal-trade law in August 1934, only 2½ years ago, foreign markets have been reopened for many Connecticut products. To mention but a few—typewriters; cotton yarn and products; tooth powders, pastes, and toilet preparations; hardware; copper and brass products; machine and hand tools; and automobile parts and accessories. The important concessions obtained for Connecticut products under the various trade agreements could not have been obtained if the United States, in turn, had not made some reciprocal concessions. These reciprocal concessions have been on carefully selected products with a view to avoiding injury to established domestic industries. Before the reduction of any tariff rate is considered, every effort is made to obtain complete information and views from all persons interested. I know it to be a fact that during the public hearings and throughout the negotiations representatives of Connecticut industries were in constant touch with governmental departments and had every opportunity to present their views in detail. It might amaze the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] to find how many concessions were obtained in the various trade agreements for products of his State. It may amaze other Members who claim to be opposed to this bill to find how many concessions have been granted for products from their respective States.

One gains the impression listening to the debate that these gentlemen have been primarily interested in finding someone who fancied they had a grievance because of some modest reduction in duty which may have been made. Their search for ammunition with which to attack this bill seems to have blinded them to the benefits which their own communities obtained through the trade agreements.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and his Republican cohorts would give the impression that they have a monopoly of interest in the welfare of the American workingman, farmer, and businessman. They seem to forget while giving this lip service that the Democrats of the Roosevelt administration have, through many recovery measures, brought about greatly improved conditions. To give but a few instances: National income increased from about thirty-nine and one-half billions of dollars in 1932 to sixty billions in 1936, gross farm income from about five and one-third billions of dollars in 1932 to nine and one-half billions in 1936, and foreign trade from $2,200,000,000 in 1932 to four and nine-tenths billion dollars in 1936. I am convinced that the Trade Agreements Act has been an important factor in the recovery program. I am convinced that its extension is a necessary part in bringing our recovery program to fruition. That is why I am going to vote in favor of this resolution.

Those claiming to be opposed to trade agreements, including Congressman TREADWAY, have had considerable to say about the loss of foreign markets of farm products. They point to decreases on selected agricultural exports since the trade-agreements program was undertaken. But they make no mention of droughts and other contributing factors.

The opposition would like the country to forget the period in recent history which showed the greatest loss of foreign markets for agricultural products. This occurred in 1929 to 1933, while Congressman TREADWAY's party was in power. For example, in 1929 the exports of agricultural products were valued at $1,693,000,000; in 1932 they amounted to only $662,000,000. In other words, a net loss of more than $1,000,000,000.

In contrast there has been a steady and gradual increase in agricultural exports since 1932. In 1935 agricultural exports were valued at $747,000,000, and it is estimated that the exports for 1936 were, in spite of unfavorable drought conditions, greater than in 1935. Those complaining about the loss of markets of agricultural products should be called upon to examine the complete record and not pick out individual items which are favorable to their point of view. If it is true that a large part of the foreign markets for farm products is gone, who is responsible for this loss? Furthermore, does the fact that some of our markets have been lost mean that we should do nothing to reverse the trend? Should no effort be made to regain some of our lost markets?

A most peculiar inconsistency appears in Congressman TREADWAY's remarks. He bewails the fact that we have lost our foreign markets and that reductions of duty have been made. He quotes figures to show the gains in trade from 1932 to 1935, and then goes into great detail to show that the trade-treaty legislation was not passed until June 1934, and that some gains were made before that time. He labors to show that the expansion of foreign trade since the Roosevelt administration came into power is not a New Deal achievement. He correctly pointed out that only four agreements were in effect during any part of 1935, yet he and his colleagues have time and again blamed the trade-agreements program for increased imports in 1935. To his own satisfaction Congressman TREADWAY explains away the effects on one side of the trade agreements, exports, and blames the administration for an increase in the other side, imports. After stating that "hundreds of rates of duty" have been reduced, he suggests that the increase in trade appeared under "the benevolent influence of the Hawley-Smoot Act." If trade agreements have not increased trade, why do the opponents continue to bewail the evil effects of such agreements on the ground that there has been an increase in imports, whereas the Ways and Means Committee in its majority report ably and conclusively shows that only a small part of the increase in imports can be attributed to the trade-agreements program.

I would like to remind my Republican friends from New England that the Roosevelt administration has not hesitated, in spite of the trade-agreements program, to invoke, when necessary, the flexible provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide adequate protection to our textiles, increasing the duty on certain constructions of cotton cloth 42 percent and succeeding in getting the Japanese to limit their shipments to the United States on velveteens, corduroys, and a long list of other textile products.

Trade agreements make for a better international understanding. They have become a well-recognized movement toward world peace. Many organizations have endorsed the trade agreements program as a peace movement. The program is an attempt to facilitate a cooperative solution of some of the undesirable changes which have dislocated world trade in recent years. It is cherished by leaders in the administration because they believe the principle upon which it is based is a true foundation for peaceful relations between nations.

Peace cannot be preserved by noble expressions of sentiment. It is a matter of practical political and economic cooperation between the nations of the world. The trade-agreements program is an attempt to rebuild a sound and healthy trade which will promote that economic recovery which is essential to a peaceful world. In a more prosperous world there would undoubtedly be fewer dictators, less class struggle, and few of the incidents which breed war. It is a matter of enlightened self-interest for the United States to promote increased international trade in order to remove one of the outstanding causes of impending conflicts.

I am convinced that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] will be no more prophetic in his dire claims against the present resolution than he was in 1934, when he said:

> In the coming elections the Democrats will have to justify their votes in giving the President this unconstitutional and dictatorial authority over the tariff and over all domestic industries dependent upon tariff protection. They will have to answer for giving him this power. * * *
> The Republican Party awaits with expectancy the opportunity to meet the issues raised by this bill before the American people in November. * * *

In the election of November 1934 the country did answer. There was an increase of the number of Members on the Democratic side of the House. In November 1936 the people again answered with an additional gain of Democratic seats. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts await the next election with expectancy? [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the pending resolution—House Joint Resolution 96—extends the authority of the President to enter into foreign trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by the act approved in June 1934, for a period of 3 years, from June 1937 to June 1940.

The present law has been in operation 2 years and 6 months. It has proved to be one of the most helpful and effective measures passed by the Congress. A few years ago it was the policy of nations to erect such high tariff walls that trade between nations had become completely paralyzed and international commerce destroyed. The United States fell a victim to this legislation. It cut off its own commerce. No foreign markets were available. No outlet for our goods or commodities because we were denying our neighbors the right to import their merchandise to our country, because of our trade barriers and high tariff walls. Destruction, bankruptcy, and ruin followed. No nation or people can live unto themselves. The executive heads of all other governments and trading nations have the power and authority to act speedily and promptly. This power was given our President, for the first time, in June 1934. Since then foreign-trade agreements have been made with 15 nations of the world. Important and new markets have been opened up for our people. We no longer discriminate against others unless they first discriminate against us; and, as a result of this "good neighbor" policy, ever-widening and increasing markets have opened to our producers. We have granted equality in treatment to other nations and demanded it for ourselves. Our export business has rapidly increased during the past 2 years, and at the same time the interest of our people in the domestic market has been fully protected. No longer is each nation threatened with world isolation. The policy of our Government, under President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull, has been a beacon light to all other nations. It has brought an era of peace and good will between nations and people without rivalry or friction. It has meant the greatest good to the greatest number.

We must continue this program of expansion of mutually profitable trade. We must have a greater volume of foreign trade. We must restore foreign markets. I have introduced H. R. 2540, entitled "A bill to promote foreign trade and to create foreign trade promotion corporations, and to provide for the building of suitable places in which manufacturers, exporters, producers, and growers of American products may exhibit such products in foreign countries and solicit sales and fill orders therefor from foreign purchasers." These marts, or market places, to be leased to exporters, producers, and growers of American products. I will discuss this measure and its merits more in detail later on the floor of the House. I wanted simply to call attention to this proposed legislation and to say that it fits into the picture of the resolution we are now discussing, and if enacted into law, will likewise help to increase very greatly our export business. This is vitally important to America.

May I at this time speak a few words of commendation in behalf of our Secretary of State, who has been largely responsible for the success of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. It has been his persistent and continuous efforts that have made possible the present favorable trade balance. Additional agreements will be made in the future with other countries, thus affording still better and broader markets for our products and for foreign commodities. Such a program has the support of the great majority of the people and of the producers in our country. In 1936 our exports were almost $200,000,000 larger than in 1935. In 1937 they will show a still greater increase. Let us give credit for this great national reform and progressive legislation to whom credit is due, the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State. The people of the Nation, regardless of party or creed, hold him in the highest esteem. He is trusted by the people. He is respected by all nations and countries. He is the present leader, world-wide, for peace, international peace, not only for our own country, not only for the Americas, but for all the nations of the earth. He holds aloft the banner of peace and good will among men. His influence in the past 3 years has been felt around the world; not alone in North and South America but to the uttermost parts of the earth.

It is a source of just pride and great honor to speak for his people back home in Tennessee, and in the Fourth Congressional District, which he so ably represented for more than a quarter of a century in Congress, in both the upper and lower Houses. The people of my district, his home district, and the people of my State love, honor, and revere him. He is the idol of his party. He is a student of world history and world economics. His heart beats in sympathy with his fellow man. He is a friend of the common man, a defender of the forgotten and neglected man. He is fair and just to all. He is the premier member of the Cabinet. He is a great statesman, a great Democrat, a great Tennessean, and would make the people of the United States a great and good President. He would be a worthy successor to our present matchless leader, Franklin Roosevelt, who serves America so nobly and well today. No other man in the United States, no other statesman living is so well equipped by training in national and international affairs to succeed to the Presidency and serve our Nation and party as Cordell Hull. History tells of the achievements of Jackson, Johnson, and Polk from my State. All three great men, and made great Presidents, but neither of these was so well trained or experienced in national and international affairs as Cordell Hull. He has served faithfully, efficiently, and well the country and the party. His execution of the foreign-trade agreements and his foreign policy were so successful as to prove insurmountable barriers to the late candidate for President on the Republican ticket. Only 2 States failed to endorse the Hull and Roosevelt policies out of the 48. This speaks for itself. I hope the Honorable Cordell Hull will be called in 1940 by his party to lead a victorious and triumphant march to the White House. If so, it will mean a continuation of good government of, for, and by the people.

I make these statements and predictions upon my own responsibility as a Democratic Member of the House, interested only in my party and in the future welfare of my country. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN].

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain charts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, on June 16, 1936, I protested against the unjust and unfair sugar quota given to Louisiana and Florida and pleaded for an increased quota for Louisiana. And on June 17, 1936, in a debate on the floor on Senate Joint Resolution 278, made the following statement:

Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Texas that we of the cane-producing sections of Louisiana cannot vote for this resolution. We are protesting against the unfairness of the quota, and we shall continue to protest. We believe that a new quota should be allocated; in other words, the offshore quota should be reduced. We do not believe that the producers of sugar in the continental United States should be made to suffer.

My appeal is directed to the consideration of the great and immediate good that will come to the small farmer and laborer by a more liberal attitude on the part of our Government toward the Louisiana sugar industry. Their lands are well adapted to sugarcane culture and they know how to grow cane. Many of the small farmers were forced out of production during the depression and because of the disease in the sugarcane, but now that the crop is again profitable and the sugarcane is healthy and prolific, Government restriction prevents these little fellows from reaping the benefits which Congress must have intended should be made available to them.

I may say that we appreciate the many courtesies extended to us by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. We know we have his sympathy, and we have assurance that in the next Congress a bill will be considered which if enacted will give some measure of relief to us in the unfortunate position we presently occupy, and I trust it will be the bill introduced by Senator OVERTON, of Louisiana.

I now, Mr. Chairman, desire to make some observations with respect to what we of Louisiana and Florida believe to be a reasonable and fair quota, but I think it is also fair that I should present a picture of what took place during and before the quota policy was in order: First, I believe a fair continental quota would solve the problems; second, I believe if the quota allocated to Louisiana and Florida be increased in proportion and in line with their production, as done with other areas, that would be acceptable for the present; third, I do not accept the statement that because sugar can be produced cheaply in other parts of the world it is wise to destroy the sugar industry in continental United States of America. We had an example during the World War.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the American Sugar Cane League and its 8,000 members and all sugarcane producers in Louisiana I have consistently demanded the elimination of any quota restrictive of the continental production of sugar, and upon all occasions have declared that an equitable settlement of the Louisiana quota problem is a necessary condition precedent to any commitment on proposed legislation, or any part thereof. The Sugar Cane League has recently reiterated its declared position of unwillingness to support any proposal which fails to provide an adequate quota for Louisiana, for the simple reason that there can be no equitable solution of the problems of sugarcane growers of our State unless the present restrictive quota figures are removed entirely or replaced with a quota for Louisiana based on the normal production records of the past and the production and prospects of the present, or there be provided by law a continental quota equally advantageous to the growers of all the sugar-producing States.

Mr. Chairman, I shall now give a brief history of sugar legislation which finally led to the quota policy.

I am pleased to direct attention to some official statistics regarding our industry, with appropriate explanations. The greatest production of Louisiana sugar, according to the records appearing in the United States Department of Agriculture Yearbooks and figures published by the United States Tariff Commission, were for the years 1904 when 398,195 short tons and 1908 when 397,600 short tons of actual sugars "as made" were produced. It is well known that a large percentage of the Louisiana production in those years was plantation granulated and yellow clarified sugars, so that in order to determine the "raw value" it is necessary to take into account these high-testing sugars, because for the purpose of quotas and Federal regulations all sugars are converted into "short tons raw value." Thus it is accurate to state that in each of the years 1904 and 1908 the production of sugar in Louisiana was approximately 415,000 short tons raw value.

As far as the records of the United States Department of Agriculture Yearbooks show, the year of greatest production of sugarcane was in 1911 when 5,887,292 short tons of sugarcane were grown on 310,000 acres. Although in 1911 the average yield of sugarcane per acre was 19 tons, the sugar made per ton of cane was only 120 pounds (due to an early severe freeze), which accounts for the fact that only 352,874 short tons of sugar was produced in that year.

According to the published records of the United States Tariff Commission, the continental United States cane sugar delivered during 1909 for consumption in the United States was 459,155 short tons "refined and/or consumption basis." At that time Texas was producing an average of less than 15,000 tons annually, and Florida was producing none, so that practically this entire amount was Louisiana sugar; therefore, it can be safely stated that the amount of Louisiana sugar delivered for consumption in 1909 was well in excess of 450,000 "short tons raw value." As quotas represent deliveries for consumption, rather than production, this sugar in excess of 450,000 short tons raw value represents the peak of Louisiana's past performance in furnishing sugar to the United States market.

Since 1910 the production of sugar in Louisiana is represented by the following figures taken from yearbooks of the Department of Agriculture. It should be noted that these production figures are given in short tons but are not converted to "raw value", which is the current basis of discussion with reference to quotas and all matters pertaining to legislation. Louisiana has always produced a considerable proportion of its sugar for direct consumption, and this fact must be taken into consideration to determine the "short tons raw value" of the figures presented below:

1936 (not complete)

Mr. Chairman, prior to the inauguration of the New Deal, the Louisiana sugar industry had taken the position before the Tariff Commission that the tariff on sugar was being largely nullified by the overexpansion of sugar production in the islands, particularly in the Philippines, and therefore Louisiana openly advocated a change in Federal policy so that the industry would not depend exclusively upon the tariff. But we asked that the problems of the growers and processors of the United States would be recognized as an obligation of the Federal Government demanding practical fulfillment.

When in the summer of 1933 the Secretary of Agriculture proposed that the sugar-producing areas furnishing sugar to the United States market enter into a stabilization agreement under the A. A. A., Louisiana responded immediately and cooperated with the Secretary's representative. Under the sugar stabilization agreement all producing areas agreed that Louisiana should have a quota of 250,000 tons and that Florida should have a quota of 60,000 tons. These figures were intended to be representative of actual production at the time—1933 production was 205,000 tons—and of conservative expectancy during the life of the stabilization agreement.

Later the Secretary of Agriculture rejected the sugar stabilization agreement and recommended to the President that sugar be made the subject of a distinctive amendment to the A. A. A. There was opposition to the proposal from all areas at first, until Louisiana led the way by agreeing to a managed economy in sugarcane agriculture under the A. A. A. Something had to be done to cut down the overproduction of the islands and the surplus of sugar in the United States market.

Even at the time of the congressional hearings on the Jones bill and the Costigan bill in the early part of 1934 there were indications of hesitation and of opposition from all producing areas. In fact, President Roosevelt, having suggested in his letter of February 8, 1934, that Louisiana and Florida should have a joint quota of 260,000 tons, the Louisiana sugar industry found itself unable to agree to this restrictive figure, because even at that time there was positive evidence that by means of new varieties of sugarcane Louisiana was at the point of reaching the volume of tonnage and extraction toward which the industry had been working progressively for more than 10 years. Realization came in 1934 when the Louisiana production improved to 234,000 tons, and in 1935 when the production reached 333,000 tons despite A. A. A. acreage reduction; 1936 prospects favor an equal or increased production.

It has never been explained why Louisiana and Florida were given a joint quota of 260,000 tons but it seems to have been just a balance left over after allocating prospective sugar-consumption requirements to other producing areas. Under the sugar stabilization agreement all producing areas had agreed to quotas totaling 310,000 tons for Louisiana and Florida.

Nevertheless, upon Louisiana's vigorous protest against the 260,000 tons, the growers of Louisiana were repeatedly told by officials of the Department of Agriculture that strict performance would not be required on the basis of 260,000 tons, although for the purposes of the basic quotas they considered it necessary to leave the amount in the bill. In explanation they pointed to section 8a (1) (C), which they stated had been deliberately inserted in the bill for the exclusive purpose of taking care of Louisiana and Florida in case our expectations of increased production were realized. This anticipated interpretation of the so-called section C was confirmed in congressional committee reports and in the Halls of Congress, where the language was amended, strengthened, on the motion of the late Senator Fletcher, of Florida, for the purpose of removing doubts as to the meaning of section C.

In view of the wholehearted cooperation of Louisiana in the plans of the administration, and the direct promises made that Louisiana's problems would receive sympathetic treatment in the administration of the law, there was good cause to expect a square deal. But our disillusionment was not very long in making its appearance, because the sugar section and the Secretary of Agriculture refused to recognize the status quo in sugarcane for Louisiana at the time when, in the fall of 1934, the crop for 1935 was being planted. At first there was temporizing, as Louisiana suggested the use of section C, but finally Louisiana was frankly told that section C might just as well never have been written because it would not be used. On the contrary, the production-adjustment contracts that were submitted to the growers required a drastic reduction in the total sugarcane acreage of Louisiana, which in many cases amounted to a reduction of 30 percent of the sugarcane acreage on individual farms. Every possible appeal was made by committees of growers going to Washington and through our Members of Congress, but to no avail.

In a broad-minded spirit Louisiana then centered its interest upon the benefit payment to be made, which might temporarily make up for the unexpected reductions. Sugar section officials announced in a press release, August 29, 1934, that they estimated Louisiana sugarcane growers would receive approximately $4,000,000 in benefits, which represented their intention and plan. But when the parity formula on a tonnage basis was worked out, the sugar section officials found that they would be forced to revise their figures, and they issued another press release November 21, 1934, estimating that the benefits to Louisiana would be $6,000,000. Subsequently, when actual records became available and the formula was applied, it developed that the total payments would probably exceed $7,000,000. So the sugar section stopped issuing estimates in press releases, but began to concentrate on chiseling down the payments just as they had already cut down the acreage. The quota of 260,000 having been assigned to Louisiana and Florida, the sugar section announced that Florida's share would be 39,800. Although it was not announced, the share of Louisiana became what was left, or 220,200 tons.

It must be emphasized here that the Louisiana 1934 crop had been planted before the sugar quota bill was introduced, and the production could not have been affected by the new law. Nevertheless, benefit payments were calculated on the basis of 88 percent of the crop, which was estimated to represent the difference between actual production and the base allotment assigned for quota purposes.

Without objecting in any manner to what was done for the beet growers, but purely for the purpose of comparing treatment received, it is appropriate to comment here that the beet growers were paid benefits for the 1934 crop on the basis of actual or estimated production, whichever was greater. It developed that in some cases in the Northwest the estimated production was more than double the actual production. Louisiana was pleased to have these unfortunate beet growers treated so generously, although we naturally resented the fact that Louisiana growers were paid on less than either actual or estimated production. This comparative discrimination explains why protests came from Louisiana, while other areas appeared satisfied.

The statistics of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics showed that the average price paid for cane in Louisiana during the 1909–14 base period adopted by the A. A. A. to determine parity, was $3.83 per ton. But the sugar section rejected "available statistics" of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics and made its own ex parte investigation, with the result that a figure of $3.73 per ton was established on some unannounced basis, with a resulting decrease in the amount of benefits to be paid to sugarcane growers. But this reduction in payments was not considered sufficient by the sugar section, so that a new formula was especially devised for Louisiana by which the payments would become $2.04 per ton for sugarcane, instead of the $2.26 per ton expected under the previously announced formula. Again a committee of growers went to Washington to seek explanations and to protest, but they were unsuccessful with the sugar section. The committee thereupon carried its appeal to Mr. J. B. Hutson, who had only recently been given supervision of the sugar section, and, after hearing the committee, the sugar section was overruled, and the payment of $2.26 per ton restored, thereby saving some $700,000 to the Louisiana sugar industry.

Later the 1935 crop began to demonstrate that the new varieties of cane would produce much more than anyone had anticipated. The problem arose of determining what should be done with the sugarcane produced in excess of the base tonnage given the State. It should be well understood that the excess sugarcane in question was being produced upon the restricted and reduced base acreage under the production-adjustment contract. At first the Sugar Section threatened to force the destruction of the excess production of sugarcane and to withhold all benefit payments from those who failed to destroy. An appeal to the Secretary of Agriculture brought about the ruling that sugarcane would not have to be destroyed, provided that it did not exceed 20 percent of the base tonnage of the grower. Ruling no. 5 was issued, by which penalties of $2 on the first 10 percent of excess and $3 on the second 10 percent of excess would be levied. But no cane above such 20 percent could be marketed without forfeiting all benefits under the contract. The growers began to figure and found that they would receive very little more than $3 per ton from the factory for their cane, from which at least $1 would have to be deducted for the expenses of cultivation and harvesting; therefore the penalties were obviously confiscatory.

Another appeal was added to the series, and the officials of the A. A. A. admitted the mistakes of ruling no. 5 and submitted a ruling no. 6 to the growers, by which, instead of a $2 penalty on the first 10 percent, there would be a $1 penalty on the first 20 percent; and instead of a $3 penalty on the second 10 percent, there would be a $1.50 on the second 20 percent, with permission to growers to deliver within the law all cane produced by them. This seems to be a good compromise under the circumstances, and the growers returned to Louisiana gratified. But a joker was inserted at the end of the proposed ruling no. 6 before it was signed by the Secretary, but without being submitted to the Louisiana committee. This joker stated that failure to sign a production-adjustment contract for 1936 would make a grower subject to the higher penalties under ruling no. 5. This seemed to be merely a sanction on the part of the A. A. A. to induce all growers to continue under the A. A. A. program; but when the Supreme Court declared all A. A. A. contracts null and void, the joker took on a new meaning through the interpretation of the sugar section that the penalties under ruling no. 5 would apply against everyone. Congress appropriated money, instructing the Secretary of Agriculture to pay all moral obligations and commitments under the A. A. A. contracts, but the sugar section refused to recognize or maintain the status of the grower existing at the time of the Supreme Court decision, at which time the growers were still negotiating but had not been offered a 1936 contract. Again repeated appeals were made but without effect, and the confiscatory penalties have been inflicted upon Louisiana to the extent of an estimated $1,900,000 loss.

The cruel effect of this final decision to insist upon penalizing growers on all excess cane at confiscatory rates, is emphasized when we consider that practically all of the small growers with excess cane consulted with the agent of the Secretary of Agriculture, the county agents, and the members of parish committees who served as a liaison between Louisiana and the A. A. A. As long as ruling no. 5 was effective the grower was told to stop harvesting cane when he reached 10-percent excess, because above that he would suffer losses. Then the announcement of ruling no. 6 came, and the grower was invariably told by these official representatives of the Secretary of Agriculture and the A. A. A., that all cane could be harvested and delivered without loss, although reduced penalties would be applied. So there is no question that the growers of Louisiana harvested their excess cane upon assurances received from official A. A. A. sources, which turned out to be entirely misleading and very costly.

By a strange course of events the Louisiana marketing quota for 1936 has been increased through changes in estimates of consumption requirements and reallocations of quotas to such an extent that all of the sugar produced by Louisiana in 1935, including the excess production, has been officially authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to be marketed as within the Louisiana quota. Contradictorily, the Secretary penalizes sugarcane production by ruling and authorizes by regulation the distribution of sugar produced from the penalized sugarcane. We pause to inquire what becomes of the declared purpose of the A. A. A. Act to restore the purchasing power of the farmer, and the "having due regard to the welfare of domestic producers" clause of the Jones-Costigan amendments.

Following the demise of the A. A. A., the Secretary of Agriculture asked the farmers of the United States to advise with him regarding a soil-conservation program at regional meetings. The farmers of the southern region met at Memphis and agreed unanimously that sugar should not be included in the general program which has to do with surplus crops, but that sugarcane and sugar beets should be the subject of a special program. The farmers' regional meetings in Chicago and in Salt Lake City agreed unanimously on the same proposition. Notwithstanding, the soil-conservation program treats sugar on the same general basis as surplus crops. The result is that the growers have been offered a benefit payment of 12½ cents per 100 pounds of sugar, which means a nominal 20 cents or less per ton of sugarcane. As compared to $2.26 per ton on the 1934 crop and $1.48 per ton on the 1935 crop, the 20-cent payment is manifestly negligible. But despite the fact of offering so small a benefit, the A. A. A. again reveals its desire to curtail continental growers of sugarcane by limiting these payments to that tonnage of sugarcane necessary to produce the 260,000 tons of sugar quota for Louisiana and Florida. Based upon the present estimates of production, Louisiana will probably receive 20 cents per ton on less than 60 percent of its actual production of sugarcane, or less than 14 cents per ton of sugarcane delivered.

All of the above facts demonstrate how unfair and unjustified the quota of 260,000 tons has proven and how progressively harmful it has been to the growers of sugarcane in Louisiana. In fact, that quota has been the source of practically all of Louisiana's A. A. A. problems.

For this year Louisiana has benefited by the increased consumption of sugar in the United States and the fact that neither the beet States, nor Florida, nor the Philippines have been able to deliver all of their quotas, so that the deficit has become available to Louisiana for 1936. But that is for 1936 only. For 1937 we start off again with a quota of 220,200 tons, and we must hope that there will be more deficits in other areas so that we may be able to market legally all sugar produced in Louisiana.

For the future it is absolutely necessary that Congress should provide a sugar act which places no restriction or limit of the production and distribution of continental sugar. This will permit our industry to expand without hindrance. If the administration insists upon some limitation, then the figure for Louisiana should be ample to take care of all sugar we are producing. The beet-sugar producing area has a quota of 1,550,000 tons, which they fall short of producing every year, consequently it may be a limitation but it does not amount to restriction.

	Production
	Quota	1934	1935	1936 (estimated)
Beet-sugar producing area	1,550,000	1,239,574	1,261,460	1,400,000
Louisiana	220,200	234,000	333,000	240,000

The Louisiana production has exceeded its quota each year, while the beet-sugar production has been less than its quota each year.

It is easy to understand why Louisiana always has a problem for the A. A. A. Congress can correct this by removing restrictions or by giving Louisiana a quota in excess of its production on the basis of equality with the beet producers.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be understood as criticizing or protesting against the quota allocated to beet-sugar growers, but believe, in all fairness, we are entitled to a larger quota.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. MCCORMACK, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. MEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration House Joint Resolution 96 and had come to no resolution thereon.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

FOREIGN TRADE AGREEMENTS—GENERAL DEBATE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate on House Joint Resolution 96 be extended for 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] may have permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF AESENCE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may have leave of absence for 1 week on account of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] may have 10 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF OLD-AGE PENSION PLANS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, on May 28 last the chairman of the select committee appointed to investigate old-age pension plans presented a privileged report, no. 2857, in which the House of Representatives was advised that the committee had been deprived of the testimony of John B. Kiefer and Clinton Wunder relative to the subject matter under House Resolution 443, because these two gentlemen refused to appear and be sworn as witnesses to testify concerning matters then and there under investigation, and that as a result thereof they were in contempt of the House of Representatives.

Also in this same report the committee held Dr. Francis E. Townsend in contempt.

Immediately following that, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] presented House Resolution 532, requesting that the Members of the House direct the Speaker to certify the report of said select committee to the United States district attorney, which was agreed to—the ayes being 271 and the noes 41.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives is in receipt of letters from John B. Kiefer and Clinton Wunder, respectively, which are exceedingly interesting in that they vindicate the action of the select committee and the majority of the Members of the House at that time. I therefore ask unanimous consent that these letters now be read by the Clerk of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

CAPITOL PARK HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1937.

House of Representatives, Seventy-fifth United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIRS: During the term of the Seventy-fourth Congress, the writer was subpenaed to appear before a select committee appointed to investigate old-age pension plans and organizations pursuant to House Resolution 443. Acting upon what he construed, at that time, to be in the best interests of the national organization which he was serving in an executive capacity, he refused to answer the subpena, and was subsequently held in contempt of your honorable body.

The writer's refusal to appear to testify is deeply regretted, and he wishes to take this opportunity to offer his sincere and abject apology to your honorable body, and trusts that it will be accepted in the true spirit in which it is offered.

Respectfully and sincerely,

JOHN B. KIEFER.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y., February 4, 1937.

House of Representatives, United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIRS: Believing that he was serving the best interests of the national organization of which he was an executive, the writer failed to obey a subpena duly served upon him by a select committee appointed under House Resolution 443, and in consequence was held in contempt of your esteemed body.

It has since become fully apparent to the writer that this action on his part was a grave error, and for which mistake he wishes to extend his sincere apology to your honorable body. It is his wish and trust that the same will be accepted.

Respectfully yours,

CLINTON WUNDER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on Senate Joint Resolution 20, which passed the House today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

(Mr. FULMER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.)

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, February 8, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

222. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Ann Arbor Trades and Labor Council, Ann Arbor, Mich., requesting the Congress to establish a permanent committee to investigate violations of the civil liberties and collective bargaining; to the Committee on Accounts.

223. Also, petition of the Young Republicans of Allegheny County, memorializing the Congress to pass legislation to provide flood protection along the Allegheny, Monongahela, and Ohio Rivers; to the Committee on Flood Control.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1937

The Reverend Albert Joseph McCartney, D. D., of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths.

Let us pray.

Almighty God, in whom we live and move and have our being, and in whose hands rests the governance of men, we, Thy servants here assembled, humbly beseech Thee to direct us by Thy spirit throughout the deliberations of this day. In every moment of confusion, uncertainty, or doubt help us to seek the counsel which cometh down from above and is profitable to direct. Strengthen our bodies and minds for the tasks of this day.

God bless our land; defend our liberties; preserve our unity; save us from all violence, discord, and confusion; and help us to address ourselves earnestly to the removal of all causes therefor.

Especially do we pray today for all those who are suffering from the disaster of the flood, for those who have lost their homes, for fathers and mothers who have lost their children, and for children who have lost their parents. God bless the Red Cross and its noble ministry to those in need.

We commit into Thy care and keeping the President and Vice President of the United States, the members of the Cabinet, the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Judges of the Supreme Court, and all those into whose hands Thou hast committed the peace and welfare of our land.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

HIRAM W. JOHNSON, a Senator from the State of California, appeared in his seat today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 5, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 20) authorizing the President to invite the Pan American Republics and the Dominion of Canada to participate in the proposed Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 974) to create the Capital Auditorium Commission, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Pope
Andrews	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	King	Robinson
Austin	Dieterich	La Follette	Russell
Bachman	Duffy	Lee	Schwartz
Bailey	Ellender	Lodge	Schwellenbach

Byrd	Hayden	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Herring	Norris	Wheeler
Capper	Hitchcock	Overton	White
Caraway	Holt	Pepper
Chavez	Hughes	Pittman

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is absent because of illness; and that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I announce that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness, and that my colleague the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

FELICITATIONS TO THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT AND GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting resolution adopted by the Municipal Council of Vintar, Province of Ilocos Norte, P. I., extending congratulations to President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Vice President John N. Garner on their reelection to office, and also extending congratulations to Hon. Frank Murphy, former United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, on his election to the governorship of Michigan, which were ordered to lie on the table.

COMMITTEES ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Senator from Nebraska, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: Recently you appointed me a member of the Senate Select Committee on Government Organization and the Joint Congressional Committee on Government Organization. On account of the work I am doing, and trying to do, it will be an absolute impossibility for me to spend the time necessary to adequately consider the questions which will come before these committees. I therefore most respectfully decline these appointments.

Very sincerely,

G. W. NORRIS.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
The Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that the original resolutions authorize him to fill the vacancies and make it his duty to do so. Is there objection to that construction of the resolutions? The Chair hears none; and the Chair appoints the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to fill the vacancies caused by the resignation of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] on both the Joint and Select Committees on Government Organization.

CAPITAL AUDITORIUM COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 974) to create the Capital Auditorium Commission, which were, on page 1, line 4, after "chairman", to insert "and the ranking minority member", and on the same page, line 5, after "chairman", to insert "and the ranking minority member."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendments adopted by the House provide that, in addition to the chairmen of the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the respective Houses, the ranking minority members of those committees shall serve on the Commission. It will be recalled that the Secretary of the Interior is to be another member of the Commission. I have no objection to the amendments. This is in no sense a political matter, and I therefore move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND FOR SANTA ROSA BAND OF MISSION INDIANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the purchase of 640 acres of land for the use and benefit of the Santa Rosa Band of Mission Indians, California, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, transmitting, pursuant to law, his annual report for the year ended October 31, 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

IMPORTATIONS OF FISHING GEAR

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 165, Seventy-third Congress, first session, a report of its investigation with respect to nets and netting and other gear employed by fishermen and fisheries imported into the United States, and the effect of such importations on production in the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The title of the bill is "A bill to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government."

Mr. HERRING. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I merely wish to inquire of the Senator from Arizona the reason for introducing this bill out of order. A little later we shall reach the order in which it may properly be introduced.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Oregon is correct. We have not reached the appropriate order for the introduction of bills. I therefore withdraw the request.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Joint Resolution 5

Whereas floods of unprecedented proportion in the United States have inundated numerous cities and many thousands of acres in the Ohio River Valley, rendering approximately 1,000,000 people homeless, causing untold property damage and spreading death, destruction, and disease throughout 10 States; and

Whereas seasonal floods of recent years have subjected the valley of the Ohio, including southern Illinois territory, to similar disaster; and

Whereas congressional enactments have resulted in the construction of elaborate flood-control works along the Mississippi River, but no provision has been made for controlling works along the Ohio, where floods consistently originate: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixtieth General Assembly of the State of Illinois (the senate concurring herein), That Congress be memorialized to enact measures without delay, insuring the protection of the Ohio River Valley territory from such catastrophic floods as have lately been witnessed; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house of representatives be instructed to transmit copies of this preamble and resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Senators and Congressmen from the State of Illinois in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate Joint Resolution No. 4

Relative to memorializing and petitioning the President and the Congress of the United States to include the Central Valley project in the national program of work relief

Whereas California has one of the gravest unemployment problems in the United States, due to the fact that the State has become the haven of unemployed from every section of the country; and

Whereas one of the most constructive methods of coping with the unemployment problem is the building of useful and necessary public works which will confer permanent and lasting benefits, as well as afford immediate work relief; and

Whereas California is in urgent need of the development, conservation, and stabilization of its water resources to prevent the abandonment of thousands of farms and homes, and to avert tremendous financial losses; and

Whereas the State of California has prepared a comprehensive coordinated plan for the progressive economic development of the water resources of the State, carefully formulated over a period of 14 years, which provides for the control of floods and salinity encroachment, the improvement of navigation, the conservation and stabilization of water supplies for municipal, irrigation, industrial, and mining uses, and for the generation of electric power; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of California in 1933 passed the Central Valley Project Act, which was signed by the Governor and was thereafter approved by vote of the people of the State at a special election held on December 19, 1933; and

Whereas the said Central Valley Project Act created the Water Project Authority of the State of California, to execute and administer the Central Valley project, which project is designated as the first step in the comprehensive plan for the Great Central Valley of California; and

Whereas the people in California, in the Sacramento Valley and San Joaquin Valley, desire the water impounded soon, whether a dam be located at Kennett, at Baird, at Table Mountain, or at any two or all of these places, and desire to buy cheap hydroelectric power at the earliest possible moment; and

Whereas said Central Valley project has been investigated and approved by at least 13 agencies of the Federal Government and has been recommended for Federal financing; and

Whereas said project has further been recommended by the President's Committee on Water Flow and by the National Resources Board as one of the country's foremost projects for a national program of public works; and

Whereas the House of Representatives has the improvement of the Sacramento River in accordance with the plan as set forth in House of Representatives Document No. 35, Seventy-third Congress, which recommends a Federal contribution of $12,000,000 to the cost of the Kennett Dam of the Central Valley project; and

Whereas the said project will be self-liquidating, and the cost thereof will be returned with interest to the Federal Government from revenues obtained by the sale of water and power; and

Whereas said project is ready for immediate construction when funds are made available for such purpose; and

Whereas the consummation of the said project will enable 50,000 American people to sustain themselves by their present means of livelihood, and will prevent their being thrown into the ranks of the unemployed, and further will stop the reversion to desert of one-half million acres of highly developed and settled lands, valued at $100,000,000; and

Whereas a greater degree of flood protection in the Sacramento Valley is highly desirable, as evidenced by the floods on the Sacramento River and its tributaries; and

Whereas the construction of said project will give employment to thousands of workers now unemployed, not only in California but throughout the Nation, thereby relieving unemployment in many branches of industry, particularly in the heavy manufacturing industries in the East and Middle West; and

Whereas the public interest, welfare, convenience, and necessity require immediate provision for adequate financing of said Central Valley project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California jointly, That the State of California, through its legislature, recommends the Central Valley project to the President and to the Congress of the United States as of first and prime importance to the State of California, and respectfully requests that adequate funds, $40,000,000, more or less, be made available for immediate construction of the project, thereby conferring lasting benefits upon the people of the State of California and affording substantial unemployment relief, all in a manner conforming admirably with the splendid program initiated by the President of the United States to speed national recovery; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor is requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to enact the pending St. Croix Valley Authority Act for the generation of electric energy and its transmission for domestic use, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, p. 950.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the prompt ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, p. 950.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, protesting against the removal of persons over 65 years of age from Works Progress Administration rolls without regard to eligibility under the old-age provisions of the Social Security Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the State Board of Women Defenders of America, Oakland, Calif., remonstrating against an increase in the number of justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petitions of Fannie J. Pertzman and Morris Pertzman, of Lancaster, Pa., praying for the repeal of legislation providing for Federal aid in the control of production of crude oil, which were referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. HOLT presented resolutions adopted by the County Petroleum Industries Committees of the Counties of Barbour, Berkeley, Gilmer, Hardy, Lewis, Logan, McDowell, Marshall, Mercer, Mingo, Monongalia, Monroe, Randolph, Upshur, and Wetzel, all in the State of West Virginia, favoring the immediate repeal of Federal taxes on gasoline and lubricating oil, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HERRING presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, favoring the enactment of legislation to continue the 3½-percent interest rate on Federal land-bank loans and to extend or reamortize Land Bank Commissioner loans to 34 years, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 5th instant, p. 881, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution adopted by the transportation committee of the Binghamton (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the construction of a seaway for the use of seagoing vessels from the St. Lawrence River to New York City by way of Lake Champlain and the Hudson River, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Council of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y., favoring the making of an appropriation for the construction of the Pelham-Port Chester Parkway in Westchester County, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact the pending St. Croix Valley Authority Act

Whereas the Congress of the United States has pending before it the St. Croix Valley Authority Act, generally referred to as project no. 1399, proposing, among other things, to build a dam and reservoirs at or near the point of confluence of the Kettle and St. Croix Rivers, about 7 miles northwesterly of Grantsburg, Wis., for generation of electric energy and to distribute the same within transmission distance directly to rural communities in Wisconsin and Minnesota for domestic use at the lowest possible rates; and

Whereas this is the only major hydroelectric project on the St. Croix River as yet unexploited by private interests; and

Whereas the feasibility and possible generating capacity of the endeavor has been reported highly favorable by experts upon thorough survey of the site, exploration of dam foundations, and gathering of complete engineering data; and

Whereas this development contemplates a dam 79 feet high, creating a reservoir of 16,674 acres surface and 357,760 acre-feet of water capacity availing to consumers approximately 23-600,000 kilowatt-hours of primary and 101,400,000 kilowatt-hours of secondary energy at a total cost, including a hydro installation of 27,500 kilowatts, of about $8,000,000; and

Whereas rural electric cooperatives in Wisconsin organized and existing pursuant to the Rural Electrification Administration have experienced great difficulty in obtaining or have been unable to obtain from public utilities electric energy at reasonably low wholesale rates; and

Whereas development of the project would have a wholesome effect upon wholesale electric rate schedules in this area in that such rates would decrease and permit greater numbers of potential consumers to utilize rural electric lines and in turn enjoy a higher plane of well-being; and

Whereas advancement of this plan would provide welcome and needed employment in this area, both in the matter of construction and in the production of materials needed for construction purposes, and restore a large acreage of marginal lands to profitable use by creating another recreational area and providing means of flood control; and

Whereas furtherance of such undertaking would synchronize this area with the future development of the inland waterways and give the great Northwest the same consideration for development of natural resources as accorded other sections of the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass the St. Croix Valley Authority Act, commonly known as project no. 1399; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, both houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution relating to the ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty

Whereas it is the opinion of the people of this State that the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway is a transportation medium that will develop and connect the vast internal resources of the agricultural sections of the West with the commercial and industrial sections of the East, by reducing the transportation costs between the centers of production and consumption, by increasing the prosperity and well-being of every section of the country with expanded markets, and thereby augment the purchasing power of the entire people of the United States as a whole; and

Whereas such seaway would likewise permit the development of hydroelectric power with resulting cheaper rates for electrical energy to the people in the Great Lakes area; and

Whereas this waterway project will add value to the products of industry and agriculture, creat new markets and business, and thereby stimulate employment and materially aid economic recovery; and

Whereas this treaty will be submitted to the United States Senate by President Roosevelt at this session of Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin memorializes the Congress of the United States and especially Wisconsin Senators and Members of Congress to promptly ratify any treaty which may be so submitted for this purpose and to enact the necessary legislation for the beginning of construction; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. POPE presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Joint memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represents that—

Whereas there has been introduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress, now assembled in Washington, D. C., a bill by SAMUEL L. PETTENGILL, of Indiana, commonly known as the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause of the Transportation Act and also the Pettengill bill; and

Whereas the major agricultural, livestock, wholesale, manufacturing, jobbing, and retail interests of Idaho, in the provisions of the proposed bill, face a threat of curtailment and even extinction in many instances, the twenty-fourth session of the Idaho Legislature, assembled this date in Boise, Idaho, hereby respectfully suggests and urges that each member of the Idaho delegation in Congress give the subject matter of this bill his immediate attention, as indications point to a determined effort to rush this proposed legislation through the present session of Congress; and

Whereas after a most thorough consideration of the facts with reference to such proposed legislation it appears that any change in the existing rate structure whereby lower rates will apply to and from the Pacific coast than to and from the State of Idaho can only have the effect of hampering and impeding the future development of the resources of the State, increase the costs of products imported into it, and decrease the profits from products exported therefrom, and that the State of Idaho has everything to lose and nothing to gain in any change in the said Transportation Act. Agriculture, industries, and distribution have increased tremendously in all parts of the State under the present law: Now, therefore, in view of the facts with reference to said legislation, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-fourth Session of the Idaho Legislature, in session at Boise, Idaho, does hereby record its opposition to the Pettengill bill and any similar legislation, and it respectfully requests and urges the active and united opposition of the members of the Idaho congressional delegation to the passage of such proposed legislation as inimical to the best interests of the people of all sections of Idaho; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be, and he is hereby, directed to forthwith forward certified copies of this memorial to Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, Senator JAMES P. POPE, Congressman COMPTON I. WHITE, and Congressman D. WORTH CLARK, and to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States.

Mr. POPE also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Joint memorial to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, twenty-fourth session, respectfully present that—

Whereas, by section 9 of the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture for administering forest roads and trails, approved January 16, 1919, it is provided that "maintenance work on all forest highways shall be performed by the Bureau unless otherwise specified by agreement"; and

Whereas at the present time there are 884.6 miles of forest highways on the designated State highway system in the State of Idaho; and

Whereas the United States Bureau of Public Roads requires that the State of Idaho maintain said forest highways on said State system after 2 years from the date of the completion of the improvement; and

Whereas the State of Idaho is now maintaining 448.12 miles of such forest highways, and unless the aforesaid requirement is abrogated it will be required to maintain the balance of said forest highways on the State system after a period of 2 years from the date of the completion of the same; and

Whereas the State of Idaho derives no taxes from the lands adjacent to such forest highways; and

Whereas the cost of maintenance of such forest highways, together with additional obligation of maintaining other highways on the State system, is burdening the State highway fund to such an extent as to seriously restrict the amount which would otherwise be available for matching Federal-aid funds:

Now, therefore, we, your memorialists, respectfully request that the State of Idaho be relieved of the duty of maintaining forest highways in the future and that the existing agreements between the State and the Department of Agriculture be modified accordingly: Be it

Resolved, That a copy of this joint memorial be sent by the secretary of state to the Secretary of Agriculture and to Senator BORAH, Senator POPE, Congressman CLARK, and Congressman WHITE.

Mr. NEELY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to appropriate funds for a survey in connection with flood conditions in the Ohio Valley

Whereas the Ohio Valley is now being visited by another major flood disaster, the second of its proportions within a period of 10 months; and

Whereas these recent floods have caused damage to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars in the Ohio Valley; and

Whereas scores of lives have been lost in these flood disasters, thousands have been rendered homeless, and widespread illness, suffering, and disease have followed in their wake; and

Whereas it is believed that a comprehensive system of source stream control can reduce, if not entirely eliminate, the major proportions of these disasters; and

Whereas such remedial steps, being of interstate nature and requiring interstate cooperation, constitute a proper subject for primary action by the Federal Government: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of delegates concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is requested, without further delay, to take such steps by appropriate legislation as will lead to the immediate projection and execution of a comprehensive plan to prevent a repetition of such major disasters, and that the attention of the Congress be called to report no. 308, plan no. 4, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, relating to this subject of source stream control; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted, respectively to Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and to the Members representing West Virginia in the Senate and in the House of Representatives of the Congress.

REPEAL OF TAXES ON GASOLINE AND LUBRICATING OIL

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I present 16 resolutions from my State favoring the immediate repeal of the Federal gasoline and lubricating oil taxes. I ask that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance, that their submission be noted in the RECORD, and also that one of the resolutions, all of them being similar, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

One of the resolutions presented by Mr. NEELY is as follows:

Whereas the motorists and oil and automotive industries are overburdened with excessive taxation in the State of West Virginia to such an extent, it is very doubtful if the thousands of our citizens depending on these industries for their livelihood can find it possible to continue to contribute to national and State recovery as they would like, and as they should be in position to do so: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That our two United States Senators and the district's Congressman be requested to use their vote and influence toward the immediate repeal of the Federal gasoline and lubricating oil taxes, and leave this field of taxation to the individual States, as was understood and agreed in 1932, at the time the Federal tax was imposed as an emergency measure: Be it further

Resolved, That our State senators and delegates be requested to oppose all added taxes on the motorists and oil and automotive industries.

——— ———, Chairman.

Attest:

W. M. LEMEN, Jr., Secretary.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA., November 21, 1936.

Unanimously adopted by the Berkeley County committee at its meeting at the Shenandoah Hotel, Martinsburg, August 27, 1936.

The resolutions favoring the immediate repeal of the Federal gasoline and lubricating oil taxes, presented by Mr. NEELY and referred to the Committee on Finance, are from County Petroleum Industries Committees of the counties of Barbour, Berkeley, Gilmer, Hardy, Lewis, Logan, McDowell, Marshall, Mercer, Mingo, Monongahela, Monroe, Randolph, Upshur, and Wetzel, and the Council of State Governments of the West Virginia Petroleum Industries Committee at Charleston, all in the State of West Virginia.

VIOLATIONS OF FREE SPEECH AND RIGHTS OF LABOR

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. From the Committee on Education and Labor, under Senate Resolution 266, Seventy-fourth Congress, I submit a preliminary report (No. 46); and for the information of Senators I ask unanimous consent that the report may be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[S. Rept. 46, 75th Cong., 1st sess.]

VIOLATIONS OF FREE SPEECH AND RIGHTS OF LABOR

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, submitted the following preliminary report (pursuant to S. Res. 266, 74th Cong.):

AUTHORIZATION

A subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor was appointed by the chairman on June 6, 1936, under Senate Resolution 266, to investigate violations of the rights of free speech and assembly and interference with rights of labor to organize and bargain collectively.

The resolution is as follows:

Senate Resolution 266

"Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor is authorized and directed to make an investigation of violations of the rights of free speech and assembly and undue interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendation for the enactment of any remedial legislation it may deem necessary.

"For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth and succeeding Congresses, to employ and to call upon the executive departments for clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman."

At the outset it had some data from which to chart its course of inquiry. Preliminary hearings had shown how established labor laws and policy were being flouted. The public case laid before the committee indicated unmistakably that labor spies and pseudo police agencies were being loosed upon labor with increasing vigor. The revitalizing of the labor movement which began to occur in 1933 was bringing prosperity to the labor detective agency, the strikebreaker, and the purveyor of gas and machine guns to industry. Witnesses at the preliminary hearings included workers, union officials, and representatives of labor organizations. Their testimony, supplemented by Labor Board studies, indicated the urgent need for a thorough-going inquiry of a situation in which one who dares to take advantage of his legal right to organize imperils his constitutional rights of peaceful assembly and freedom of speech. He perhaps loses his job. He may even lose his vote.

SCOPE OF THE INQUIRY

Having received only $15,000, your committee realized that all it could hope to do was to conduct a limited inquiry. It decided first to inquire into violations of civil liberties rising out of interference with the policy declared by Federal statute, that labor has the right to organize and to bargain collectively. Before making this decision, however, your committee considered the entire field of investigation.

Violations of civil liberties outside the field of labor relations involve academic freedom, public assemblage, freedom of the press, coercion by vigilante groups, and deprivations of the rights of free speech and assembly through local laws and local courts. These are regarded of equal importance by your committee.

An investigation into violations in the labor field would concentrate its attention upon the industrial use of espionage, strikebreaking, and munitions. Among the questions to be answered and basic to remedial legislation are:

How extensive is the use of spies, strikebreakers, and munitions by American industry? What is their cost to industry? For what purposes are they employed and what is the effect of their use upon the civil rights of workers? To what extent is industry organized to provide itself with a system of company spies and company police; to what extent does it purchase these services from outside agencies? What agencies furnish these services, and what are the mechanics of their supply and use? How lucrative is the business of such agencies? How are spies and strikebreakers recruited? What is the character of the men who accept such employment and how do they operate? Are employers forced to use these instruments to protect themselves against the efforts of labor to organize or are employers themselves the unwitting victims of a system of their own creation? Is the use of labor espionage, strikebreakers, and munitions occasional and sporadic or is it a well-established policy in American industrial life? If the latter, who sets this policy? Have the States endeavored to control these instruments of industrial warfare and has this control been successful? Is there need for Federal regulations of these practices and, if so, is there a basis for effective regulation within the framework of Federal power?

CHOICE OF METHOD

Your committee had three possible methods of approach: It could examine labor as the victim; management as the customer; or the two closely allied industries, the agents furnishing munitions, labor spies, and strikebreakers.

To what degree espionage has been responsible for union mortality can be learned only by questioning workers. Organized labor has given fullest cooperation to your committee. But workers' knowledge of the spy system is fragmentary. What they have learned about spying they have learned too late by running afoul of it: they experience its effects without knowing what has happened to them. Suddenly the union is weakened for no discernible reason. Feudal conditions of employment are maintained by means of intimidation, the working of which is not wholly clear.

Obviously it is impossible to scattered investigators at random through the millions of workers, organized and unorganized, whom the spying system is now known to touch. To examine industry at large was also impracticable under the limited funds. Your committee deemed it advisable first to lay bare the machinery of espionage and to discover, by examining agency records, which industrial communities suffer espionage in its most concentrated form. This once learned, a sampling method can be adopted for the examination of both labor and industry. Even an investigation by sample will take a larger staff than is now available. The present staff is small and of uncertain tenure because, due to limited funds, it has had to be borrowed from other governmental agencies.

FIRMS UNDER EXAMINATION

Hence your committee chose first to study the more concentrated activities of detective agencies and munitions companies. This, too, had to be done by sampling. Your committee selected for examination five of the largest detective agencies, at least two of which (Railway Audit & Inspection Co. and National Corporation Service) are likewise engaged in strikebreaking, and the three munitions companies dominating the industrial armament market. These five detective agencies are: The Railway Audit & Inspection Co.; Pinkerton's National Detective Agency, Inc.; National Corporation Service; Corporations Auxiliary Co.; and the William J. Burns International Detective Agency. As of January 1, 1937, the first three of these had been called to the stand, although the Pinkerton hearings have not been concluded. Of the munitions firms, the Lake Erie Chemical Co. and the Manville Manufacturing Co. have been called. Federal Laboratories, Inc., remains to be heard.

THE DETECTIVE BUSINESS WRAPS ITSELF IN MYSTERY

Companies under examination have tried to block the inquiry by various tactics. Even without threat of disclosure, the detective business is normally secretive. It keeps its books in code, destroys its records quickly, uses aliases, designates its operatives by number or false initials, gives blind addresses, and sends its bill on plain paper to dummy names. As the general manager of Pinkerton's testified, it withers when its industrial operatives are exposed to public view, as in the State of Wisconsin, where agencies are compelled to register their operatives. Even the necessity to register employees under the Social Security Act caused Pinkerton's to change its mode of doing business. Formerly it paid wages to informers. Now it buys information by the piece from previous informers operating as "free agents." The change proves no desire to correct or decrease the evils of spying. In this particular instance your committee must admit a negative effect of publicizing which can be overcome only by more exposure and wider study.

OBSTRUCTIONIST TACTICS

Forewarned in April by preliminary hearings, agencies purged their files before the August hearings. Apparently caught napping in the interlude, the Railway Audit & Inspection Co. at the last moment decided on a drastic course. Subpenaed to appear at 10 o'clock of August 21, 1936, six of their officials failed to answer and were at once indicted for contempt of the Senate. This January they were ordered from Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and New York to stand trial in the District of Columbia. After their records had been subpenaed, the Atlantic, Pittsburgh, New York, Philadelphia, and St. Louis offices of this firm tore them into small pieces and disposed of them in wastebaskets. Their trash paper was secured and great amounts of it reconstructed to form substantial evidence for your committee.

Avowing fullest cooperation, other detective firms have thwarted the committee at every step. Pinkertons, after subpena, ordered written reports to cease and business to be done by word of mouth. Since the records which your committee secured by subpena were, for the most part, fragmentary, it has had to prove its case by examining witnesses who, through fear or self-interest, testified reluctantly or evasively.

INDICATIONS OF SIZE AND PROFITS OF AGENCIES

The annual dollar volume of the spy industry is unknown. That it is large is indicated by the known gross income of two leading companies in the field, Pinkerton and Railway Audit & Inspection Co., which, according to evidence, amounted, in the period under examination, to $6,511,891.

That it is a highly profitable business is learned by contrasting the salaries and dividends received by its officials and the going rate of pay for the two basic operations of their business, spying and strikebreaking. Mr. Robert A. Pinkerton, president of the Pinkerton detective agency, who in 1935 held 70 percent of its stock, received in that year $129,500 in dividends. The Pinkerton rate of pay for information was, before they stopped paying wages, from $2 to $3.50 a day, the worker turned spy receiving from $25 to $30 a month, or a dollar a day. Edgar A. MacGuffin, head of the National Corporation Service, received $36,000 in salary. The Otis Steel Co. paid the National Corporation Service from $1,000 to $1,400 a month for work done by spies whose wages and expenses averaged between $275 and $300 a month.

Strikebreakers' pay is higher, varying from $6 to $9 and $12 a day, according to time put in. In the New Orleans streetcar strike, where over a thousand strikebreakers were imported, chiefly from Buffalo, rates varied from the superintendent's $50 a day salary plus bonus and $50 a day expenses down to 80 cents an hour for guards.

VESTED INTEREST IN STRIFE

Both industrial espionage and strikebreaking thrive on industrial strife. In the years when unions were making a concerted drive under the National Industrial Recovery Act and the National Labor Relations Act, the net income of the Pinkerton Agency leaped from $76,760 in 1933 to $268,703 in 1934 and $243,351 in 1935. Pinkerton's business was admitted by its general manager to be one-third industrial, a figure raised to two-thirds by its ex-branch manager from the Southern States.

This vested interest in trouble is established in the agency's method of solicitation. Kept abreast by agency headquarters of legislation favorable to labor organization and well informed as to likely labor hot spots by their careful study of the labor press, canvassers from agencies constantly promote business by high-pressure methods. The branch manager of Railway Audit & Inspection wrote to a salesman in Tennessee:

"Now that the National Recovery Act is killed and the Government is planning to institute other proceedings equally as stringent, I do hope that we can pull together a few of the outside strings that we have and make them mean some business for us."

INDUSTRY, NOT LABOR, IS THE OBVIOUS CUSTOMER

With the double service to offer of espionage and strikebreaking, the detective agency surveys the ever-potential source of trouble between workers who are trying to organize and employers hostile to unions, and sees clearly where its money lies. Labor spends money neither on espionage nor munitions. So far as your committee has learned, management is the only prospective buyer of both. The aim is to induce management to spend freely and over as long a time as possible. Employers who are working peacefully with their employees and have no fear of trouble are talked into alarm. An ex-superintendent of one agency admitted it was common practice to send undercover men into a plant without the company's knowledge and to use their reports to sell the client on his need for spying.

PRETENSE THAT HOSTILITIES ARE DIRECTED AGAINST COMMUNISM

Although, as the investigations reveal, the employer directs his spy forces against any kind of union activity, he cloaks his hostility under the pretext that he is defending himself and the country against communism. Pinkerton officials, on the stand, strove without success to show that they accept industrial work only where the employer is anxious to stamp out communism. Lengthy questioning of six Pinkerton officials, from Mr. Pinkerton and his general manager down to his assistant superintendents, revealed that the agency had never refused to spy on unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and that none of them could define or describe a Communist. Detective agencies appear to make a clear distinction, however, between an independent union with bargaining power and a company union, and frankly offer to help industry in establishing the latter, boasting successful ventures in this field. This object remains to be explored.

REPRESENTATIVE CUSTOMERS

Canvassers are carefully coached by their superiors in promotion tactics. So they will seem to have technical knowledge of the industry in question, they are rehearsed in sales talks. They study business lists, check prospective clients on maps, set forth in automobiles to tour their regions thoroughly, being told not to neglect any "little mill along the road."

The success of these soliciting methods can best be gaged by a study of the customers they serve. One list, known to be far from complete, gives the various kinds of employers known to hire spies. Among them are 36 employers' associations; 14 corporations of Nation-wide scope; 27 railroads; 29 traction, utilities, and bus companies; 52 metallurgical and machinery companies; 32 mining companies; 28 employers in the automobile industry; 20 steamship lines; and 28 food companies.

A partial list of industrial firms serviced by Pinkerton alone includes 98 names. Composed of firms well established in the public mind, it includes General Motors Corporation, which, with its subsidiaries, paid Pinkerton $167,586 in 1935; Bethlehem Steel Co.; Radio Corporation of America; Campbell Soup Co.; Curtis Publishing Co.; the Baldwin Locomotive Works; Shell Oil Co.; Montgomery Ward & Co.; and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

The National Corporation Service has been since 1933 in the employ of 142 known industrial clients, including such firms as Otis Steel, Midland Steel, Wheeling Steel Co., Hazel Atlas Glass, the Goodrich Rubber Co., and Fostoria Glass.

Railway Audit & Inspection Co., whose records were mutilated, is known from various authenticated sources to have serviced 67 companies, including the Aluminum Co. of America; the Borden Milk Co.; the Consolidated Gas Co. of New York; Frigidaire Corporation; Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation and H. C. Frick Coal & Coke Co., both subsidiaries of United States Steel; Kelvinator Sales Corporation; National Dairy Products; Truscon Steel; Western Union; Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.; Woodward Iron & Coal Co.; and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

SPIES FROM WITHIN OR WITHOUT

Sometimes operatives are brought in from without. Sometimes the client prepares a list of his own workers who he thinks could be corrupted by bribery to spy upon their fellows. If he is given no such list, the operative or contact man upon the case, ordinarily known as "hooker", must himself locate a likely candidate for stoolpigeon. An ex-officer for the National Corporation Service said that out of the some 300 operatives upon whom he had kept records, 70 percent were "hooked" men.

HOW THE SPY IS PROCURED

The stool pigeon has several qualifications which make him useful to the agency and the employer. C. M. (Red) Kuhl, strikebreaker and hooker with 20 years' experience, testified:

"Well, first you look your prospect over and if he is married, that is preferable. If he is financially hard up, that is number two. If his wife wants more money or he hasn't got a car, that all counts."

It is apparently considered even more important that a prospective undercover man should be a union member. One Pinkerton superintendent estimated that 25 percent of his informants were members of unions. Another testified that he instructed his undercover men to join the union. A list prepared for a hooker by the Republic Rubber Co. was composed strictly of "out-and-out union men." It is considered ideal procedure to hook the president or treasurer of a union, since he is in a position not only to reveal union membership rolls but to formulate and carry out policies which will lead to its weakening or destruction.

Hooking is usually done by roving operatives of the detective agency who assume such roles as appraisers, bankers' agents, and newspapermen. One favorite subterfuge is to represent themselves as coming from a group of stockholders in the company who are said to be fearful lest labor is being discriminated against by the current management. The extent to which operatives assume the guise of Federal agents is difficult to determine, but in at least one instance your committee found that a hooker posed as a Government official looking for someone to make special reports for the Government.

HOW THE SPY OPERATES

The job of the hooked man is to report what he sees and hears. Typical spy procedure was described by a Reading hosiery worker who answered an advertisement for a full-fashioned knitter at $100 a week, and found he was applying for a job at the Railway Audit & Inspection offices. He was told to get acquainted with as many employees as possible, to win their confidences about the union, and to eavesdrop when they talked in groups. Daily he was to send union information, signed by an arbitrary number, in an envelope without return address. He must be careful not to use the same mail box often.

FALSIFICATION OF REPORTS

Operatives' reports are edited, censored, padded, and falsified by the head office of certain agencies to make the client think he is receiving enough for his money. One instructor said he told a green operative to use his imagination if he wanted to keep his job. As a result, the employer often receives untrue, inflammatory pictures of industrial difficulties in his plant.

EMPLOYERS' MONEY IS PAID TO CORRUPT THEIR WORKERS BY BRIBERY

Pinkertons, who for the first 7 months of 1936 spent something like $250,000 of employers' money for corrupting men to sell out their fellow workers, and who assert that their company does no work on divorce matters, tells in the ironical words of its general manager what they require for character in their informants: "We make inquiries in the neighborhood in which they live, to learn what their standing in the community is, whether they are considered honest, trustworthy, law-abiding people." In striking contrast to this character reference, is a hooked man's description of his work: "I have known Ferguson for 20 years and Kepler for 10 years (both of them union men), and now I am selling them out as they tell me most anything."

WHAT HAPPENS AFTER UNION SECRETS HAVE BEEN LEARNED

On the basis of evidence, your committee believes that the employer, in possession of the facts he has paid to obtain, may proceed according to something like the following formula. He may disperse lesser sympathizers by threat of dismissals and summarily discharge the more important ones. He may frame the organizers on charges of dishonesty or outrageous personal conduct intended to discredit them among their followers. He may have them "taken for a ride", "for a fishing trip", or "worked on", terms used to convey that he hires thugs to beat them, even into unconsciousness.

If the employer is part of an integrated industry he may blacklist union members for further employment, this being probably of all penalties the most ruthless device, since it is intended to produce, and often does produce, permanent loss of livelihood. It was developed by testimony that a blacklist may include more than 900 firms covering the major part of an industry. Thus a blacklisted person may be almost universally barred from working at his given trade. This is a loss to industry also, because the blacklist often affects the most stable and most efficient workers.

These practices are known to exist. Their extent is unknown. Industry's estimate as to what espionage services are worth for their disruptive effect is the amount which employers are known to pay for them.

INDUSTRY'S OWN SPY SYSTEM YET TO BE INVESTIGATED

By no means will the spy investigation be completed until your committee has studied private detective systems maintained by single employers or by employers collaborating in their anti-labor policies. Far more powerful and less subject to control than professional agencies, the private police corps appears to be more sinister, insofar as it is inextricably woven into every other condition of employment in the company town. Through it the worker may be coerced into buying his food at the commissary. Because of it the grand jury may fail to throw around him the protective processes of the law. In one instance testimony was given that persons known to have company connections could never be indicted; that grand jurors would not dare to return anything but "no bill."

CONSTITUTION IS DERIDED

From your committee's still fragmentary inquiry in this field of its investigation, it is clear that espionage has become the habit of American management. Until it is stamped out the rights of labor to organize, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly will be meaningless phrases. Men cannot meet freely to discuss their grievances or organize for economic betterment; they may not even express opinions on politics or religion so long as the machinery of espionage pervades their daily life. Nor can industry itself do aught but multiply suspicion and distrust. Industry from fear pays millions a year to live in more fear.

What legislative means can be adopted by Congress to curb these anti-American practices will not be apparent until the custom is shown in all its ramifications.

STRIKEBREAKING

When the employer's hostility is forced into the open, the detective agency puts a second service at his disposal. It furnishes guards, ostensibly for plant protection, but actually for breaking strikes or provoking disorder. Strikebreakers are recruited from certain well-known hangouts. In New York they may be found at Forty-second and Broadway; in Chicago, near Randolph Street, in the Loop; in Philadelphia, around the Reading Depot. By some grapevine system of communication, the word of a strike is instantly relayed outward from these centers to those of the strikebreaking profession who do not happen to be on hand.

A well-defined caste system exists within the ranks of strikebreakers. The foreman is a noble. Privates are known as finks or guards. Finks should not be confused with scabs who attempt to break strikes by taking their jobs from striking workers. Often the employer pretends that the strikebreaker is a bona-fide craftsman and is being brought in permanently to supplant his striking workers. This is almost invariably fiction, one illustrious instance being that of the hosiery salesman who turned up as an electrical lineman. The word "slugger" defines itself. A roper is less well defined, the term being used to describe shadower, informant, and hooker. A still further variety of strikebreaker is the missionary who travels from door to door, usually in the role of salesman, and talks derogatorily of the strike to the strikers' families in order to break down their morale.

CRIMINAL RECORDS OF STRIKEBREAKERS

Drawn from the underworld, a large number of these men have criminal records. An interesting example is Sam Cohen, alias Sam Goldberg, alias Chowderhead Cohen, alias Charles Harris, who testified before the committee. His preparatory work in industrial relations included a term in Atlanta for conspiracy, 4 years in State's prison, and 4 years in Sing Sing for burglaries, and detention as material witness in a notorious murder case. Out of 13 strikebreakers furnished by Railway Audit & Inspection for the General Material strike in St. Louis in 1932, seven were wanted by the police of other cities on charges including burglary, forgery, larceny, inciting to riot, and assault. A large proportion of the strikebreakers furnished to the Pioneer Paper Stock Co. of Philadelphia by Mickey Martel, a character known to the police, turned out to have police records. One had been found guilty, among other things, of stealing an automobile, robbery by hold-up, receiving stolen goods, assault and battery, and aggravated assault and battery with intent to kill. Another was arrested for being in possession of narcotics. A third, arrested for attempted larceny, held at the time of his arrest a 6-inch iron pipe wrapped in paper for use in breaking open doors of automobiles. The list reads similarly to its end and is duplicated in other instances when the authorities have made the effort to learn the character of men brought in by employers allegedly to keep the peace.

THE BYRNES LAW IS EVADED

These men are sent by train or car to the strike scene, sometimes long distances. The Byrnes law, which went into effect in June 1936, made it a felony to transport men across State lines with the intent to employ them to interfere with peaceful picketing. There is indication that its terms are being evaded by the fiction of hiring guards on the spot of the strike, although they are recruited and given their traveling expenses in another State. The usefulness in the law of the word "intent" can be questioned, since intent cannot be proved. Creating violence, once they have arrived upon the scene, is a corollary of their employment.

THE DOUBLE INTEREST IN VIOLENCE

It is being developed that employer and agency have two separate vested interests in violence. The agency's interest in violence, and by the same token that of the strikebreakers, is that it will prolong and embitter the fight so that a stronger guard will be called out and more money expended through the agency. The employer's interest in violence is that it shall, by being attributed to the workers, bring discredit to them, thus alienating public sympathy for their cause. In those States where antipicketing injunctions are still freely served, violence is provoked in order to obtain an injunction against the strikers. If blame for violence can be pinned on any individual, he may be prosecuted and convicted on criminal charges. The local leader of a textile union in Burlington, N. C., together with several textile strikers, in January 1936, entered prison to serve terms up to 10 years, after conviction as dynamiters. These convictions were obtained primarily on evidence given by or obtained through four police officers from Uniontown, Pa., later found by the Labor Board to be known undercover agents; two were "looked upon as dangerous characters and considered as experts with the use of dynamite; one had been arrested for bigamy; another had been indicted for felonious shooting with intent to kill; a third served a year for assault." All four had served as deputies in Pennsylvania under the direction of H. C. Frick Coal & Coke Co.

These two separate interests work harmoniously for the provocation of violence. A force to create it is on hand, best described by a letter to a solicitor from a Railway Audit & Inspection superintendent:

"A former police commissioner of the city of New York * * * came south during the last textile strike with about 300 guards * * * recruited from the gutter and dregs of New York, Chicago, and Detroit. They were gunmen of the first water and, believe you me, they used every kind of roughneck method known to them to quell the disturbances."

IRRESPONSIBLE MEN MADE INTO OFFICERS OF THE LAW

The next step is to try to relieve employer, agency, and the perpetrator of responsibility for damage done to person or property. It would appear that this is attempted by having dangerous and questionable persons deputized as officers of the law. The quoted letter continues:

"We (R. A. & I.) would not take over the job unless we secured for our men deputization by the local police or the sheriff. If you run into a strike job, tell the president or the owner of the mill that we will not handle the matter unless we secure the help and assistance of the local sheriff as well as his cooperation. It is dangerous to do otherwise."

A Chicago guard, who took 21 armed men from New Orleans to Lake Charles to operate against a longshoremen's strike, testified that he "and these men were all sworn in by the harbor and terminal police of the State." Although on private pay rolls, accepting employer's money through the agency, and although taking orders from both employer and agency, they wear the authority of the State.

HOW VIOLENCE IS STARTED

Violence is started in a number of ways. Trouble is created in open meeting. Street operatives pose as strikers and start slugging. Charges of injury by strikers are faked, as in the mysterious assaulting of a guard in a hosiery strike in Reading. Early in the morning he appeared with a bandaged eye; on the strength of this all guards were deputized. Strikers are provoked into defensive measures which look like attack. During the course of a peaceful strike in Reading, Pa., an organizer was attacked when walking to his hotel. He was stabbed three times, beaten up, run over by a car, his ankle crushed, one vertebra broken, his sacroiliac dislocated.

That violence is all in the day's work was told in Michael Casey's testimony concerning his work as guard on a streetcar strike for the Public Service Utility Corporation of New Orleans. "The only violence", said Mr. Casey, "was blowing up streetcars and stuff like that. The first day there were three of them, I think, got killed—or two." In the 7-hour battle of the Lake Charles strike, in which three men were killed and eight wounded, guards were equipped by the company with machine and riot guns. The Wisconsin Light & Power Co. brought 700 men into Milwaukee from Chicago and New York. It was testified that the management distributed pickax handles to the guards and connected steam hoses with the boilers so that live steam could be turned upon the pickets.

STRIFE IS THE PURPOSE AND PRODUCT OF USING STRIKEBREAKERS

Your committee has yet to investigate the status of special deputies, privately paid, under State laws. It is clear, however, that to clothe men of the type who seek employment as strikebreakers with the authority of law and to permit them to be paid by one of the parties to an industrial dispute is a practice which must almost inevitably produce strife and prevent an orderly settlement. In fact, the creation of strife and the prevention of peaceful collective bargaining is its obvious dual purpose.

COMPANY POLICE CORPS YET TO BE INVESTIGATED

As is true of espionage, there is a further phase of strikebreaking which the committee must investigate. This is the private police system of industry, by which one employer or a group of employers maintains a force of armed guards sworn as public officials. Kept on industry's pay roll and charged to labor overhead, these pseudo peace officers are used to protect the employer's interests against those of his workers. The employer's whim is clothed with legal sanction by this device, and he can from day to day direct the local course of law as he sees fit. This travesty of police power is called into being to move against the constitutional right of freedom of assembly. Not until your committee has examined this subject will it be able to make to the Congress legislative recommendations for its suppression.

MUNITIONS

Into the hands of such protectors of the peace the employer puts the tear and sickening gas, the rifles and machine and submachine guns upon which the munitions manufacturers make their money.

Since Federal Laboratories, Inc., the largest dealers in private armaments, have not yet been examined, the total business of industrial armament is unknown. Evidence at hand consists largely of invoices of shipment and known locations of registered arms in private industry. These indicate a large traffic. Two companies making gas and gas equipment have been examined, the Lake Erie Chemical Co., and a smaller, newer concern, the Manville Manufacturing Co.

The volume of gas sold to industry in the years 1933 to 1936 is over $450,000. Known locations of machine guns and known destinations of shipments of gas establish the facts that these two kinds of garrisons coincide on the map and that warfare materials are concentrated in every center of industrial population in the country. Lists of the buyers of these goods read much like the lists of those who hire strikebreakers and spies.

ONLY ONE SIDE ARMED—SECRECY IN SHIPMENT

The size of private stocks of munitions is no indication of their effectiveness in the intimidation of striking workers, since only one side is armed. Workers do not buy either armaments or gas; the record to date shows but one union purchase of $51 worth of gas. Nor does the known yearly volume of business done give any accurate clue to the size of cumulative private garrisons established over a long period.

Concealed shipments of munitions to industry are the rule. Goods destined for plant use are delivered to homes, to railroad offices, or even to the public police, in packages fraudulently marked as hardware or other merchandise. Bills are submitted to home addresses, manufacturers' associations, or to the personal attention of the highest officials to avoid scrutiny by clerical employees. Sometimes the name of the buyer is withheld even from the salesman. The general manager of the Lake Erie Chemical Co., Cleveland, Ohio, wrote to Salesman B. C. Dinius concerning a sale of gas and gas equipment amounting to nearly $3,900, saying that the order had been shipped to Mr. L. T. Benson, special agent of the C. M. & St. Paul, he added:

"We are certain this material was for the Anaconda Copper Co., athough Mr. Benson did not disclose that to us, and you will have to handle the matter diplomatically in order to explain how you happen to know it."

Sometimes lawyers act as intermediaries. Mr. Dinius wrote from Seattle:

"I have been working with a prospect here, attorneys for a large corporation that are doing business up and down the coast, and they were to order gas equipment for Washington and Oregon. They would not tell me who their clients were.

A letter to the Erie Chemical Co. from a salesman in Detroit in 1933, instructing them to ship guns, clubs, and shells to James Mills, chief of Flint city police, says:

"Do not bill the city of Flint for this material. Instead bill to the Manufacturers' Association of Flint, 901 Industrial Bank Building. For your information only, I have reason to believe this material is for the Chevrolet Motor Co., but they do not want it advertised or generally known that they are the buyers."

COOPERATION BETWEEN POLICE AND MUNITIONS FIRMS

The committee has not yet investigated the extent to which peace officers may be subservient to industry. Much evidence points to cooperation between private employers and police in obtaining both arms and gas. There seems to be an assumption that a legitimate function of local police officers in certain districts is to aid existing industries against their workers.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue had occasion to investigate the purchase of four machine guns through the West Point, Ga., police. These were paid for by the West Point Manufacturing Co. and were loaned to other employers. In extenuation of this affair the head of the Atlanta office of Railway Audit & Inspection wrote:

"Those people have been so long in a small community without any outside interference whatsoever that they run things to suit the best interest of everyone concerned within the small community. I happen to know that the police department and the mill officials are very close."

JOINT INTERESTS OF DETECTIVE AGENCIES AND MUNITIONS FIRMS

He signed this letter as district manager of Federal Laboratories, Inc., and testified that for a year and a half he had run the munitions and detective businesses from one office. In New Orleans these two firms openly conducted their offices together, having both names upon the door. Commissions are given to detective agencies for sale of gas and arms. E. E. MacGuffin, head of National Corporation Service, was a taker of these commissions from the Lake Erie Chemical Co.

Exerting all possible pressure upon local police systems, both detective agencies and munitions firms strive to give the impression that their salesmen and strikebreakers are openly allied with governmental police machinery. The Lake Erie Chemical Co. hired as its representative Col. J. J. Johnston, of whom the general manager wrote:

"We have moved $3,000 or $4,000 worth of stuff down to the sheriff's office (in Akron) in care of Colonel Johnston in preparation for immediate delivery should serious trouble break out. * * * Colonel Johnston has been appointed chief assistant to the sheriff without pay; and it does seem that if there is any business to be gotten that we will get it."

Wherever possible, munitions companies maneuver to give demonstrations before police and other military organizations. Ignatius McCarty, Lake Erie representative for California, obtained police convoy to escort him through rural strike areas.

PROFIT IN TROUBLE

Sales-promotion methods for gas differ not at all from the means employed by canvassers for detective agencies. Threat of industrial strife is exploited. In July of 1936 a Lake Erie salesman reported to his home office that he was calling on United States Steel, placing his hope that "the proposed drive for the unification of this industry will certainly stir up a lot of trouble sooner or later." Another salesman wrote in:

"I am doing a lot of missionary work in anticipation of a strike this spring and I am in a position to send in some good orders if it will only mature. Wish a hell of a strike would get under way."

And later:

"Hope that this strike matures, and that it is a damn bad one; we need the money."

ASSUMPTION THAT EITHER GAS OR GUNS IS NECESSARY

Much is alleged about the humanitarian characteristics of gas as against bullets and guns, the implication being that one or the other is necessary. Indeed, most sales literature classes the striking worker with mail robbers, escaped criminals, or insane persons.

A work-order of the Lake Erie Chemical Co., elucidated on the stand by its vice president, gives a picture of various gas devices promoted for the suppression of strikers, described in circulars as "rioting mobs." These include gas fountain pens; Baby Giant gas projectors; Baby Giant gas shells; hand grenades; Universal CN, meaning tear gas; and DM, meaning nauseating gas; long-range field guns, long-range shells.

One of Lake Erie Chemical Co.'s most touted products discharges its gas invisibly "making it more effective and terrifying." In other words, the victims, unaided by their sense of sight, will not know what has happened until they begin to inhale the gas. Exploding violently, the iron or steel container tears into ribbons, which are thrown with considerable force in all directions from the point of burst, "with possible severe injury to anyone within a radius of approximately 15 feet thereof." The instructions sent out for using this grenade caution against its being thrown into a crowd unless very severe treatment is necessary, "as the pain from the high concentration of this gas in the eyes, nose, and throat is almost unbearable."

PERMANENT EFFECTS OF GAS UNKNOWN

Tear and nauseating gases are admittedly in the experimental stage of development. No one knows their powers of permanent injury. Companies formulate their sales talk to create one of two different impressions. Customers who wish to be assured that it is harmless receive comforting statements as to the mildness of its effect. This occurred in June 1936, when certain anthracite companies purchased $17,000 worth of gas which they proposed to use in stopping bootleg coal operations (these plans were abandoned after your committee exposed them). The general manager of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. expressed fear of results and was assured that the gas was so unbearable it would drive out any intruders before they could sustain permanent injury. When the customer indicates that he means business, he receives such assurances as this sales circular provides:

"When rioters have been subdued with nauseating gas, they will not invite another dose until the memory of the last experience becomes very dim indeed."

The experience is graphically described as including violent nausea and vomiting; a sence of suffocation, as if several men were sitting on the chest, and intense pain in chest and head.

Lake Erie claims that its long-range True-Flite shell, developed within the last year, is designed to be used against barricaded bandits only. Yet before it was completed they heard from a salesman:

"I hope you have something definite as to the new long-range guns, as we will be in a bad way if this strike gets under way and we have no long-range guns."

Of this product its manufacturers say:

"All purchasers of True-Flite projectiles are warned that serious injury or death may be caused should the projectile strike any person while in flight. This shell is not suitable for use against mobs if serious injury or death are to be avoided."

MUNITIONS MAKERS BOAST THAT THEY BREAK STRIKES—FACTS UNKNOWN

Munitions firms confidently state their products have broken many strikes. Out of hundreds of strikes enough may be known about a few scattered conflicts to support their contention. Little is known about efficiency of terrorization. For obvious reasons, neither labor nor management fully publicizes its experience with violence. In estimating the disruptive strength of war equipment we must again depend upon the valuation industry places upon it, or the money volume of business transacted in these goods. The committee has yet to take up the great burden of labor's testimony, which workers stand ready to give.

That private persons or interests should be allowed to maintain arsenals is surprising enough. That industry should be permitted to arm unscrupulous men under their own pay, gravely wearing the badge of the law is startling. That there is allowed to flourish a gigantic commercial enterprise in which employers collaborate with professional spies in assaulting citizens because they exert their lawful right to organize for collective bargaining, is shocking to any true defender of constitutional government.

CONCLUSION

This partial report of findings must reveal that your committee has discovered so far little more than the basis of a colossal, daily drive in every part of the country to frustrate enunciated labor policy and to neutralize American labor laws. In this intricate problem it is not enough to know the existence of the evil in order to correct it. Determined antilabor forces quickly divert themselves around each new obstacle put in their way. To make legislation without loopholes, and to give it the enforcing support of public understanding, Congress must first obtain more complete information concerning the operation of this machine.

But two phases of the original agenda laid down by the committee have been touched upon, and the findings in these fields are only fragmentary. There remains a much broader and more important work to be done. Among its other obligations in this inquiry, your committtee must study vigilante and violence groups such as the Black Legion. It must survey the private espionage and strikebreaking forces maintained by industry itself. It must inquire into evidence of individual and communal violations of free speech and assembly by various authorities and organizations. It should analyze relevant State and community statutes and their workings. Your committee respectfully submits that this inquiry should not be put to rest until enough is known about these practices to make a sound foundation for laws to end them.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

The VICE PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I may secure recognition at this time——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. A moment or two ago I prematurely attempted to introduce a bill. I now introduce the bill and ask that it be read by title. I thank the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN OF NAVY

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order, and the first bill will be stated.

The bill (S. 766) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the radio direction finder station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934, was announced as first in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business No. 6, being Senate bill 766, relative to the reimbursement of certain enlisted men of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], a member of the Committee on Claims, very properly objected to the consideration of the bill in order to determine that the policy of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in passing upon a bill of this kind, is not in conflict with the policy of the Claims Committee, which passes on similar bills relating to other departments of the Government. I understand the position of the Committee on Claims is that where losses occur to Government employees, as well as members of the Army and Navy, due to so-called "acts of God", there should be no relief by the Federal Government. With that principle, the Committee on Naval Affairs is in accord.

The circumstances in this particular case clearly indicate that the fire which resulted in the losses to the beneficiaries of this bill—and the damages are only $527 for loss of personal effects—was due to a defective chimney.

The facts and circumstances of this case are substantially as follows: At about 5:20 p. m., on December 27, 1934, a fire was discovered in the chimney casing of the crew's barracks at the radio direction finder station, North Truro, Mass. The main chimney of the barracks, where the fire started, was of single-brick construction with no insulation other than a 4-inch air space between the chimney and the pine chimney casing. The chimney was not lined. After the fire had burned the section of the roof near the top of the chimney, the upper part of the chimney collapsed. The fire completely destroyed the barracks and its contents.

The board of investigation that inquired into the circumstances of the fire expressed the opinion that it resulted from a defective chimney; that no responsibility on the part of claimants exists, therefore, the defect being due to the long use of the chimney and the fact that it was so enclosed as to be impracticable to examine its condition during routine inspection. The personnel of the station, aided by outside assistance, made every possible effort to subdue the fire and save the property of the Government. The board commended them for restricting the damage to the property destroyed.

Claims were submitted by five enlisted men for losses occurring in the fire. These claims were submitted to the Navy Department Claims Board, which found the total value of the articles destroyed to be $527.89, which amount is considered to be reasonable. The committee is of the opinion that as the losses of claimants' effects occurred without fault or negligence on their part and consisted only of articles of wearing apparel and personal effects, they should be reimbursed for the losses sustained.

The above claims were submitted to the Navy Department for settlement under the act of October 6, 1917 (sec. 981, title 34, U. S. C.), but could not be adjusted thereunder on account of the fact that the fire was not a "marine disaster." There is no other existing authority of law for the adjustment of these claims.

In view of that statement, I think it is an undisputable fact that the losses to the enlisted men were due to the negligence of the Government itself, and that we are within the principle recognized by the Committee on Claims of permitting in certain cases of this kind the recovery of damages. Therefore, I hope the bill will pass. Furthermore, the bill was introduced at the request of the Navy Department and is approved by it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts that the loss in this case was the result of negligence on the part of the Government, I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $527.89, or such portion as may be necessary, to pay claims of enlisted men and former enlisted men of the United States Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed as the result of a fire at the Radio Direction Finder Station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall determine the amount to be paid hereunder to each claimant: And provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

RESOLUTION, BILL, AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 365) for the relief of Capt. James W. Darr was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 21) directing the Comptroller General to readjust the account between the United States and the State of Vermont was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

REGULATION OF SALES OF GOODS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 936) to regulate the sale of goods in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not at all conversant with the bill. I should like to have an explanation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] were here, I would ask him to explain the purpose of the bill. It is textually the same as a bill which passed the Senate at the last session of Congress. It is a bill regulating sales of goods and is in conformity with laws already existing in 42 States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there is necessity for a fuller explanation than has been given. What are the regulations sought to be imposed on the sales of goods in the District of Columbia? Why are such regulations necessary?

Mr. KING. As I attempted to state, though I did not go into it very fully, there have been enacted in subtantially all the States uniform laws regulating the sale of goods. The provisions of the bill were worked out after investigation by lawyers and representatives of various States in order to provide a uniform sales law. Merchants in the District of Columbia and the District Commissioners concluded that a law similar to the sales laws found in 42 States was necessary in the District of Columbia. There is no substantial statutory law regulating sales within the District of Columbia and there is considerable confusion in the application of common law to transactions occurring in the District. The development of the metropolitan area surrounding Washington extending into Maryland and Virginia, both of which have adopted the provisions of the uniform sales law, tends toward confusion in commercial transactions to the detriment alike of the merchants and customers.

The provisions of the Uniform Sales Act have been tested by innumerable judicial constructions, the influence of which are reflected in the current draft. The bill, as reported by this committee, defines the rights of vendor, vendee, and third persons in sales and related transactions. It does not cover the field of conditional sales which may be treated in separate legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there ought to be some explanation of what the regulations are to be. The bill comprises 50 printed pages. Manifestly it proposes a marked change in the existing law, else what is the necessity for encumbering the statutes with a 50-page law regulating the sales of goods in the District of Columbia? What are the difficulties to be regulated? What are the bad practices which are sought to be prevented by the bill?

Mr. KING. All I can say, without going into great detail, is that the bill is in harmony with the sales laws of almost every State, including the State represented in part by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas himself.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if the bill relates to sales in bulk?

Mr. KING. No; it does not deal with that subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY rose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the apparent desire for a more complete explanation, I suggest that the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. I was about to suggest that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM FRANK LIPPS

The bill (S. 56) for the relief of William Frank Lipps was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William Frank Lipps, who was a member of Troop D, Fifteenth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 29th day of January 1904: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

MAJ. CHARLES H. SPRAGUE

The bill (S. 508) to authorize the award of the Purple Heart decoration to Maj. Charles H. Sprague was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause the recommendation for the award of the Purple Heart Medal to Maj. Charles H. Sprague, formerly captain, Medical Reserves, One Hundred and Third Ambulance Company, Twenty-sixth Division, to be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and such award to be made to Major Sprague if it is found by such boards or authorities that he was wounded in combat with an enemy of the United States during the World War.

JAMES J. JORDAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 211) for the relief of James J. Jordan, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after word "Provided", to strike out "That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, James J. Jordan shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of the Thirty-third Company, United States Coast Artillery Corps, on February 19, 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE OF LAW IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 204) relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GIBSON. Let the bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I notice by the calendar that the bill was introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I should be glad to have him analyze the bill for the benefit of myself and other Senators.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who prepared the report and reported the bill, is perhaps better able to offer an explanation than am I.

Mr. ROBINSON. The record shows that the Senator from Utah introduced the bill and reported it.

Mr. KING. I may add that most of the bills relating to the District come to us from the Commissioners after they have made thorough examination thereof and the bills have their approval as well as the approval of their counsel.

I may say in brief that there is no law in the District of Columbia relative to the practice of the legal profession. That situation has been the subject of a great deal of controversy and complaint.

The Bar Association, in conjunction with the District Commissioners and their counsel, took up this matter at the last session of Congress, and a bill was worked out which met the approval of the Bar Association, the District Commissioners, and the District's corporation counsel. That bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, unanimously passed the Senate, and went to the House. There, owing to the opposition of a certain individual whom I shall not name, the bill was not placed on the calendar, and the session adjourned without the bill being passed. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has gone over the bill very carefully, as well as the other lawyers upon the committee and the attorney for the District of Columbia, and they heartily approved of it.

Unfortunately, there are in the District of Columbia men pretending to be lawyers who are not, and they trade upon the credulity of the people, and advertise themselves as lawyers.

Therefore, it is believed that some measure should be adopted which will regulate the practice of law in the District of Columbia as it is regulated in every State in the Union, so far as I know. This bill is generally in harmony with the practice prevailing elsewhere.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, has the District Bar Association recommended and approved the proposed legislation?

Mr. KING. Yes; and the bill was largely drafted by a committee of the bar association.

Mr. McNARY. Do I understand that a similar bill passed the Senate last year?

Mr. KING. Unanimously.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over.

This bill must have careful consideration. It is far-reaching in its provisions. I object to its consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I inquire of the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] whether he persists in his objection to the consideration at this time of the so-called lawyers' bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I do object at this time. I desire more time to study the bill, after which I shall confer with the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I may say to my friend that in view of his objection I shall not move to take up the bill now; but I respectfully give notice that at the next call of the calendar, when the bill is reached, if the able Senator from Vermont still has objections, I shall move to take up the bill for consideration.

CONDUCT OF LOTTERIES, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 711) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, and particularly sections 863, 911, and 914 of the said code, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, constituting a Code of Law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same hereby are, amended as follows:

Section 863 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 863. If any person shall within the District keep, set up, or promote, or be concerned as owner, agent, or clerk, or in any other manner, in managing, carrying on, promoting, or advertising, directly or indirectly, any policy lottery, policy shop, or any lottery, or shall sell or transfer any chance, right, or interest, tangible or intangible, in any lottery or shall sell or transfer any ticket, certificate, bill, token, or other device, purporting or intended to guarantee or assure to any person or entitled him to a chance of drawing or obtaining a prize, to be drawn in any lottery, or in a game or device commonly known as policy lottery or policy or shall, for himself or another person, sell or transfer, or have in his possession for the purpose of sale or transfer, a chance or ticket in or share of a ticket in any policy lottery or any such bill, certificate, token, or other device, he shall be fined upon conviction of each said offense not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both. The possession of any such tickets, certificates, bills, slips, tokens, or other device shall be prima-facie evidence of purpose or intent of selling, transferring, exchanging, or negotiating the same."

SEC. 2. There is hereby added to said act a new section to be known as section 863 (a), to read as follows:

"SEC. 863. (a) If any person shall within the District have in his possession, knowingly, any ticket, certificate, bill, slip, token, paper, writing, or other device used, or to be used, or adapted, devised, or designed for the purpose of playing, carrying on, or conducting any lottery, or the game or device commonly known as policy lottery or policy, he shall be fined upon conviction of each said offense not more than $500 or be imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both."

SEC. 3. Section 911 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 911. Upon complaint, under oath, before the police court or a United States commissioner, setting forth that the affiant believes and has good cause to believe that there are concealed in any house or place articles stolen, taken by robbers, embezzled, or obtained by false pretenses, forged or counterfeited coins, stamps, labels, bank bills, or other instruments, or dies, plates, stamps, or brands for making the same, books or printed papers, drawings, engravings, photographs, or pictures of an indecent or obscene character, or instruments for immoral use, or any gaming table, device, or apparatus kept for the purpose of unlawful gaming, or any lottery tickets or lottery policies, or any book, paper, memorandum, or device for or used in recording any bet or deposit of money or thing or consideration of value received for any share, ticket, certificate, writing, bill, slip, or token in any pool or lottery or as a wager on or in connection with any race, game, contest, election, or other gambling transaction or device of an unlawful nature as defined in sections 863, 864, 865, 866, 868, and 869 of the act of March 3, 1901, as amended and supplemented, particularly describing the house or place to be searched, the things to be seized, substantially alleging the offense in relation thereto, and describing the person to be seized, the said court or United States commissioner may issue a warrant to the marshal or any officer of the Metropolitan Police commanding him to search such house or place for the property or other things, and, if found, to bring the same, together with the persons to be seized, before the police court.

"The said warrant shall have annexed to it, or inserted therein, a copy of the affidavit upon which it is issued, and may be substantially in the form following:

"'Whereas there has been filed before ———— an affidavit, of which the following is a copy [here insert]. These are therefore to command you to enter [here describe the place] and there diligently search for the said articles, goods, or chattels in the said affidavit described, and that you bring the same, or any part thereof, found on said search and also the body of ———— before the police court, to be dealt with and disposed of according to law.'"

SEC. 4. Section 914 of such act is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph thereto, the same to read as follows:

"If the property seized be articles, games, devices, or contrivances maintained, kept, set up, or used in violation of sections 863, 863 (a), 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, or 869 of this code, they shall be ordered destroyed, under direction of court, irrespective of any trial or the outcome thereof."

If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day the Senate passed Senate bill 711, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, and particularly sections 863, 911, and 914 of the said code. Upon investigation I find that while the bill had been reported by one committee, because of its subject matter it had been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and is pending there.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, be reconsidered and that the bill be restored to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the following nominations:

William R. Lawson, of California, to be State administrator for California in the Works Progress Administration, vice Frank Y. McLaughlin, resigned;

Charles E. Miner, of Illinois, to be State administrator for Illinois in the Works Progress Administration, vice Robert J. Dunham, resigned;

Sheridan P. Gorman, of Virginia, to be State director of the Public Works Administration in Virginia; and George S. Mitchell, of Virginia, to be regional director of the Resettlement Administration, vice Homer H. B. Mask.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Capt. Harold R. Stark to be a rear admiral in the Navy from the 1st day of January 1937, and also the nominations of sundry other officers in the Navy.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John Biggs, Jr., of Delaware, to be United States circuit judge, third circuit, to fill an existing vacancy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

STATE ADMINISTRATOR OF PUBLIC WORKS, MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senate has today received from the President of the United States the nomination of John J. McDonough to be State administrator for Massachusetts in the Public Works Administration. Under a different spelling of the name the nomination of this official has already been confirmed. The nomination just received is for the purpose of correcting the spelling of the name, so I ask that the nomination received today be confirmed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to confirm what has just been stated by the Senator from Tennessee. Mr. McDonough was nominated last week and the nomination was confirmed, but due to an error in the spelling of the name, Mr. McDonough's name has again been presented. I hope favorable action will be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it must have been observed by all Senators that particularly during the transaction of morning business, when petitions are to be presented, when bills and joint resolutions are to be introduced, and when other action is to be taken, there is normally needless confusion. I merely desire to give notice that hereafter the proceedings of the Senate will be in conformity with the rules, and that business shall be presented at the time the rules contemplate it shall be presented. This is for the reason that every Senator is entitled to know what business is being transacted, and that is impossible under any other system or plan than that provided by the rules.

I do not wish to be in any sense offensive to my friends in the Senate, but the habit has grown up of presenting bills and joint resolutions when their presentation is not in order, and after full opportunity has been given to introduce them. Hereafter, as a part of my duty, I shall suggest that unless there is some reason for a contrary course, the rules of the Senate shall be followed. The benefit of such action will be apparent to everyone.

I desire also to call attention to another matter. There is frequently too much noise on the floor when business is being transacted, and I shall ask that the rule of the Senate with respect to the orderly conduct of business be enforced.

There is no business before the Senate at this time. The House of Representatives is probably now considering the conference report on the so-called general relief bill, the bill passed by the Senate some days ago, a controversy having arisen over a certain amendment with which the Senate is familiar.

Necessity has arisen for the immediate enactment of this proposed legislation. In view of the situation which exists, I shall move that the Senate take a recess until 3:30 o'clock this afternoon, in the belief that by that time the conference report will reach the Senate, and the Senate may be afforded an opportunity to consider and dispose of it.

I do not go into the subject matter in detail at this time as to the necessity of prompt or early action, but unless the bill shall be enacted immediately it will be necessary for the relief organizations to suspend their pay rolls, and immeasurable confusion will arise.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. In view of the fact that there has been a controversy between the Senate and the House over the bill to which the Senator has referred, on which, according to what I have read in the newspapers, a compromise has been reached, would it not be possible at this time to have the conference report ordered printed so that it may be available when the Senate shall meet this afternoon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the clerk that the report is already available in printed form.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in view of the situation to which I have referred, I move that the Senate take a recess until 3:30 o'clock this afternoon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 3:30 o'clock p. m. this day.

At the conclusion of the recess the Senate reassembled.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Pope
Andrews	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	King	Robinson
Austin	Dieterich	La Follette	Russell
Bachman	Duffy	Lee	Schwartz
Bailey	Ellender	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Black	Frazier	Logan	Sheppard
Bone	Gerry	Lundeen	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gibson	McAdoo	Thomas, Utah
Bridges	Gillette	McCarran	Townsend
Brown, Mich.	Glass	McGill	Truman
Brown, N. H.	Green	McKellar	Tydings
Bulkley	Guffey	McNary	Vandenberg
Bulow	Harrison	Maloney	Van Nuys
Burke	Hatch	Murray	Wagner
Byrd	Hayden	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Herring	Norris	Wheeler
Capper	Hitchcock	Overton	White
Caraway	Holt	Pepper
Chavez	Hughes	Pittman

Mr. ROBINSON. I again announce the absence, for the reasons then stated, of Senators whose names were mentioned by me on the first roll call today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 5 and 9 to the bill and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 14, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 16 and 17 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "and to remain available until expended" and insert in lieu thereof the following "to remain available during the fiscal year 1938"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 5 and 9.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
CARTER GLASS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
FREDERICK HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. P. BUCHANAN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
C. A. WOODRUM,
(Except as to amendment no. 5:)
JOHN TABER,
ROBERT L. BACON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I assume the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate will make a statement with regard to the attitude of the conferees.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the report as submitted and as supplemented by the action of the House leaves really but one item in disagreement, that being what is described as amendment no. 9, which is in reference to the use of employees of the departments of the Government by special committees of the Senate and the House.

On amendment no. 5, as to which there was a disagreement, the House has receded. In the customary form of appropriations for expenses of Senate committees there has been a limitation, that not more than $3,600 per annum could be paid to any employee. The Senate changed that by removing the limitation. The House conferees suggested that in the place of the complete elimination of a limit there be inserted a provision that the salaries paid should not exceed those provided in the Classification Act; and that was agreeable to the conferees on the part of the Senate.

As to amendment no. 9, there is at this time a definite disagreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the report now before the Senate resolves all questions in controversy except as to amendment no. 5 and amendment no. 9.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the motion of the Senator in charge of the conference report? Does he insist on the disagreement and ask for a further conference?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I understand that the House has considered the conference report and has not just referred it back to the committee but has returned it to the Senate with an amendment, so that the problem before us in reference to amendment numbered 9, as I understand, is whether or not we will accede to the amendment of the House to our amendment to the bill.

Personally, as a member of the committee of conference, I may say that we have not had a meeting since this report was agreed to, and there are those in the Senate who are interested in this matter and who I think should be heard. I understand there is to be a suggestion of an amendment to the House amendment.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the question is on agreeing to the conference report. If the report should be agreed to by the Senate, the Senator from Colorado would then propose to take up amendment numbered 5 and amendment numbered 9, and make such motion as he desires to make concerning those two amendments. Whether the Senate will agree to the House amendments or not, the Chair does not know.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate agree to the report.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, may we not have the conference report explained? I do not know a thing about it, and have not seen it.

Mr. ADAMS. The conference report has been printed and is on the desks of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

The CHIEF CLERK. The House amendment is to strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by Senate amendment numbered 5, after the word "amended", in line 9, and to insert the following:

Provided further, That the rate of compensation for any position under the appropriations now available for, or herein or hereafter made for, expenses of inquiries and investigations of the Senate or expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives shall not exceed the rates fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for positions with comparable duties; and the salary limitations of $3,600 attached to the appropriations heretofore made for expenses of inquiries and investigations of the Senate or for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives are hereby repealed; and.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the conference report if the action suggested meets with the unanimous support of all the Senate conferees.

Mr. ADAMS. It does.

Mr. McNARY. Was the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] present when the report was agreed to?

Mr. ADAMS. He was.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as I understand, the effect would be to limit the compensation of persons employed by committees of the Senate to what they would receive under their respective classifications.

Mr. ADAMS. The report fixes that as a maximum.

Mr. ROBINSON. And does not establish a maximum of $3,600; it abandons that?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under the agreement which has been entered into, if $100,000 is allocated to a committee for conducting examinations or investigations, may they draft employees from various departments of the Government without reimbursing them from the $100,000 appropriation?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Utah that that question is not involved in the consideration of amendment no. 5. Amendment no. 5 deals solely with employees of committees where a committee employs someone and fixes his salary. As the practice has been heretofore, a Senate committee could not pay more than $3,600 per annum to any employee, expert, or professional person of any kind. The Senate adopted an amendment removing the $3,600 limitation, and leaving it to the discretion of the committee to fix the compensation. The original provision as it was adopted by the Senate fixed no maximum. The result of the conference is a provision that there shall be fixed as the limit of salary of any person employed by a committee the amount fixed in the general Classification Act as the maximum salary to be paid to such employee. It has nothing to do with amendment no. 9, which deals with the drawing of employees from departments.

Mr. KING. Then it would permit the payment of more than $300 a month, which heretofore has been the maximum allowed to attorneys employed by committees.

Mr. ADAMS. The maximum would be $9,000; that is, they would have to meet the requirements of the Classification Act. As the Senator knows, there is a rather gradual advance of salaries in the Classification Act.

Mr. KING. Does this mean that the maximum must be paid?

Mr. ADAMS. No; this fixes a maximum, not a minimum.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the adoption of this amendment would result in increasing materially the cost of all investigations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Assuming that the Senator from Colorado will make a similar motion in reference to amendment numbered 9, I should like to inquire whether the House amendment to amendment numbered 9 would still be open to amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Amendment numbered 9 has not as yet been brought before the Senate. The Chair has just recognized the Senator from Colorado, and understands he is about to make the same kind of a motion in reference to amendment numbered 9 that he made as to amendment numbered 5.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am inquiring as to whether or not, if he makes a similar motion in reference to amendment numbered 9 that he made in reference to amendment numbered 5, it would still be open to amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be.

Mr. ADAMS. I may say to the President that that answers, perhaps, the parliamentary inquiry I was about to propound, as to whether, if a motion were made to refuse to concur, the amendment would then be open to amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate decline to concur in the House amendment to Senate amendment numbered 9.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the House amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to make a motion with reference to the disagreement?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My understanding was, following the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado, that the Chair had ruled that after his motion was made, a motion to amend would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct. The Chair has not yet put the question. The clerk will state the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 9.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following: "or of any appropriation or other funds of any executive department or independent executive agency shall be used after June 30, 1937, to pay the compensation of any person detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. An amendment to that motion takes precedence of the motion itself.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the House amendment to Senate amendment numbered 9 by striking therefrom the words "or of any appropriation or other funds of any executive department or independent executive agency."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, first I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the situation which would result from concurrence in the amendment which has been sent over from the House.

Senators will remember that as the bill came from the House, and as it was presented to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, it provided that no funds from the appropriation under consideration or from the Relief Act of 1936 could be used for the purpose of obtaining employees to work for regular or special committees of either House which were conducting investigations. We amended that bill last week by adding to the language the words "or of any appropriation for any executive department or independent executive agency", and then provided that such funds could be used if either the relief agency or any governmental department should, before the 10th of each month, file a report with the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate.

The amendment which the House now proposes goes further than the original bill as it was submitted to the Senate. The proposal made by the House would, after June 30, prevent any committee of either the House or the Senate using the services of any employee of the Government.

The amendment which I propose would eliminate from consideration at the present time employees of the executive departments or the independent agencies, and would leave the matter for discussion at a later date.

I recognize that when debating a question involving employees of our committees we are told that relief funds are about to expire tomorrow or the next day, we are possibly subject to the criticism that we are preventing people from getting necessary relief funds because of the time taken to discuss the question of the employees of our committees.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator also realizes, of course, that by reason of the fact that relief funds are almost exhausted, and that further appropriation is necessary in what is essentially a relief bill, an effort is being made to compel this body to accede to the wishes of one man, no matter what he may be supporting, by putting into a relief deficiency bill legislation that should be, and is, subject to a point of order in both branches of Congress.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator. It is because of a realization of that fact that I am offering my amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I realize that very fully, Mr. President.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I was out of the Chamber for a moment, during which time action was taken agreeing to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5; and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it agreed to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

As I said, I was not on the floor of the Chamber when that action was taken. I desire to object to the House amendment both on the ground that it is not in order and because it is not proper.

I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration in order that the question may be discussed. I do not think any Senator knew the nature of the matter being considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama for unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The question now before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 9.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit an inquiry?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. When an investigation is authorized by either branch of Congress, and an appropriation is carried in the resolution authorizing the investigation, and the limit is fixed at any given sum, if employees are then drawn from departments of the Government by the investigating committee, who is to pay such employees? Is the amount to come out of the fund carried in the resolution authorizing the investigation, or must the department from which such employees are drawn pay their expenses and their usual salaries according to the Classification Act?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say in answer to the question of the Senator from Utah that at the present time and in the past such persons have been paid by the Department out of its regular appropriation. Recognizing the evil existing in such a situation, I offered last week the amendment which would require a report to be submitted to the Senate every 30 days, so that Senators, and particularly the members of the Appropriations Committee, would know that in connection with the investigation by a committee, moneys were being expended in excess of the amount that had been allowed through the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I felt that that amendment met the particular evil which I frankly recognized as one regarding which some sort of action should be taken on the part of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Then, if the Senator's amendment should be agreed to, I understand his position to be that if, for example, $10,000 is allowed for an investigation, and employees are taken from some department of the Government for use by the investigating committee, such employees must be paid out of the $10,000, and not out of the fund allocated to the department from which the employees are drawn?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; but the amendment, if agreed to, will result in giving us a check every 30 days on the work of such committee, which I feel will enable the Senate to obviate any abuses which might arise.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. If reports as to the use of departmental employees were made every 30 days by committees, what good would result from such reports, when investigating committees sit during the recess of Congress, and in view of the fact that most of the money complained of is expended during the recess of Congress? What good would the reports do after all the money is gone?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I recognize, with the Senator from Virginia, that the reports will not be fruitful of any great benefit; but I want to discuss the question as to whether or not committees should be permitted to use employees from the various governmental agencies.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I think the Congress ought to know what it is going to cost the taxpayers before committees are permitted to use such employees. No one desires to stop any investigation that is now being pursued by any committee. Such a suggestion or thought is mere imagination. What we desire to do is to prevent hereafter any committee of the Senate using $500,000—half a million dollars—of the time of employees of the departments without the Senate knowing anything about it. I think the investigation conducted by the Interstate Commerce Committee has revealed a great many startling facts. I think those facts could have been obtained, however, by asking for an appropriation from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Insofar as concerns investigations conducted during the recess of Congress, the argument of the Senator from Virginia is very pertinent. However, I believe I can convince the Members of the Senate, using the one example of the use of the Interstate Commerce Commission's employees, that it is desirable to make use of such employees; and it has been my thought that if we had a check upon their use every 30 days during the time Congress was in session, abuses would not creep into the methods of using these employees.

Mr. GLASS. If the Interstate Commerce Commission itself has so little use for these thirty-odd employees that it may detail them to the use of a Senate committee carrying on an investigation, it ought to get rid of them altogether.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the question of the use made of these employees were fully gone into, I think I could convince the Members of the Senate that that is not the correct conclusion to draw.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I thought I had explained this matter fully the other day. I desire again to call to the attention of this body the fact that in connection with the investigation of railroads the Committee on Interstate Commerce was confronted with a most unusual situation.

In the first place, when we proposed to investigate railroad financing the subject went before the full membership of the Interstate Commerce Committee. The committee held hearings upon the necessity for going into the question. Commissioner Eastman, Commissioner Mahaffie, Hon. Jesse Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and several others came before the committee and testified as to the necessity for carrying on the investigation.

After that the matter was the subject of hearings before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and Mr. Kennedy, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, came before that committee and testified as to the necessity for the investigation, and again Commissioner Eastman came before the committee and testified as to the necessity for the investigation. If my memory serves me correctly, Hon. Jesse Jones also appeared before the committee. I am not sure about that. However, he testified before the Interstate Commerce Committee.

At that time the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate did the unusual thing of amending the measure by directing that the Interstate Commerce Committee use the Interstate Commerce Commission employees and use the employees of the various other departments. That provision was not put in at my suggestion. It was put in at the instance of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Did not the language referred to authorize the committee, and not direct it, to take such action?

Mr. WHEELER. If I am not mistaken, the language both authorized and directed. However, the resolution will speak for itself.

On the question of using the time of employees to the value of half a million dollars, let me say to the Senator from Virginia that he is apparently in error.

I am aware that the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission or an employee of the Commission testified before the House Appropriations Committee in such a way that if Senators will read that testimony they will come to the conclusion that the committee itself had arbitrarily taken so much money from the Commission and used it. I read here the other day, in the absence of the Senator from Virginia, a letter from Commissioner Eastman, in which he says:

DEAR SENATOR: This letter is written in my capacity as the member of the Interstate Commerce Commission to whom its Bureau of Accounts reports.

I may say that Commissioner Eastman is chairman of the Bureau of Accounts; he particularly handles and is the one in charge of that Bureau, and this is what he says, among other things:

As fully set forth in the annual reports of the Commission to Congress for the years 1935 and 1936, accountants of that Bureau have, since July 1935, been used to assist your committee in the investigation authorized by Senate Resolution 71, and in 1936 this work absorbed the services of about one-half of the force available for field work. While this has lessened the routine work of the Bureau, I believe, and we have so reported to Congress, that the work which these accountants have been and are doing under Senate Resolution 71 is of great general value and also of special value to the Commission in the regulation of railroads, including the regulation of their accounting.

I read again from another paragraph of the letter of Commissioner Eastman, in which he says:

The effect of the resolution has been to decrease the amount of work done under the function no. (2) above, i. e., general accounting examinations, and to increase the amount done under function (3), i. e., special investigations, which are going particularly into the financial affairs of the carriers. In other words, we are, for the time being, concentrating on a more or less specialized matter, with lessening of the more routine work of policing the accounts.

Again he says:

To a considerable extent we might have conducted such an inquiry on our own account, but I am glad that your committee has undertaken it for these reasons:

First. Our powers of inquiry are largely confined to the carriers, but these financial matters ramify into banking and holding-company activities which your committee has powers to investigate but we have not.

Second. The bringing to public attention of any abuses that may be discovered is in itself of great importance, and an investigation conducted by a Senate committee is more effective in this respect than an investigation conducted by the Commission.

Third. If the abuses can and should be corrected by legislation, it is of great advantage to have the investigation in charge of a committee of Congress which is in the best possible position to seek the necessary legislation. As a matter of fact, examination of the reports made to Congress by this Commission in the past will show that the present inquiry is again disclosing abuses and opportunities therefor. * * *

Fourth. Your committee has been able to employ for the investigation, in addition to our accountants, other men equipped by training for the work, thus magnifying largely the results which we would have been able to obtain unaided.

I now wish to call attention to the Senate resolution itself. On page 2 it is provided:

That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to obtain such facts——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], but I am going to suggest a course of procedure with a view to facilitating the final passage of this bill.

As was stated this morning, there is the necessity now for prompt, I might say immediate, action on this bill. If it does not pass today, if it is not enacted today, there will be a large number of projects discontinued tomorrow, when thousands who are now upon the pay roll will go off the pay roll temporarily, resulting in endless confusion. We all know that the sentiment of the Senate was emphatically expressed a few days ago when the vote on this question was taken, it being a unanimous vote, something that seldom occurs in the Senate. There were 72 votes to 0 in favor of the Senate's substitute for the House provision.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has offered an amendment which will make the provisions of this proposed legislation applicable alone to the appropriations in the pending bill, and will necessarily leave the general subject matter open to consideration and discussion on bills hereafter to be presented to the two Houses which are not affected with that degree of emergency that is attached to this measure. The Senate passed this bill several days ago, and the one thing that has occasioned delay is the controversy that is involved in this amendment.

There are, of course, other amendments, but none of them has presented the difficulties which this amendment involves.

I am going to make the suggestion that the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Washington and dispatch the bill back to the House of Representatives, which body is now in session, with the assumption that the House will take cognizance of the action of the Senate. Then I shall ask that the Senate stand in recess again, with a view of having the Senate resume its session at the call of the Presiding Officer, so that if it becomes necessary to take further action the Senate may be in a position to do so today. I do not wish the Senate to adjourn in the situation in which we find ourselves.

Therefore if the Senator from Montana, the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Washington, and the Senator from Colorado, all of whom are especially interested in the subject, are willing to have that course taken, I should like to see it taken at once.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say for myself that that would be as satisfactory to me, in the circumstances, as would any other proposition.

I may say, without trying to prolong the debate, that the Senator from Montana is mistaken in saying that I am in error. If any error has been committed, it has been by the Interstate Commerce Commission and not by me. I based my remarks exactly on what the Interstate Commerce Commission set forth.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not want to get into any controversy with the Senator from Virginia, and if the Interstate Commerce Commission gave the Senator the facts, then I say the Commission was mistaken.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the suggestion I have made is satisfactory to the Senators, then I should like to have that action taken.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me finish this statement, if the Senator will be kind enough.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. At the instance of the Senator from Alabama, an amendment that was agreed to has been reconsidered. It will be necessary to take some action on that, I assume, before the bill goes back to the House. The point, however, is that the Senate ought to act. We discussed this amendment which is the principal subject matter of controversy very fully in the Senate on previous days, and we have heretofore acted on it. Now the two Houses find themselves in disagreement about the matter. If this were an ordinary appropriation bill or if the situation had not arisen which I have already described, I would be entirely content to fight it out indefinitely, in the hope that a final conclusion might be reached on the subject, but the practical thing to do is to get this bill through. Let us not stop all the projects that are under construction and disarrange all the pay rolls to the unhappiness of perhaps thousands and possibly hundreds of thousands of people. I am informed that this is the last day on which the Works Progress Administration may be able to carry on without additional funds being provided.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I hope the course suggested by the Senator from Arkansas will be followed.

Mr. WHEELER. The suggestion is agreeable to me.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to conclude with the statement that the opportunity to fight this question to a conclusion at a time when we will not be under pressure will come in connection with the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill. The House has already raised the issue on that bill, and, presumably, we will have it before the Senate within the next 2 or 3 weeks.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that that bill is now under consideration by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 9.

The amendment of Mr. SCHWELLENBACH to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I now move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have not had time, of course, to study the effect of this amendment. I have already shown it to the Senator from Montana and he likewise is not able at this time to state how far it will affect his committee. This is an amendment which was added in the other House, and it provides another limitation and restriction upon the activities not only of his committee but the committee of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and all other committees, as I read the amendment hurriedly, that may now or hereafter be appointed. It may be possible that the limitation is of such a nature that it is justifiable; but I am not sufficiently familiar with the Classification Act to know as to that.

The amendment provides, with reference to the expenditure of the $125,000 appropriated in this bill for investigating purposes—and I invite the particular attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to this point—that there shall be a limitation upon what may be paid any employee of any commitee hereafter as a matter of general law, which compensation shall not exceed the rate fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The provision contained a limitation of $3,600 when it was previously before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the amendment adopted by the House is certainly a great improvement over the existing law. The existing law limits salaries paid from any funds appropriated from the contingent fund of either House to exceed $3,600 per annum. This amendment would provide that from money appropriated to committees from contingent funds, the maximum salary which could be paid would be the salary fixed by the Classification Act for similar services performed in other branches of the Government. Therefore, for example, so far as an attorney is concerned, a committee using funds from the contingent fund of the Senate or the House could pay not to exceed the same rate of salary that is paid to attorneys in the various departments of the Government. Consequently the Senator should regard this compromise as a step forward so far as obtaining competent personnel is concerned.

Furthermore, those employees who might be loaned from other departments to investigating committees would be subject to the Classification Act in any case.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator a question at that point? As I stated in the beginning when I invited the Senator's attention, I have not had time to find out what the effect would be. Who would determine under the amendment what salary should be paid? I am not sure that the provision as it is now worded would place that responsibility. Would it be the Comptroller General?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I read the amendment adopted by the House, the limitation would be imposed upon the particular committee which was about to employ an individual. It would be the responsibility of the chairman of the committee signing the voucher and of the disbursing officer of the Senate paying under the voucher to make certain that they were paying the going rate of pay under the Classification Act for similar services. For example, if an attorney should be employed, it would be necessary for the chairman of the particular committee to make certain that he was paying the attorney the going rate of pay provided by the Classification Act for attorneys performing similar services in the various departments of the Government.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. As I see it, the amendment fixes no responsibility in any place for the determination of the comparable duties to which the rule of the classified service could be applied. If the responsibility is imposed on the Comptroller General, he might very readily fix the rate in the classified service which was imposed on some attorneys in one case about which I was told 2 years ago by a judge of the circuit court of appeals. He told me he believed a very important case, having to do with the antitrust prosecutions, had not been properly presented on the part of the Government because two lawyers who presented the case on behalf of the Government were young and inexperienced. They were very able young lawyers, possibly, but inexperienced. One of them was drawing $2,400 per annum and the other $3,000 per annum, and were opposed by several of the most eminent lawyers in the State.

No matter how reasonable the salary might be which the Senate committee proposes to pay for attorneys, nevertheless under the terms of the amendment the Comptroller General would be able to say, "In the Harvester Trust case the attorney representing the Government received only $2,400; therefore, that salary would be comparable, and no more should be paid in this case."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield further?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to say, in response to the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, that I do not believe the Comptroller General would have anything to do with passing upon moneys appropriated by the Senate or the House from their respective contingent funds.

Mr. CLARK. Then who would possess the authority?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The limitation would be upon the committee. Heretofore there has been a limitation upon salaries of $3,600, which was binding upon the chairman of a committee and upon the disbursing officers of the respective Houses. In addition to that there is a provision of statute that no special or select committee of the Senate conducting an investigation shall incur a deficit. There is no punishment for a violation of that act; but, of course, every Senator or Representative responsible to his party for discharging his duties would make absolutely certain that no deficit was to be incurred because of the statutory provision to the effect just stated. I believe this is simply a standard or guide by which the chairmen of the respective committees of the House and Senate would be governed in fixing salaries and that its provisions would be conscientiously followed.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield at that point?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire first to make a suggestion which perhaps under different circumstances might be considered as impertinence. I know not whether the amendment of the House be right or whether it be wrong. It seems to me it is insignificant just now.

In Kentucky several hundred thousand women and children are homeless and in need. They are solely dependent upon W. P. A. workers to furnish them the necessities of life. If we are to continue this discussion—and I say this in all kindness—until the House adjourns, and we do not get action today, it is very likely that two or three hundred thousand people in my State will be deprived of the assistance which we can give them by disposing of this matter promptly.

I have not said anything during the consideration of the relief measure. Congress has been very generous to my State. However, unless something is done promptly, as I am advised directly, by tomorrow many thousands of workers will have to cease work because there will be no funds with which to pay them.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BLACK. Let me yield first to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who has been seeking an opportunity to speak. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that I think we would have finished before he concluded his remarks. We had just about reached an agreement, and now we shall try to reach one.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope no one else will cause any further discussion.

Mr. BLACK. I hope so. I hope the vote will not be delayed 5 more minutes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as I understand, the action of the House is in accordance with the view expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. It simply substitutes the salaries provided for in the classification law for the $3,600 limitation which has heretofore governed the payment of all salaries by Senate committees.

When a Senate committee acts now, it spends its money for such salaries as are fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. There is nothing in this amendment which could take from a Senate committee the right to spend money from the contingent fund of the Senate in the same manner it has heretofore spent it. Under the classification laws as high as $9,000 a year may be paid for professional services, which is almost $6,000 more than the existing limitation, and I hope the Senator from Alabama will not object to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, my reason for calling attention to this particular amendment was that I thought it was vague and indefinite and that for that reason it was perhaps not wise to agree to it as a general law; but with the explanation of the Senator from South Carolina I will state that I have no objection whatever to the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate stand in recess until called to order by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to: and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

At 6:57 p. m. the Senate reassembled, being called to order by the Vice President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment no. 9 to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, requested a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. TABER, and Mr. BACON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment no. 9 to House bill 3587, the first deficiency appropriation bill, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment no. 9 to the bill, accede to the request of the House for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate again stand in recess until called to order by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

At 7:25 o'clock p. m., the Senate reassembled, being called to order by the Vice President.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 and amendments thereto to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 9:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree thereto with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by Senate amendment numbered 9 and the amendment of the House thereto and the amendment of the Senate to such House amendment, insert the following: "or of the appropriation in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936 shall be used to pay the compensation of any person, not taken from relief rolls, detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof. This proviso shall not take effect until thirty days after the date of the enactment of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
CARTER GLASS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. P. BUCHANAN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
C. A. WOODRUM,
JOHN TABER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, before making a motion I wish to advise the Senate that this report represents a complete agreement, and if the Senate agrees to it, it will mean the passage of the bill.

I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN ENROLLED DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized to sign the enrolled deficiency bill during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow this session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until Wednesday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, February 10, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who sittest in the seat of everlasting love, may our hearts respond to that praise and gladness worthy of the children of God. Do Thou, morning, noon, and night, inspire in us those nobilities which enrich human life. We pray Thee that the gospel of peace may spread throughout our Nation. In that spirit that liberalizes, bring men nearer to one another and make them feel more the ties of common brotherhood; hand in hand and heart to heart may they labor. We beseech Thee that truth may triumph against error, justice against oppression, and humanity against wrong. Heavenly Father, be with our honored Speaker and the Congress throughout the coming week; may their deliberations be worthy of their high calling. Bless us with Thy merciful providence out of the heart of heaven. In the name of Jesus our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 113. An act for the relief of Daniel Yates;

S. 292. An act for the relief of Thomas Salleng;

S. 327. An act for the relief of Felix Griego;

S. 418. An act for the relief of Robert H. Muirhead;

S. 461. An act to settle claims of farmers whose lands were damaged by waters from Kelly Field, Tex.;

S. 530. An act to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936; and

S. 686. An act for the relief of Anthony J. Constantino.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 974. An act to create the Capital Auditorium Commission.

THE LATE CHARLES R. CRISP

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I announce to the House the death of former Congressman Charles R. Crisp, which occurred yesterday at his home at Americus, Ga.

Few men have ever come to this House better trained and equipped than he, for in his early days he was practically reared in the atmosphere of this Chamber.

At the age of 21 he was chosen Parliamentarian by his distinguished father, Speaker Crisp, and served in that capacity from 1891 to 1895. He was again appointed Parliamentarian during the Sixty-second Congress for the late Speaker, Champ Clark.

He was an authority on the rules and procedure of this body and will ever be remembered as one of the great Parliamentarians of the House.

He was elected to the Sixty-third Congress from the Third Congressional District of Georgia and served continuously for 20 years, retiring voluntarily from the House in 1933 to enter the race for the Senate.

From the first day of his service to the last he occupied a prominent place in the House, and during the long period of time that he served he was one of the recognized leaders.

He gained a national reputation in 1932 as acting chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. He was the Democratic member on the Foreign Debt Refunding Commission. While strictly a party man, he always placed the welfare of his country above that of his party.

He was beloved by the people of his district and the State and during his long service he was only opposed once.

After his retirement from the House, for a time he served as a Democratic member of the Tariff Commission, and shortly thereafter resigned to engage in the practice of law here in Washington where he enjoyed a lucrative practice.

He was held in the highest esteem and respect by the membership of this House, and those of us who knew him and with whom he served will mourn his passing away.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. WHITE of Idaho asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read a resolution which I am today introducing in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. Res. 111

Whereas the President has forwarded to the Congress a message on the State of the Union in which he questions the ability and capacity of men over the age of 70½ years to perform the duties of judges or justices of the various courts of the United States by virtue of the infirmities of mind and body which he suggests are inevitable in all such persons and has urged solely for that reason that he be authorized to select additional judges or justices to help any of these poor enfeebled men who refrain from voluntary retirement perform such duties; and

Whereas either through inadvertence or a tender solicitude for the feelings of the Congress, the President failed in such message to call attention to the fact that the duties of a Representative or a Senator are still more arduous, confining, and continuous than those of a judge or justice, embracing as they do, along with manifold other duties, the consideration before enactment of the constitutionality of all acts of Congress, while the courts must consider only those specifically challenged in litigation; and

Whereas each House of the Congress is the sole judge of the qualifications of its Members and has untrammeled authority to expel any Representative or Senator found unfit for the performance of his or her duties; and

Whereas it seems appropriate that the House should consider whether it has any motes in its own eyes before the President shall call specific attention thereto or it shall start consideration of any beams which may exist elsewhere in the Government: Therefore

Resolved, That the Speaker do appoint a select committee of five members to make inquiry and report to the House prior to the consideration of any legislation affecting the judiciary upon the following questions, to wit:

1. Whether Members of the House who have passed the age of 70½ and who, therefore, date from the "horse and buggy" days, are incapable of performing their full duties as such Members, including specifically the primary duty of considering the constitutionality of pending legislation.

2. Whether the House has the power to expel Members who have passed the age of 70 years because of such infirmity, if any, or whether the less drastic remedy should be applied of supplying them with associates to do their work.

3. Whether the Congress has the power to provide for the appointment by the President of associate Representatives in Congress, to relieve such aged and infirm Representatives of their full responsibilities and prerogatives, including the control of patronage.

4. Whether the House should act along these lines with great promptness, to forestall the possibility of being asked to do so.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, in the opinion of the Chair, to what committee would this resolution be referred?

The SPEAKER. It is the opinion of the Chair, after a cursory examination of the resolution, that it would be referred to the committee of which the gentleman from New York is chairman.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules is perfectly willing to relinquish its jurisdiction in this matter and suggests that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask whether the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has the time and inclination to answer a question?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I will gladly answer any question I can.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I inquire of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts whether she has given any thought to the matter of a $20,000 pension for retired Members of Congress over 70 years of age, like the Supreme Court Judges?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Not as yet, but if the Rules Committee will grant us a hearing, we can consider that matter also.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that on the last three Wednesdays we have asked and secured unanimous consent for the waiving of the right to call the calendar. It is not my intention to ask unanimous consent that that be done this coming Wednesday. Just what committees may have bills pending on the calendar for next Wednesday I do not know, but it is our purpose to preserve insofar as we can Calendar Wednesday for the various committees. I do not like to object to the request of the gentleman from Ohio, but it would seem to me that some of these committees which may have bills to be considered next Wednesday and which may be passed and not reached again this session might have something to say about the matter. If they do not desire to use the 45 minutes, which is their right, I would not feel like objecting myself, but I am calling this to the attention of the chairmen of the committees involved and to the committees themselves, because they may miss being called on that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks as of February 4 for the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

(Mr. COLLINS and Mr. LEA asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.)

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER] has gone to Ohio to attend the funeral of our distinguished fellow Ohioan, Hon. R. W. Durbin. Mr. FLETCHER is there representing the Ohio delegation. If he were present today he would be much interested in the juvenile court bill, which is coming up.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that he may be granted leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I have the privilege of presenting a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman simply desire to introduce a privileged resolution without making any remarks?

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to drop his resolution in the box.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I wanted the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 14, and 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 16 and 17 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "and to remain available until expended" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to remain available during the fiscal year 1938"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 5 and 9.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3587) entitled "A bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended and agreed upon in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6, relating to the Senate: Inserts the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, for salaries and expenses of the Senate.

On no. 7: Appropriates $30,000, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries and other expenses of the Joint Committee on Government Organization.

On no. 8: Appropriates $789,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $790,000,000, as proposed by the House, for relief and work relief.

On no. 10: Strikes out the limitation, proposed by the Senate, relating to the employment of administrative or supervisory personnel under the appropriation for relief and work relief.

On no. 11: Inserts the appropriation, proposed by the Senate, for salaries and expenses for the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentennial Commission.

On no. 12: Appropriates $50,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, to enable the Farm Credit Administration to make crop-production and harvesting loans under the act approved January 29, 1937.

On no. 13: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation of $100,000 for the fiscal year 1936 for contract air-mail service under the Post Office Department.

On nos. 14 and 15: Appropriates for payments to Federal land banks on account of reductions in interest rates on farm mortgages in the phraseology proposed by the House bill, which follows existing law.

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following Senate amendments:

No. 5: Appropriating $125,000 for inquiries and investigations of the Senate and removing the salary limitation of $3,600 per person per annum on previous appropriations made for that purpose.

No. 9: Relating to the use of funds of the executive departments and other executive agencies in the payment of personnel detailed or loaned in connection with investigations or inquiries undertaken by either House of Congress under a special resolution.

JOHN TABER,
ROBERT L. BACON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, we think the statement fairly represents what is in the conference report with the exception of one or two amendments which will come up afterward. As soon as the conference report is adopted, the amendments will be before the House and I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether he wishes to discuss the report because, otherwise, I shall move its adoption and move the previous question.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there can be no reasonable objection on the part of any Member of the House to the items contained in the conference report, regardless of what their position may have been on some of the items originally in the bill, and therefore I can see no logical objection to the adoption of the report.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report, and on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 5: Beginning on line 11, page 2, insert the following:

"For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, fiscal year 1937, $125,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the Subsistence Expense Act of 1929, approved June 3, 1926, as amended: Provided further, That any money heretofore appropriated and now unexpended for inquiries and investigations of the Senate shall not be subject to the limitation of $3,600 per annum for personal or professional services."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment after the word "amended" in line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided further, That the rate of compensation for any position under the appropriations now available for, or herein or hereafter made for, expenses of inquiries and investigations of the Senate or expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives shall not exceed the rates fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for positions with comparable duties; and the salary limitations of $3,600 attached to appropriations heretofore made for expenses of inquiries and investigations of the Senate or for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives are hereby repealed."

Mr. TABER and Mr. BOILEAU rose.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not within the range of the conference or the differences between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. All that is required is that the amendment shall be germane to the Senate amendment. The Chair will quote the syllabus which may be found in Cannon's Precedents, volume 8, section 3189:

In amending a Senate amendment the House is not confined within the limits set by the original bill and the Senate amendments.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the preferential motion that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers the preferential motion that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BOILEAU moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. O'MALLEY rose.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the motion.

Mr. O'MALLEY. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-four Members present, a quorum. The gentleman from Virginia asks for a division on the motion to recede and concur. The question is, Shall the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. TABER) there were 175 ayes and 35 noes.

So the House voted to recede.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman offer his amendment to amendment numbered 5?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. It changes the language of the salary limitation.

Mr. MAPES. Is that all it does?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. It repeals the $3,600 a year limitation upon employees of investigating committees?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. That is all the gentleman's amendment does?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Under the gentleman's amendment there will be no limitation upon the salaries that could be paid?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit. This amendment repeals the $3,600 salary limitation on what an investigating committee of either House can now pay any person it hires, and it places a new salary limitation upon a basis not to exceed the salary that an employee would get under the Salary Classification Act for comparable duties. In other words, it places the compensation of employees of investigating committees at not to exceed the standard Government rates as fixed by the Classification Act for comparable duties.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What would be that limit?

Mr. WOODRUM. The limit would be the limit they now get—either eight or nine thousand dollars.

Mr. SNELL. It would raise it from $3,600 to $9,000?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. That is, they would receive a salary classification the same as those doing comparable work would receive in the various departments.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Assuming that a House or Senate investigating committee had working for them an attorney to do the job of work, comparable to the work done by attorneys during the last session of Congress, what would they get under this amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM. Whatever they would be entitled to under the regular classification schedules as passed by Congress.

Mr. BOILEAU. I regret that that does not mean anything to me. I wonder if the gentleman is able to give the House the information.

Mr. WOODRUM. The reason I cannot give the gentleman a specific answer is because he does not give me specific information as to what the attorney is going to do. If the attorney is going to perform work of an ordinary junior attorney, he would get the classification under the schedule. If he is going into trial work he would get the rate of a senior attorney, perhaps.

Mr. BOILEAU. What would Ferdinand Pecora have received when he was acting on the Senate committee; what would his rate of pay be under the classification if this amendment should prevail?

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot answer the gentleman specifically, because I have not at my fingers' ends the formula of the Civil Service Commission or the details of the Classification Act, but I should imagine between five and nine thousand dollars.

Mr. BOILEAU. But as a private attorney he works only for a few months and he does not have the opportunity of building up a clientele through length of service.

Mr. WOODRUM. He could not get over $9,000 unless Congress took specific action to pay it to him.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is all well and good, but my understanding—and I am not sure of my ground—is that a man such as he doing the work for a committee under the provisions of this amendment would get very much less than five or nine thousand dollars, but his compensation would be somewhere around $3,500.

Mr. WOODRUM. I think the gentleman is vastly in error.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not claim to know definitely, but if the gentleman says that he is positive, I am willing to take his statement for it. If he does not know for sure I think we should have that information from someone who does know.

Mr. WOODRUM. I say this, based on this fact, that if Mr. Smith or Mr. Pecora, or anybody else were being graded in the Interstate Commerce Commission for a legal position based on his character as an attorney, and the character of the clientele he had, and experience, he would be put in brackets under the classification act very much higher than $3,000, and, if so, he would be paid according to the salary provided for that bracket.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is this not a fact: If an investigating committee employ a man, they can pay him only $3,600 a year, but if they want a man in the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Power Commission, or any other commission of the Government furloughed to this committee, he would here receive the same salary that he receives in that commission? If he is receiving $5,000 there, he would receive $5,000 here; $7,500 there, he would receive $7,500 here; and so on, up to $9,000. Of course, I think hardly anyone could answer the question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] because, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has said, the man would not be classified by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. It has been my observation that in these investigations quite often they do not employ the services of a man who is in the employ of the Government at the time the investigation is held, but they get some outside attorney, some man who is not classified under the Civil Service Act or the Classification Act; some man whom they consider especially expert, or for some reason the committee employs someone who does not have this classification. The information I have received is that those men would not be paid for their services properly in comparison with their ability or their experience for the type of work they are doing.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do I understand that if the special committee desires to employ outside counsel, they are limited to $3,600?

Mr. WOODRUM. They are under existing law.

Mr. McCORMACK. But under the proposed amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM. Under the proposed amendment they are limited to the salary schedule in the Classification Act, unless the Congress specifically gives them authority to go over that, under the resolution of investigation.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, if the committee were to present evidence in support of the man's qualification, occupying a position comparable to a senior attorney, he would receive $5,000 a year as a senior attorney in a department, and the committee could employ an attorney and pay him compensation in the sum of $5,000 a year. Is that an illustration?

Mr. WOODRUM. Absolutely.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Who is going to decide what classification these attorneys from the outside who may be employed by an investigating committee will be in? The Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Civil Service Commission as it does now.

Mr. O'MALLEY. And not the committee?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not the committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. But the committee in the first instance would present the facts, and it is highly probable that the Civil Service Commission would not take issue with the special committee who presented the facts showing a man to be qualified as a senior attorney, for example?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is true.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. I desire to direct the gentleman's attention to amendment no. 10, which prohibits the employment of more than one-half of 1 percent of the employees of any administrative agency who are nonresidents of a State or region where employed.

Mr. WOODRUM. We have not come to that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That was in the conference report. That has been eliminated.

Mr. TARVER. The conference report eliminates that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It does.

Mr. TARVER. I wish to express my regret that the conference committee has seen fit to eliminate a provision which would prevent sending people from other parts of the country into a State to fill positions that could be filled within the State, particularly under W. P. A. Can the gentleman give the House some reason why that amendment has been eliminated in conference?

Mr. WOODRUM. I will say to the gentleman, without going into a lengthy discussion of it, that it was absolutely unworkable, for the reason that there are so many border States. For instance, take the State of New York, where hundreds of thousands of people working in New York live in New Jersey. Under that amendment there would have been possibly hundreds of people who are working for the relief administration in New York City, who happen to have their residence in New Jersey or in Connecticut, who would have to be eliminated.

Mr. TARVER. Could not the gentleman's committee have worked out some substitute that would have prevented sending people from New York down to my State, for example, to do work that people in my State could very well do?

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee was especially interested in the gentleman's State, and found, to its utter satisfaction, that the carpetbagger to whom the gentleman has been objecting has been removed and he is no longer down there.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman is mistaken in limiting the carpetbagger to one. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, the real reason is to give the investigating committee the right to pay more than $3,600 a year for counsel, and they may go as far as $9,000. Is not that the real reason of the whole proposition?

Mr. WOODRUM. The purport of it is to standardize the salaries paid to attorneys and other investigators on investigations on the same basis that they are paid when they are employed by a Government department.

Mr. SNELL. But the real reason is to increase the amount that will be paid to these people?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I would not say that is the real reason.

Mr. SNELL. But today you have a $3,600 limit.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think the gentleman would say that for $3,600, on an annual basis, we would be able to employ some of the type of people who should work on some of these investigations.

Mr. SNELL. I do not take that position, but I say the reason you are bringing in this amendment is to give the committee an opportunity to pay larger salaries?

Mr. WOODRUM. Give them more latitude.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In connection with what the minority leader said, the reverse of that is true also, that under the existing situation, people may be paid $3,600 who were clerks, and so forth, and under the amendment they would not receive that amount. They might receive as low as $1,000 because they were within that classification bracket.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Would this amendment affect in any way the amount that is to be paid to the secretaries of these investigating committees?

Mr. WOODRUM. We think it will have the effect of scaling down all those salaries; that is, that it will be in the interest of economy, efficiency, and balancing the Budget. This is really a Budget-balancing proposition, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman has a Budget-balancing proposition we all ought to vote for it.

Mr. WOODRUM. I knew that would appeal to my friend.

Mr. RICH. I am afraid this amendment will only open up the door to pay higher salaries unless the Government knows that the individual is worth the amount he is going to receive for the work he is going to do for the Government.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that under the present administration the prime consideration is to get people who are worth what they are being paid.

Mr. RICH. It is my observation that never in the world have such salaries been paid to people in public office as are being paid by this administration.

Mr. WOODRUM. I agree with the gentleman that they are much too low.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman from Virginia would look at this statement of the current condition of the Federal Treasury I would ask him: "How are you going to get the money?"

Mr. WOODRUM. I am interested in this, too; but I wish my friend would tell us how business is with the Rich Bros. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. The Rich Bros. manage their business well, and they are doing a good business.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sure they are.

Mr. RICH. But in spite of this administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Can the gentleman tell us how much was really paid to Mr. Pecora in that great investigation?

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot answer the gentleman; I do not know.

Mr. BUCHANAN. He was paid at the rate of $3,600 per year.

Mr. KELLER. It should have been multiplied 10 times.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Since this subject has been opened, I noticed that the gentleman from Virginia assured the gentleman from Georgia that the carpetbag evil under which he was struggling had been removed. I am wondering if the gentleman can give me—in private, of course—the method by which that carpetbagger was removed from Georgia so I can work it in my district?

Mr. WOODRUM. I shall be very glad to confer with the gentleman as soon as I leave the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this particular amendment is, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, to remove the limitation which this House and the Congress very wisely placed upon an appropriation bill to keep the expense of investigations down, and to prevent those performances which have so disgraced Congress in times past. Frankly, I do not believe that any difficulty whatsoever has been experienced in finding people to do the work, even with the $3,600 limitation.

We have had this matter up many times in the last 3 or 4 years. A year ago on this particular question the House voted to stick to the $3,600 limitation. I hope that this particular amendment repealing the $3,600 limitation will not be adopted. There is no question whatever but what it will mean that clerks on a lot of these committees will be rated way up. I would expect several of them to receive the $9,000.

Further, there is nothing in this amendment which would limit expenditures to those made from the contingent fund of the House and the Senate.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not a lawyer. Would the gentleman tell the House if there is a statute on the books now under which the Government could bring action to recover for overpayments made to investigators in the past?

Mr. TABER. The worst of it is there is no such statute, and it is absolutely impossible to have any check whatever upon these committees.

Mr. KNUTSON. This amendment will multiply the evils under which we are now laboring.

Mr. TABER. By three.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Has the amount of salary a committee could pay to a high-class investigator ever been an obstacle in getting high-class and competent men to do the work of these committees?

Mr. TABER. Never. These people have been ready to do it, because of the publicity and advertising they would get out of it.

Mr. SNELL. And they would not undertake to do the work any more readily because the salary were higher?

Mr. TABER. Not a bit.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will reject this amendment and that we will stick to some idea of economy. This amendment will result in the spending by committees of a great many thousands of dollars; and we shall have to answer for these expenditures to our constituents when we go home.

I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I want to refer very briefly to the parliamentary situation, because I wonder if some Members realize that the other day when the bill was before us, when it came back from the Senate, by unanimous consent we disagreed to the Senate amendments.

Just a moment ago a motion to recede from our disagreement was passed. Then the gentleman from Virginia offered as a substitute to my motion to concur a motion to concur with an amendment.

If we vote down the gentleman's motion to concur with an amendment we shall be in position to accept the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment, in my judgment, gives the Senate committees opportunity to employ counsel and compensate them in proportion to their real worth.

Unfortunately, in the past, when these investigating committees employed investigators and lawyers who were compelled to go up against the highest-priced investigators and lawyers in the country, there has been a salary limitation of $3,600 a year. In other words, if a lawyer worked for an investigating committee 2 months he was paid the handsome salary of $600 for the 2-month period; $300 a month is the most that can now be paid for the time actually spent for the committee. This is under the existing provisions of the law, as I understand it, which applies to these investigations.

The Senate amendment will remove the limitation so that Senate committees may pay in excess of $3,600 a year.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. As I understood the gentleman, he stated that the House had already agreed to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. No; I did not say that.

Mr. TABER. I do not understand that we have agreed to anything which would increase these salaries.

Mr. BOILEAU. If I said the House agreed to the Senate amendment, I was in error, and I thank the gentleman for correcting me.

We have in a perfunctory way disagreed to the Senate amendments, but the matter pending before us at this time is whether or not we are going to accept a Senate amendment which removes this limitation of $3,600 a year. In other words, in the past these men who have been working for the Senate and House committees have been obliged to work for a fee that was entirely inadequate for the type of service they were performing and were capable of performing. If this is put under the classification act, I do not know how much they would receive, and I have not had any satisfaction from those who should know. I would like to have the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from Virginia state to the Members of the House how much these men would get for their services, and how much these attorneys would get who are now working for the Wheeler and La Follette committees. How much would these men be paid under the classification act, I do not know. I am sure the Members of the House would like to know, and I hope the gentlemen over there will be able to give us the information.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In the first place, the attorneys would receive just what their duties would entitle them to receive when measured by the standards of pay fixed for positions with similar duties under the Classification Act.

Mr. BOILEAU. Who determines that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The investigating committee, and they can get the help of the Classification Division of the Civil Service Commission. They can write out the duties of the attorney and the Civil Service Commission will take that specification of duties and classify the position just like the Civil Service Commission has been classifying thousands of positions in the Government departments. There is no complication about that.

The gentleman talks about the Senate amendment. What does the Senate amendment do? It repeals the $3,600 so far as it applies to the Senate, and no further. The gentleman would have the conference committee raise the limitation so far as the Senate is concerned and leave the $3,600 limit applicable to the House. Would he have this unequal treatment? I think not. I think the Members of the House would not appreciate that either.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In other words, the House would be bound by the $3,600 limitation and if the gentleman from Wisconsin had his way, the Senate would have no limitation. They could pay $9,000 or $90,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is right, except I would expect in the near future to remedy that situation and give the House committees the same privileges.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question? This Senate amendment affects the Senate investigating committees that are now functioning. I would ask the gentleman, in view of the fact it applies to these particular committee counsel, how much will these counsel now employed by the La Follette committee and the Wheeler committee receive? That is the question. How much would they receive?

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee does not have that information.

Mr. BOILEAU. We do not know. We are adopting an amendment here we know nothing about. Let us for the time being at least have confidence in the Senate committee. We can work it out. If we want to work out something for the House and Senate, let us do so knowing what we are doing. The Members of the House are legislating here, and they do not know what it is all about. We cannot be told whether under the substitute amendment those attorneys would receive $2,400 a year or $9,000 a year. I submit if we do not have this information the House should properly turn down the motion to concur in the amendment and accept the Senate amendment, which will give the Senate committee the right to fix salaries in excess of $3,600 a year if they see fit, at least until such time as we work out a suitable solution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, this is an effort to equalize and standardize the payment of salaries by investigating committees. The attorneys employed by Senate investigating committees will be paid on the same basis of qualification and experience and service rendered as attorneys in every Government department in Washington. Certainly there cannot be any objection to that.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment after the word "amended" in line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided further, That the rate of compensation for any position under the appropriations now available for, or herein or hereafter made for, expenses of inquiries and investigations of the Senate or expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives shall not exceed the rates fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for positions with comparable duties; and the salary limitations of $3,600 attached to appropriations heretofore made for expenses of inquiries and investigations of the Senate or for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 135, noes 75.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-nine gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 227, nays 132, not voting, 73, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 9: Strike out, after the word "appropriation", the following language "or of the appropriation in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936 shall be used hereafter to pay the compensation of any person, not taken from relief rolls, detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof" and insert "or of any appropriation for any executive department or independent executive agency shall be used hereafter to pay the compensation of any person detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either house of Congress under special resolution thereof, unless the department, agency, or establishment from whose staff such person is detailed or loaned shall render to the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives (according as the Senate or the House of Representatives shall have ordered such investigation or inquiry) a statement on or before the 10th day of each month of the number, grade, or status, and monthly compensation of the persons so detailed or loaned from the staff of such department, agency, or establishment during the preceding calendar month."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 9 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or of any appropriation or other funds of any executive department or independent executive agency shall be used after June 30, 1937, to pay the compensation of any person detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either house of Congress under special resolution thereof."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ELLENBOGEN moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 9.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia demands a division of the question. The question is, Shall the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment?

The question was taken, and the motion to recede was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or of any appropriation or other funds of any executive department or independent executive agency shall be used after June 30, 1937, to pay the compensation of any person detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Virginia violates the rules of the House in that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senate amendment is legislation, and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is not out of order because it contains legislation. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is not germane, since it limits the Senate amendment by date.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it deals with the same subject matter, and the mere limitation of the Senate amendment by date does not destroy its germaneness, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of the motion before the House I will say this, that the purpose of the Appropriations Committee has always been simply to try and protect the appropriation acts of Congress.

Now, there has been a lot of cheap emotionalism injected into this matter by a few crackpot newspaper interviews with gentlemen serving in another branch of the legislative body, which parliamentary precedents prevent my calling by name, to the effect that sinister influences were coming to Washington to move upon Congress to throttle great beneficial measures in relation to this and that.

That is what a former great Governor called "baloney." The Appropriations Committee is not concerned with the merits or demerits of congressional investigations. That is a matter for the House and a matter for the Senate.

The House can order an investigation whenever it chooses. It can investigate the capacity of men past 70 years of age, as suggested in the resolution read at the desk this morning. It can go into any sort of investigation it sees fit to undertake, but what the Appropriations Committee is going to insist on is that when an investigation is ordered the money to pay for it shall be over and above board. Now, that is right and logical.

To put the matter briefly, because I do not want to consume too much time as there are important matters to come up this afternoon, this language we have brought here appears to be about the best we can get. This language will compel investigating committees to come directly to Congress for their money. The language does not apply to standing committees of the House or the Senate, where those committees wish to avail themselves of the ability of technical advisers from the departments when they need such advice in pursuit of their hearings on legitimate matters. It applies specifically to investigating committees, and will compel them to come to Congress for their appropriations when they desire to make investigations. That is the sum and substance of the whole language.

Under the language now proposed, it will not affect any standing committee of the House or the Senate. Standing committees still have the right to draw upon the establishments for expert advice and counsel or help, but it does prohibit, on and after June 30, the lending of personnel to investigating committees. The date of June 30 was put in for the purpose of not interfering with two existing investigations which are under way in the Senate.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Would not the language of the gentleman's amendment mean that at the date set no Senate committee or House committee investigating any problem could borrow personnel from that date on without legislation by the Congress?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is correct. That is the purpose of it. The Appropriations Committee thinks investigations should come with a budget or an estimate of their costs and expenses and Congress should directly appropriate for them just as it does for other Government activities. This is the whole issue involved.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why not continue the authority to borrow in this way until the next appropriation year instead of cutting it off at the end of the session or at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman that the House Appropriations Committee wanted to cut it off right now.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I know that, but the House proper may think otherwise.

Mr. WOODRUM. It appears there are two investigations under way in the Senate, and a good many people have been borrowed from the departments and are working on these investigations, and it was not desired to upset those investigations but to bring about a cure for the evil at the conclusion of those investigations or at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman will admit that his amendment totally destroys or changes the Senate amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. It certainly modifies the Senate amendment.

Mr. O'MALLEY. About 99 percent.

Mr. WOODRUM. If I had my way, I would modify it 100 percent.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to be sure I understand the situation thoroughly. Under the motion we just passed we receded from the House amendment and now the gentleman is offering a motion to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment. Suppose the Rules Committee should bring in a favorable report upon my resolution to investigate the radio monopoly in the United States by a special or select committee of this House, do I understand we could not get any experts from the Government; that we could not get any lawyers from the Radio Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission without having a specific appropriation made for the proposed committee of seven?

Mr. WOODRUM. You could not get personnel from those departments to put in full-time work with your committee unless you came in here with a budget or an estimate and there was an appropriation made for that purpose to be taken out of your appropriation. In other words, you would have to make the investigation and could not get a resolution passed and then have the Communications Commission make the investigation. The gentleman knows quite well that the House will give sufficient funds for any investigation it orders to get personnel, and if the gentleman believes there is certain personnel in a department which he should have detailed to his committee, it is a very simple matter of bookkeeping to transfer them to the payroll of his committee after the appropriation is made; but we want your investigating committee to have the funds and pay the costs of its own investigation and not have the cost come out of the general funds which we provide for the departments.

Mr. CONNERY. That is theory. But coming down to practicalities, does not the gentleman know that to reach a thorough investigation by a special committee is difficult, almost impossible to get a thorough investigation if you tie their hands so that they cannot get men from these departments?

Mr. WOODRUM. My experience has not been such as my friend indicates. You can get almost any kind of a resolution passed through the House if the gentleman will assure the House that it will not cost anything. But it is a different situation if you are going to take people out of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a year and a half and run the cost up to $400,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield me some time in opposition? We ought to have some time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I will yield the gentleman some time, but I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HEALEY] for a question.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman's amendment will not bar the use of department employees for an investigation, but will prohibit the department from paying for their services out of an appropriation made for that department.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is right. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] 5 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I take it for granted that the figures of the gentleman from Virginia, as given to the House, are correct.

I know that the select committee of which I have the honor of being chairman has received aid from some of the departments, notably the Treasury Department. H. R. 79, which passed the House in February 1935, provided that—

> Whenever, in the opinion of the committee, evidence is developed in connection with the investigation which discloses or tends to disclose any violation of any Federal law, the committee is authorized and directed to request the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, the Treasury Department, or any other Federal agency, whichever department or agency has jurisdiction to administer such law, to assign attorneys or agents thereof to the committee.

Your select committee was faced with the problem of conducting Nation-wide investigations into the activities of protective committees, affecting over 5,000,000 bondholders and involving over $20,000,000,000. To do this it has had in the 2 years of its existence $110,000. Without assistance from the departments it could never have done this, and the assistance rendered us by the departments has resulted in savings to the Government of a hundred times the sum we have spent.

As a good example, let me call attention to the reports of the Internal Revenue Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1935, and June 30, 1936, wherein is reported collections of income tax from reorganization, bankruptcy, and receivership proceedings of over $11,000,000. This committee has been responsible for the major portion of those collections, which would otherwise never have been made, and I say that the assistance we rendered the Department in these matters and the part we played in calling their attention to hundreds of cases and submitting to them the results of our investigations more than justifies the money we have spent. This represents a continuing saving to the Government. Next year I anticipate that as great a sum, if not greater, will be collected. [Applause.]

Within a month after our committee started its work we found that we were indeed confronted with a tremendous task. In thousands of cases throughout the country it developed that mortgage bankers, investment bankers, lawyers, and others were securing control of bonds, forming their own "protective" committees, and gaining control of billions of dollars' worth of property. Our preliminary report of January 29, 1935, consisting of 20 pages, and supplemental report of June 19, 1936, with 122 pages, gives a condensed report of numerous cases throughout the Nation. Our next report will go into many other cases.

I wish that it were possible for all the Members to read those reports. If the House were fully cognizant of the extent to which bondholders have been and are being mulcted, I know that we would not have to seek assistance from any department. We would be given an appropriation large enough to carry on our work. I only hope that such an appropriation will be made available to us to continue our investigations. [Applause.]

The reports I mention show how the select committee has saved thousands of bondholders, has forced the turning over of properties to them, and enforced the payment of interest on their bonds. Thousands of persons have been taken off the relief rolls because of our activities.

We held open hearings in Chicago, New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Boston, Manchester, St. Louis, Detroit, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Miami, not only on real estate and industrial reorganizations but on municipal, drainage, and life-insurance reorganizations.

In connection with the life-insurance cases I might mention that the committee some time ago secured the services, without compensation, of a few expert actuaries, and since then we have conducted thorough investigations of this phase. I believe this racket—I can call it by no other name—is one of the worst we have encountered. It affects labor, charitable, benevolent, and fraternal organizations. We found that by the use of but a few thousand dollars as many as 32 insurance and other companies came under the control of one small group. The policyholders paid the bill. Their premiums were raised as high as 400 percent. I do not believe there are many Members who realize the gravity of this situation.

Many attempts have been made to delay, embarrass, and impede our work. Even today strong pressure is being brought by many of the country's outstanding lawyers, representing these committees, receivers, trustees, and the conniving and thieving protective committees, hoping to halt our investigations. But our work is not completed. I might say, in answer to the question which was raised as to how many indictments and convictions the committee had secured, that the committee is not a grand jury or a prosecuting attorney but an investigative body whose duty it is to bring before this House the result of its penetrations into a great abuse. However, we have secured many indictments and many convictions, and hardly a week passes without a new conviction or indictment resulting from our investigations being reported. [Applause.]

I am proud of the work this committee has done. Over 8,000 pages of printed hearings give the result of its work, and 5,000 pages remain to be printed. The committee has saved thousands from the relief rolls, has put a halt to the greedy practices of those who prey on the poor and the weak, and has been and is now assisting the courts in many reorganization proceedings, to assure proper and equitable treatment to small investors.

In the near future I will more thoroughly explain, in full detail, the activities and accomplishments of this small committee.

In conclusion let me state that the money spent by this committee—the money certain departments spent in aiding it—has not been wasted. It has been returned to the Government a hundredfold, and to the public of the Nation a thousandfold. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, let us examine what effect the passage of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] would have. If a select committee is appointed to investigate a certain matter, that committee is charged by either the House or the Senate with the investigation of a subject matter, because the House or the Senate believes that the particular matter needs to be investigated in order to supply facts and information which we need to legislate intelligently. I believe we should aid and encourage our select committees in every possible way so that they may get the information upon which we base future legislation.

What will be the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia? That motion would hinder, it would delay, it would curb the investigations. It may in many cases prevent the discovery of information which is vitally needed to draft legislation which we should enact. Some people seem to consider investigating committees a nuisance, which must be curbed, instead of an aid in the performance of our duty. I cannot conceive that the House will deliberately cripple its own arms or the arms of the Senate so that needed information may be withheld from the legislative branch.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Yes; I gladly yield to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. The best insurance the United States has, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] says, in saving millions of dollars are these special investigations.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Certainly; and any money used by them for the purpose of bringing out these facts is well spent. Why should we not go to the Government bureaus for men who have the peculiar knowledge, the experience, and the talent which these committees need in order to discover and to assemble the facts and to perform their job intelligently and effectively?

It has been said during the argument on this amendment that a large part of the appropriation made for the Bureau of Accounts of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been spent in aiding the investigation of the Wheeler Committee and that this has interfered with the proper functioning of that Bureau. This statement is contradicted by a letter which was written on February 1, 1937, to Senator WHEELER by Mr. Joseph B. Eastman, who is the member of the Interstate Commerce Commission to whom the Bureau of Accounts reports. I am advised that this letter has the approval of the entire Commission. In his letter, Commissioner Eastman says that—

> While this has lessened the routine work of the Bureau * * * the work which these accountants have been and are doing under Senate Resolution 71 is of great general value and also of special value to the Commission in the regulation of railroads, including the regulation of their accounting.

After discussing the normal functions of the Bureau of Accounts, Commissioner Eastman then goes on to say:

> To a considerable extent we might have conducted such an inquiry on our own account, but I am glad that your committee has undertaken it for these reasons:
>
> First. Our powers of inquiry are largely confined to the carriers, but these financial matters ramify into banking and holding company activities which your committee has power to investigate, but we have not.
>
> Second. The bringing to public attention of any abuses that may be discovered is in itself of great importance, and an investigation conducted by a Senate committee is more effective in this respect that an investigation conducted by the Commission.
> Third. If the abuses can and should be corrected by legislation, it is of great advantage to have the investigation in charge of a committee of Congress which is in the best possible position to seek the necessary legislation. As a matter of fact, examination of the reports made to Congress by this Commission in the past will show that the present inquiry is again disclosing abuses and opportunities therefor, such as we have on several occasions brought to the attention of Congress, but ineffectively, probably because there were no Members of Congress who had special knowledge of and interest in these matters.
> Fourth. Your committee has been able to employ for the investigation, in addition to our accountants, other men equipped by training for the work, thus magnifying largely the results which we would have been able to obtain unaided.
>
> Fifth. I am very hopeful that one of the results of the investigation will be to demonstrate to your committee the amount of work involved in accounting and financial investigations and the need for placing the Commission in a position to do such work adequately.
> I may add that it is my hope, and also my expectation, that the inquiry which your committee is now conducting will have broadly constructive results, and particularly in leading to some effective Federal control over the creation and uses of holding and other corporations. There has long been sore need for such control, which will go to the root of many of the abuses in the conduct of private business from which the country has suffered.

This letter is printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 700. I hope that my colleagues will have the time to read it carefully. I believe it answers most of the arguments made on behalf of the Woodrum amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time, and ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment. I think it very unfortunate that it is brought before the House at this time, and I can see nothing in it except an effort to curb the Senate investigating committees that have rendered such wonderful services in the past. In other words, this amendment, if adopted, will simply tend to curb those Senate special committees, and those in the House also, that have rendered such wonderful services, from Teapot Dome to Wall Street investigation and on down through the Power Trust and the munitions investigation now going on. [Applause.]

Why should they not be permitted to use men already on the Government pay roll? I cannot seriously consider the argument that it would pile up governmental expenses to permit men already on the pay roll, and whose peculiar qualifications and peculiar talents and opportunities to secure information and adaptability to coordinating it, men who are already on the pay roll, to come before these special committees as they have done from Teapot Dome to the present day.

I am proud of the record these Senate committees have made. They have done much to curb some of the worst evils that have crept into this Government, and the American people today are behind those committees that are investigating and using the powers of the Government to stop those corruptions that are undermining the very foundation of American institutions.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. There has never been any claim that these men's services down here are interfered with by coming up to the Capitol?

Mr. RANKIN. Not in the least. There has not been a single department that I ever heard of that has complained that it is in the least embarrassed by furnishing its men to help special investigating committees to bring to light those facts that have been so important to the American people in these far-reaching, valuable, and effective investigations.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Their salaries are not any more, are they?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I know the gentleman would like to have enlightenment. The Interstate Commerce Commission spent $434,000 of money which our committee appropriated for them to do the job that Congress has put upon them. They had to divert that personnel to the full-time service of a committee of the Senate, and when they came before our committee we asked them why they had not done the job. They said they did not have the people with which to do it. We said, "We gave you the money to employ the people." They said, "Yes; we employed the people, but they had to work for the Senate committee."

Mr. RANKIN. And the Senate committee's investigation was worth a billion dollars to the American people. Besides, these people would have drawn the same amount of pay if there had been no Senate investigation.

Mr. WOODRUM. But what objection does the gentleman have to appropriating the money directly to the committee that is making the investigation?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, I know what it means. The object of this amendment is to try to stop these investigations. The Power Trust will thank you for that.

You are going to try to force a Senate committee and all these other investigating committees to have those men who are already educated and prepared to do this work thrown out and come here and ask for a special appropriation. No, Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion, the passage of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia will be one of the worst blows we could deliver at the great work that is now being done and will be done in the future by these patriotic, sincere, and courageous men in the Senate, who have done such wonderful work in the last 10 years in helping to redeem American institutions and to save the people of this country from being plundered as they have been in the past.

You cannot get investigations otherwise. I have seen it tried. I have tried it myself. The only way you can get a thorough investigation is through a special committee. To say to them that they cannot use men already on the pay roll, but that they must come here and argue for days and days for a special appropriation simply means squelching those investigations.

I hope the House votes down the amendment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, this subject has particular interest for me as it did for my good colleague, the dean of this House, chairman of the select committee upon which I have served for some 2½ years. This committee to investigate defaulted real-estate bonds, affecting the lives of nearly 15,000,000 people and their savings and affecting nearly $20,000,000,000 worth of property, was set up with an original appropriation of $15,000. In 2½ years this committee has received around $110,000 from this House. How many expert accountants could that committee have employed, at $3,600 a year, with $110,000? How many lawyers, who could be called lawyers, could have been employed? We could not have employed 10, yet we had the problem of investigating nearly 20,000 separate and distinct committees, nearly 15,000 banks and their books, and we had to go to the Treasury Department and the W. P. A. to borrow trained personnel. We went there because they had expert accountants that we could not afford to hire. Those accountants and clerks helped us with reports that have enabled the Government to recover $11,000,000 in income taxes, and they today have income-tax cases pending, which, if half of them are successfully prosecuted, will recover for the Federal Government $20,000,000 or more in additional taxes. Did the employees of our committee, borrowed from this Department, cost the Government any money? They did not. They made money for the Government.

We know the impossibility of coming before this House in advance and telling you Members how many employees we are going to need or how much money we need when an investigation is authorized. We cannot estimate it, and no committee can tell until they start upon the investigation what work must be done.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. Can the gentleman furnish any information giving the number of convictions that have grown out of indictments as a result of the Sabath committee?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I will say to the gentleman that out of the indictments brought under State laws in the State of New York there were two or three convictions. There were 16 or 17 indictments in the city of Philadelphia, from which the gentleman comes, and I do not know what has happened to them; but I will say there is nothing that some interests in this Nation would like better than to have the Congress hampered in making special investigations. There are special interests who know they can stall off accounting for their sins beyond the statute of limitations, and the only thing they do not like is a senatorial or congressional investigation, because that investigation shows them up and gives them publicity that they cannot stand, and crooks of all stripe hate investigations and public exposure.

If you pass the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], you will hamstring the investigating powers of Congress which vicious special interests have long hoped to accomplish. You sabotage the Congress of the United States in getting after those special interests and exposing them in the only way the Federal Government can get effective action and stop vicious practices. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to clear up a little some of the emotionalism that has been injected into this thing. All this talk about trying to hamstring investigations and to prevent wonderful disclosures, if there have been wonderful disclosures, made by this, that, or the other, is entirely aside from the point. I think I have voted for most of the investigations. I say it somewhat blushingly. I am not proud of it, but I have voted for most of them that have been initiated in the House, and helped to appropriate the money for them. Nobody is trying to stop any investigation or activity that should be continued or the disclosure of any fact that ought to be disclosed; but what we do want to do is that when we make an investigation to put on the books and to charge to the investigation the personnel and the cost of making it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does not the Senate amendment, which requires a report of the cost, put on the books what the cost is?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; it puts it on the books.

When Congress appropriates money for personnel of a department, thinking they are going to carry out the functions of the department, committees of Congress have no right to take that personnel away from them on the theory that it is all right to do that so long as they file with the Secretary of the Senate a list of the people that they have called. That is not what we want.

There is no earthly reason why any investigating committee of either branch of this Congress may not draw any personnel it needs on a legitimate investigation from any department. What the committee wants them to do is to transfer that personnel from the departmental pay roll to the pay roll of the investigating committee—have the thing open and aboveboard and not camouflage it before the American people. [Applause.]

I do not know what the Wheeler investigating committee has done, but I think you may be interested in knowing how much money they have spent—and they have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars. Maybe it is worth it; I do not know—I hope it is. We may go upon the assumption that it is; but if it is open and aboveboard and if it is worth it, then there is no reason under high heaven why we have got to camouflage it and hide it under the cloak of Congress.

The Appropriations Committee of the House resent the inference—I do not care where it comes from—of anybody who says we are trying to stop any investigation. We are not trying to stop any investigation, and we specifically provide that these two pet investigations some of our colleagues are so much interested in may run through this Congress up to July.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Under the gentleman's amendment if a select committee were appointed by the House or the Senate to make a special investigation during a recess of Congress and then were to discover certain facts that cannot be developed without departmental assistance, they would be prevented from carrying out the investigation because they could not get funds to pay this transferred personnel.

Mr. WOODRUM. They could ask the department for the facts but could not take personnel from the department and put them on the committee work, unless the committee got the money to pay for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The only difference under the gentleman's amendment is that while personnel would still be taken out of the departments, they would be paid out of a special committee appropriation instead of from the general funds of the department. The department, however, would still be deprived of their personnel.

Mr. WOODRUM. They will be deprived of it, but we will not have the anomalous situation of appropriating money for a department for one purpose and seeing them use it for something else.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I understand that the gentleman's proposition is that the record shall show the cost of an investigation?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is right.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, there is a thing called sabotage. Sabotage is where people go onto a steamer or into a factory and destroy the machinery so that those who use that machinery cannot work any longer. This amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is a nice way of sabotaging congressional special investigations.

We all understand the intent of the gentleman from Virginia. He wants us to be able to use employees from the Government departments, but they must be paid for out of the fund which is appropriated by the Appropriations Committee to that special committee. In other words, you cannot borrow a man from a department and have that department of the Government pay for him.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will remember that some years ago we had a congressional investigation in reference to veterans. At that time grafters and crooks were sending out lead pencils to the people of the United States under the representation that it was from a disabled veterans' organization soliciting funds to aid the disabled veterans. Funds came in $1 at a time from all over the country until this outfit had raised some $500,000. Of this, about $14,000 was spent for the veterans, the rest going to the promoters of the scheme. At that time we had to use employees from departments of the Government to get this information, but as a result of that investigation we broke up that graft ring completely and stopped the despoiling of the American people at the hands of these crooks. Then there was the Teapot Dome investigation, and the Sabath investigation, and the veterans' investigation, as a result of which Mr. Forbes went to jail.

Had it not been for the ability of these special committees to use employees of the Government departments, if these committees could not have borrowed them but had to depend upon the money set aside by Congress for the special committees, we never would have gotten the results we did get from these great investigations, which saved so many millions of dollars to the American people and did so much good for the Nation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is it not a fact that under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia it will be entirely possible for the Appropriations Committee of this House to decide how many employees an investigating committee shall have and how much each employee shall receive?

Mr. CONNERY. That is true. Of course, I have no intention of criticizing the good faith of my dear friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], or any member of the Appropriations Committee. Those gentlemen are the watchdogs of the Treasury. Their job is to keep down the expenditures of the Government, and I honor them for that. I believe, however, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is a form of sabotage which will break down and destroy the machinery of all congressional investigations. These investigations, I may say, are absolutely in the interest of the people of the United States.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman know that the Committee on Accounts has jurisdiction of the amount that shall be recommended to the House for all special committees and that the Appropriations Committee has nothing whatever to do with that matter?

Mr. CONNERY. Well, then the Committee on Accounts goes to the Appropriations Committee afterward.

Mr. TABER. No; the gentleman is in error.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. If the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia had been in effect 10 or 12 years ago the Senate investigating committee could not have investigated the Teapot Dome scandal, and thus those thieves would have stolen a hundred million of dollars of Government property.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is quite correct.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia will be rejected and that the Members may have the opportunity to vote on the privileged motion to concur in the Senate amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read an item in the newspaper which I have sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE IMPERILS SENATE INQUIRY, SAYS WHEELER—CHARGES BIG INTERESTS SEEK TO LIMIT USE OF GOVERNMENT AGENTS

Behind a House vote to halt the use of workers from emergency Government agencies by congressional investigating committees, Senator BURTON K. WHEELER (Democrat), Montana, yesterday saw the hands of "the railroads, the bankers, and the House of Morgan."

He said:

"They're behind this paralyzing move. They want to cripple the investigations into railroad finances and into labor espionage. It's difficult to say that anyone came down from Wall Street to see anybody in the House—but they're behind the real opposition.

"It's an idiotic thing * * * Some of the smaller fry are working against Senate investigations. But I'm as much opposed to House interference with Senate investigations as I would be to Senate interference with House investigations."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, some of the "small fry" voted for the original amendment to the House bill which prohibited the money we appropriated to relieve distress and unemployed being used for Senate investigating committees. The "small fry" voted for that obnoxious piece of legislation; that is, that money that we appropriated to feed the hungry should not be diverted to Senate investigating committees.

A year ago this same subject was up for consideration in the Senate, and W. P. A. workers were denied the right and opportunity to work for Senate committees. Not a single voice in the Senate justified it, but everyone who spoke condemned it. Even Senator NYE himself denied responsibility. It was stated on the floor of the Senate that the Senate not only should not approve it but they ought to condemn it as a bad practice.

Let me get back to just exactly what we have before us. The original provision that the Appropriations Committee brought in on this deficiency bill, and which you passed overwhelmingly, put a limitation only on relief funds being used by investigating committees. That went to the Senate. The Senate proceeded to broaden the amendment and make it apply to all funds for all governmental departments and independent agencies. Then they proceeded to add an amendment that killed the whole thing.

What did the Senate amendment do? It stated that no governmental department or independent agency should lend employees to investigating committees created by special resolution. Then it said no part of the money shall be used to pay the salaries of anyone so lent; that the department furnishing those employees shall file a statement with the Clerk of the House or the Clerk of the Senate giving the number, the class, and the salary of the various employees a month after the department had furnished them. Let us apply that here. That was a pure camouflage—utter damn foolishness. That is all it is.

Suppose we should adjourn here, say the 1st of August, which will be pretty nearly the time we will adjourn, and several investigating committees have been created by this Congress. Those committees will not start work until we adjourn, because the Members will be busy in the meantime. After the Congress adjourns these committees call on the departments to furnish certain men who will be loaned to these various committees. Then a statement is filed with the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate showing the number turned over to the committee, and this will continue for 6 months before Congress can meet and stop the practice, if a committee is overdoing the thing. It is just utter foolishness and nothing more.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is there no limitation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is no limitation anywhere except the unbridled will of one man, the chairman of the special committee, and yet you representatives of the people, who are supposed to protect their interests, propose to vote to let one man who happens to be the chairman of an investigating committee control the whole thing. He may not have good judgment, but he could call on the various departments for all the employees that his sweet will might dictate. Do you call that common sense?

A Member got up here and said they would never have investigated Teapot Dome if this amendment had been in effect. Does anybody believe that? When a proposition is put before this House that a lot of fellows are trying to steal some Government property worth hundreds of millions of dollars, do you not think the House would vote all the money necessary to prevent that steal? Has my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, no greater confidence in the judgment, the intelligence, and the patriotism of his colleagues in this House? Shame on him.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; for a question only.

Mr. RANKIN. Did the gentleman know they had stolen a hundred million dollars worth of property at Teapot Dome until the Walsh committee had investigated the matter?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We would have investigated it anyhow, and the Senate and House would have voted all the money necessary to carry on the investigation.

Mr. RANKIN. Not if this amendment had been in effect.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly they would.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. What is the obligation on the departments to lend employees on request of an investigating committee?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That brings up another question I want to discuss. My good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] stated the reason he thought this amendment ought not to be adopted is because they could not get a sufficient amount of money from the Appropriations Committee or from the Committee on Accounts to make the investigation.

He admitted he is not willing to submit his case for an investigation to the fair and honest judgment of the majority of the House. He admits this. All right, he cannot get it from the House and cannot get it from the Senate, but if you are chairman of an investigating committee and chairman of the legislative committee involved, you can make that Department send these men to you, and the Department will send them. Why? Not because it is their duty, not because they want to but they do not want to incur the enmity of that committee of Senators or that committee of Members of the House for fear of coercion or failure to get from them desired legislation or some appropriation.

Mr. MAPES. It is within their discretion?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; it is not in their discretion. It never has been in their discretion. It has always been a positive violation of the law of this land, and I will read the law to you.

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. Aside from the desire not to antagonize the committee, it is within the discretion of the Department to lend these men or not, as it may see fit.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not, as I told the gentleman, and never has been. Here is the law of 1809. While I do not know, I presume it was signed by Thomas Jefferson, a good Democrat:

> All sums appropriated for various branches of expenditures in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made and for no other.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. I do not understand that the gentleman has cleared up the situation yet. Is it not true that the department head is under no obligation to furnish these employees simply because some chairman of an investigating committee asks for them?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are absolutely under no obligation to furnish them, but they are under a prohibition of law not to furnish them, and I have here the law.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact, with reference to the investigation carried on by the immortal Senator Walsh concerning the stealing of the Teapot Dome property, that he was working upon that investigation for more than a year——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did not yield for a speech but for a question. I refuse to yield any further.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That he worked on that investigation for more than a year before he could ever get the ear of the United States Senate with respect to the subject?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I do not think so.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is the fact; and it is a further fact that they had to get a united press to help him secure an appropriation from Congress before such appropriation could be secured.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield for a speech and must decline to yield further.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The gentleman has stated that the departments have no discretion in the matter and that it is against the law to furnish these people. How many have they furnished?

Mr. BUCHANAN. God only knows. I do not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Has the gentleman any statistics?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have statistics that they have furnished nearly half a million dollars' worth so far and the amount is piling up as I investigate.

Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. SABATH rose.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am going to finish my statement before I yield further.

Here is the law, and it has been the law for over 100 years. The law provides that all appropriations for expenditures in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are appropriated and no other. To the Interstate Commerce Commission in the last Congress and the Congress before last we appropriated about $1,600,000 for what purpose? Specifically for the purpose of carrying out section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act which authorized them to prescribe a system of bookkeeping for the railroads, giving them authority to investigate, inspect, and compel the railroads to keep their books so they can ascertain the income and outgo of the railroads in order that they may know how to regulate and fix rates. This money was appropriated for this specific purpose, and $388,000 of it was diverted to a Senate investigation. What was the result? It disorganized that work of the Interstate Commerce Commission and put them behind in their work. A question comes before the Interstate Commerce Commission about fixing rates and they say, "We cannot fix the rates intelligently because our bookkeeping section is not up with their work with respect to the receipts and expenditures of the railroads."

So this disorganizes the work throughout the executive departments. What do we recommend? We recommend that if the House wants to conduct an investigation, let it order the investigation and appropriate the money necessary to make it. If the Senate wants to make an investigation, let them order it and appropriate the money necessary to do it. If they want an expert from any of the departments, let them ask for him and the department can furlough that expert and have him put on the pay roll of the investigating committee and paid out of the funds appropriated for that purpose. If you want to go on record as saying that investigating committees can quietly or secretly demand of this department or that department that they furnish so many employees, then say so.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHORT. In view of the facts that our able chairman of the Appropriations Committee has disclosed, I wonder if he might not recommend an investigation of the investigators?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do you know what I would do if I were a Member of the Senate and had the power? I would say to the Senate, "Here is a special investigation you ordered 18 months ago. The investigation is supposed to have gone on for 18 months and has consumed $100,000 out of the contingent fund of the Senate and $400,000 out of the funds of the Interstate Commerce Commission, making a total of $500,000, and some funds of W. P. A. and some other agencies, perhaps. For God's sake, make at least a partial report and show what you are doing and let us see whether you ought to stop or continue." That is what I would say.

Now, I am not fighting investigations but I am fighting for appropriations to be made in an orderly manner. I want to protect the taxpayers' money by making all expenditures go through the Budget. I want all appropriations for the committees for the House and Senate to go through Congress and be approved. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. For a question.

Mr. SHORT. Are any of the investigators on the Commission's pay roll?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope to find out.

Mr. SCOTT. I think it would be very interesting for Members of the House to know.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It would be interesting for someone to find out how much money we are spending on these investigations.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. I do not mean to be discourteous. I do not mean any harm by my refusal, but I want to make this statement in all seriousness: Do you want to know how the Appropriations Committee is carrying out the acts of Congress that you pass? Do you want the committee to stand for the purpose that is authorized and specified in the bill? If you appropriate money, do you want it spent for something else? If you let the investigating committees call on the departments for aid and spend the money given the department for other purposes, then there is no end to it.

Is the law of our Government master of the fiscal affairs or are special investigating committees created by the House or Senate alone the dominating authority in our Government in spending the taxpayer's money, disorganizing the orderly work of the governmental departments, causing delay and confusion and deficiencies.

It is a wholesome law that requires money drawn from the Treasury though appropriations by Congress be expended for those purposes for which it was specifically appropriated.

If we are to have an economical Government, the expenditure of the public funds must be controlled by law and not be at the discretion of an aggregation of men and women composing the House or Senate, either of itself possessing no legislative power over anything except its own organization.

When the Senate or House or the committees of either descend to the level of violating the positive law of the land in order to permit some of their colleagues who may stand high in the counsels of the Nation to have free and unlimited authority to expend money or to compel, through coercion or the fear of animadversion, governmental departments to furnish an unlimited and undefined number and class of their employees to such lawmakers whether they compose committees or not of such legislative body, then we have a Government not of law and order but of the unbridled discretion of men, a Government of extravagance and irresponsibility in the expenditure of money.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. For a question.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am wondering if the gentleman has any specific evidence which shows that the investigating committees have called on the departments for help where there was a reckless expenditure of money?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Evidently.

Mr. McFARLANE. Where?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I cannot give it to the House now. Now, gentlemen, I ask Members of the House to stand by the Appropriations Committee and maintain integrity in the expenditure of public funds. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand a division.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, may we have the motion again reported?

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the motion as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 9 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or of any appropriation or other funds of any executive department or independent executive agency shall be used after June 30, 1937, to pay the compensation of any person detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either house of Congress under special resolution thereof."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 178, noes 70.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 257, nays 101, not voting, 74, as follows:

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I was attending a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations, and my name was being called just as I entered the Chamber. I do not know whether I can qualify under those circumstances or not.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman within the Chamber when his name was called?

Mr. BACON. I was at the door.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify under the rule.

Mr. BACON. If I had been present, I would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House, the Speaker may be permitted to sign the enrolled bill H. R. 3587.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken on the bill may be permitted to extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. Today is District day.

TEACHING OF COMMUNISM IN THE DISTRICT SCHOOLS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 148) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools in the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 1 hour, to be confined to the bill, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 148. Pending that, she asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour, to be confined to the bill, to be controlled one-half by herself and one-half by the gentleman from Missouri. Is there objection?

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall be greatly pleased if we can finish this bill within an hour, but we have so many requests for time on this side of the aisle that I think the Members would appreciate it if the gentlewoman from New Jersey would extend her request to one hour and a half, giving 45 minutes on a side.

Mrs. NORTON. That is perfectly agreeable, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey, who modifies her request, that general debate be limited to one hour and a half, to be confined to the bill, one-half of that time to be controlled by herself, and one-half by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentlewoman from New Jersey that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 148.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 148, with Mr. WOODRUM in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about this bill during the past year. It has been the subject of much discussion in the press, on the street, in the clubs of the city, in fact everywhere throughout the District. It has even been discussed in our own cities and by the National Educational Association in convention assembled. At first it seemed strange that a bill concerned with the District of Columbia, and apparently local in character, could arouse so much intense feeling everywhere, but upon examination of the bill the peculiar method used to bring about its enactment and the far-reaching consequence it has assumed with regard to our public-school system we can readily understand the reason for this intense feeling on the part of every liberty-loving American.

Let us examine this so-called "red rider" and the effect it has had upon this community. At the same time let us bear in mind that it is only because of the peculiar type of government in the District that such a thing could happen. In your city and mine we have a board of education responsible to the people. It is either elected by the people or appointed by the city mayor or council and therefore either directly or indirectly responsible to the people who have the power of the vote. The people of the District having no power must accept the direction of Congress and that brings me to the point that we are responsible for this ridiculous "red rider" and the circumstances surrounding it.

Today it is my purpose to bring to your attention the evil caused by this thing we have heard so much about and ask you to join with me in repealing this law that is absolutely unjust and offends every person who believes in the public-school system of America.

What is the "red rider" and what has been its effect on our educational system in the District?

It is a rider in the Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, under the heading "Public Schools" and provides:

> That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

The Board of Education being unable to decide exactly what was intended by the words of the statute submitted same to the corporation counsel, Mr. Prettyman, for interpretation. Mr. Prettyman examined the bill and submitted a well-considered and complete opinion on the meaning of the statute which you will find in the committee report on page 2, and I ask every Member interested in the bill to read the committee report.

This opinion is clear and logical and was accepted by the Board of Education. Subsequently Comptroller McCarl ruled that all employees of the public-school system of the District of Columbia must sign a statement before receiving their monthly pay check that they have not "taught or advocated" communism, but failed to define his meaning of the word "teach." The effect of this has been that the teachers of the public schools and the Board of Education were completely confused, and as a result mention of the Russian form of government in teaching history has been avoided. As one pupil said, "Our teacher said, 'We will skip Russia.'" This has led to an amount of curiosity on the part of pupils and has resulted in the sale of much communistic literature very dangerous to the adolescent mind.

For the benefit of those who are not familiar with the peculiar set-up in Washington I would like you to know that the Board of Education is appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia. The board is charged by law with the responsibility of supervision of courses of study in the schools. Said board is invested with full authority to dismiss any employee who violates his oath of office or disobeys the rules of the board. All employees of the school system are obliged to take the same oath that we take as Members of Congress, "to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States." The members of the Board of Education here, as in our own communities, are fine, patriotic citizens, contributing their services to the community, and would no more tolerate the teaching of communism in our public schools than we would of supporting bills suggestive of anything contrary to our form of government. It is absurd and stupid to believe that your committee would bring a bill to the floor of this House that would in any way suggest our sympathy with communism, and I, as chairman of the District of Columbia Committee, resent the charges that have been flung at your committee and also at the public-school system of Washington. Dr. Ballou, the superintendent of schools, came to Washington from the State of Massachusetts with a splendid record of school service. He is recognized by the National Education Association as one of the most outstanding educators in this country. I have taken a great deal of trouble to investigate that, and find it to be true. Our teachers all are well qualified American citizens. They have been selected because of their ability, integrity, and loyalty to American principles.

With this background it can be readily understood why there is so much confusion, because the rider is not only an innovation, in that there is no legislative body which prescribes courses of study in the several States, but it is contrary to our traditional American system of conducting public schools. With all the agitation of the past year it seems strange that your committee has not received one complaint from a parent in the District, and I have been advised by the Board of Education that it has no knowledge of any complaint concerned with the teaching or advocating of communism in the public schools. Every civic organization in the District of Columbia has expressed strenuous opposition to the rider. The people here are practically unanimous in asking its repeal.

Considering the fact that no other State has any similar law, it is apparent that this rider reflects not only on the loyalty of our teachers but the competence of the Board of Education. It would have been repealed in the last session of Congress were it not for the fact that certain people succeeded in making it a political football. No sane person believes that a Member of Congress would advocate communism, but it has been made to appear that those voting in favor of repeal of this ridiculous law are advocating the teaching of communism in our schools. Nothing could be more absurd. By voting to repeal this law we are merely righting a wrong, restoring the confidence in the Board of Education of the District of Columbia that each Member here has in the board of education of his own community.

I have attempted to present to you briefly the facts concerned with the situation that has arisen since the enactment of this rider to the appropriation bill. I am firmly convinced that the majority of the Members of the House feel as I do—that Congress overstepped its prerogative when it passed this unwarranted legislation. I am hoping that we shall have the courage to acknowledge our mistake today and do our duty not only to the public-school system of Washington but to the American principles of public-school education by joining with the Senate to repeal this unwise and unnecessary rider. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there is just one thing I desire to say in conclusion. Many Members have come to me today and said, in effect, "I think this was all wrong; this rider should not have been enacted; I do not believe in it; but now since it has been enacted, I do not think we should repeal it." There is no logic in that. It is said that women are not logical. Is there any logic in that kind of an argument? If we have made a mistake, as we do very often, I have no doubt, then for goodness sake let us have the courage to admit it and do everything we possibly can to correct that mistake. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. I understand that practically all of the church people and the fraternal organizations in the United States are united against the repeal of this amendment.

Mrs. NORTON. United against repealing it?

Mr. GREEN. They are not Communists. Why is it the school teachers of this District desire its repeal if they are such good Americans?

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman please give me a list of those people, because we have received nothing of that kind.

Mr. GREEN. Does the gentlewoman mean to say that none of the fraternal and patriotic organizations have protested the repeal of this rider?

Mrs. NORTON. I mean that every organization I have heard from in the District of Columbia, and many outside of the District, have been for the repeal of this iniquitous law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has again expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the so-called "red rider" which was inserted in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, approved June 14, 1935, providing that "hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism", never should have been enacted into law. [Applause.] It is obnoxious to conscience, repugnant to reason, and totally contrary to the spirit and genius of the American people, our traditions, and our institutions.

It would be interesting particularly to the new Members of this body to know just how this rider was attached to the appropriation bill and became a law. Without any debate whatever, without any consideration before the proper committee, or even without any discussion on the floor of the House our former colleague, Mr. Blanton, of Texas, a very astute and resourceful parliamentarian, succeeded in attaching the rider to the District appropriation bill and it passed unnoticed. No doubt the gentleman from Texas had good intentions, but we all know the place that is paved with good intentions. While this measure was designed to curb or prohibit the advocacy of communism, in my opinion, the proponents of the "red rider" have done more to foster and encourage communism and the spread of it in this country than any other group of people. [Applause.]

It matters not about the merits or demerits of communism itself. That is wholly beside the point in the consideration of this immediate measure. I do not think there is much difference really between the opponents and the proponents of this measure as far as the aim or purpose is concerned, but we do differ widely and decidedly upon the method that shall be employed in order to prevent the spread of communism. By denying the teachers of the District of Columbia their American right and privilege to impart the facts and knowledge of communism we have naturally aroused on the part of the students in the various schools curiosity that has impelled them to seek their knowledge from other sources.

Mr. Chairman, persecution promotes propagation. Such legislation as this is a poor instrument with which to combat ideas. The only way we can overcome a bad philosophy is with a better philosophy, in the open court of conscience and in the forum of reason. [Applause.]

I do not know why anyone should be afraid of communistic teaching or any other teaching as long as we do not indoctrinate, as long as we do not advocate its substitution for American democracy. But no one appeared before our subcommittee, over which our colleague from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY] so ably presided, giving any information whatever that the teachers of the District of Columbia, the superintendent of schools, Dr. Ballou, or members of the school board were advocating communism in the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Would not the problem be solved by simply striking out of the present rider the words "teaching or", and make the prohibition solely against advocating? The gentleman has just said he has no objection to teaching.

Mr. SHORT. I agree with the gentleman. That distinction was drawn in the committee during the hearings, but, in my opinion, this whole matter is without the scope of legislation, and is wholly a matter of administration. You cannot legislate patriotism any more than you can legislate morality or prosperity. [Applause.] For my own part, I do not believe there is any group of our American citizens who are more loyal, more patriotic, and more devoted to the principles of our Government and its Constitution than are our teachers. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then why do we not repeal the law making Communists deportable, and why do we not repeal the immigration law prohibiting the entrance of Communists into the United States?

Mr. SHORT. That statement is wholly irrelevant and not at all analogous. It does not apply in this case. They are two different propositions entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, when the wind is blowing dust in our eyes we should not play the foolish part of the ostrich by burying our heads in the sand and trying to convince ourselves that there is no storm. After all, communism is not a theory. It is a fact. Any well-informed person knows that the great conflict today in Europe is between the diametrically opposite, irreconcilable philosophies of communism on the one hand and fascism on the other hand.

For my own part, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we have place in the United States of America for either communism or fascism. [Applause.] We have room for only one "ism", and that is Americanism; but when you pass legislation like this you are employing the methods of the Communists rather than following the principles laid down by our fathers. [Applause.] Unless we can by full, fair, and free discussion impart this knowledge in the way it should be given, I fear for the future of our country. In order to catch a fox, one must know something about his habits. In order to combat communism, one must know something about its teachings. Problems are not solved by running away from them. The quickest and best way around any difficulty is straight through it. Any attempt to ignore or prohibit by coercion the study of communism will meet with the same success as shooting at the stars. "Ignorance is sin; knowledge is virtue", said Socrates, three centuries before Christ. Times and conditions have changed; truth has not. Ignorance is both deplorable and dangerous; prudence dictates that we face the facts, however unpleasant and disconcerting they might be. No one in this body has ever accused me of being a wild-eyed radical. Perhaps some are amazed to find me in my present position; but for one I think that the legislation is unwise, unsound, and un-American; and I trust that the membership of this House, regardless of what our opinions on communism or fascism might be, will vote overwhelmingly to repeal this awful and vicious measure. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I favor the unconditional repeal of the "red rider" because it is an un-American attempt to censor education and to suppress free inquiry and unbiased study of systems of government differing from our own.

Under the "red rider", education would tend to degenerate into something prescribed, lacking vitality and lacking the liberty to examine all facts freely and openly and without restraint. Truth never harmed a student. It is attempts to hide the truth, to fence it in with taboos, to force pupils to accept as facts the opinions of their elders without examination, that is stultifying and harmful.

Certainly we as Americans need not fear to permit our schools to present the facts in regard to communism and every other governmental system. We have confidence in our own system—democracy—and believe that by comparing our system with others its superiority for us will be doubly apparent.

Education should be enlightenment. It should encourage an open-minded and eager interest in all phases of activity. It should not be the vehicle to inculcate a narrow patriotism, bred in ignorance and fostered by a censorship from above.

The American plan of leaving the curriculum to educators, under school boards made up of elected representative citizens, has proven wise. What shall be taught in the schools and what shall be prohibited is not for legislative bodies to determine. From such attempts come well-meaning but thoughtless censorship that handicap and annoy instructors and limit and discourage scholarship.

May I ask this question in all seriousness?

Is not the "red rider", so-called, designed no doubt in all sincerity to check the growth of communism, identical with the practice in Russia, where education is restricted to the teaching of communism and to the exclusion of any facts other than derogatory to all other governmental systems or philosophies?

Do we want to imitate Russia in the free United States?

Once we countenance censorship in education, we may readily slip into permitting a censoring of the press, and finally, regardless of our Bill of Rights, free speech will go the way of censored education and a censored press.

Communism as practiced in Russia under the Soviet regime is distasteful to me. Like other forms of dictatorship, it is the antithesis of democracy. Believing that as I do, I want none of it. Wanting none of it, I repeat, for God's sake, for the sake of those great principles of democracy which we all hold dear, let us not, by refusing to repeal this vicious law, imitate the Russian method of regimented education.

It is my hope that this Congress will take a definite and strong stand and repeal this "red rider" and every other attempt at censorship. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, my State, Michigan, through its legislature in 1935 passed an anticommunistic law; that is, a law against the teaching of communism in our schools; but I say to you on the floor of this House that Michigan today regrets that that law was ever passed, for it has done more to foster communism in the State of Michigan than all the propaganda the Communists have at their command. At the present time in the State of Michigan efforts are being made to repeal this law, and I predict the repeal will be accomplished.

I shall always oppose legislation of any character whatsoever that infringes upon free speech as granted to us under our Constitution.

I personally am opposed to the doctrine of communism, but I do believe that the students of our schools are entitled to factual information regarding it. I urge the repeal of the so-called "red rider." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, it is exceedingly doubtful that any District legislation proposed during the last decade has created more poignant grief and rancor in and out of Congress than the so-called "red rider" which provides that "no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism."

After the enactment of this law the Comptroller General of the United States issued an order requiring every teacher or other employee of the District schools to declare each month that he or she did not at any time during said month teach or advocate communism in any school in the District of Columbia or elsewhere. The Comptroller General's order was based on the fact that Congress places specific limitations on the uses of the appropriation for the payment of salaries of those employed in the public schools of the District of Columbia.

The proponents of these measures were without doubt deeply concerned for the future welfare of our country. Their sincerity upon this patriotic issue is not questioned, but subsequent events disclose that the course they traversed was not marked with wisdom and that the end they sought to accomplish has been the scene of bitter and acrimonious debate.

It is universally agreed that communism seeks by force and violence to overthrow our republican form of government guaranteed by the Constitution. The Communist would abolish the three branches of government. The Communist believes in the confiscation of private property without due process of law as guaranteed by the Constitution. The Communist would nullify the first amendment granting freedom of religious worship, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press. It is perfectly obvious that the doctrine of communism, if in force and effect in this country, would completely destroy the American theory and form of government. But in this debate any argument that is made must flow in the first instance from the Constitution of the United States, and not from a conception of communism.

And so long as the Congress is responsible for the legislation in question it is well for the record to show that each of us takes an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and to well and faithfully discharge the duties of our offices. My colleagues, the teachers of the District of Columbia are required to take the same oath of loyalty to the Constitution of the United States. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that they take the same oath as Members of Congress, the Comptroller General's ruling says in substance, "Your patriotism is questioned, and therefore you must make an additional certification or oath that you have not taught or advocated communism as a condition precedent to receiving your monthly salary." Not only are teachers involved in this ruling, but clerks, officers, and janitors are compelled to sign this silly and ridiculous declaration.

I make this inquiry in all sincerity: Is there a single Member of this legislative body who would vote for a bill which compelled a Member of Congress to take an anticommunistic oath before he could receive his salary? Is there a Member who would compel the fathers and mothers of this land to take an oath not to teach or advocate communism to their children as a condition precedent to the right of franchise? Is there a single Member in this House who believes that his patriotism and loyalty to the American philosophy of government are superior to those of the school teachers of the District? There is not a single congressional district in America in which the school teachers are subject to such discrimination. Under such circumstances do you conscientiously believe that teachers in your own districts are devoted to the ideals of free government, while here in the Nation's Capital you measure their patriotism and loyalty in lights and shades of subversive doctrines? If you are willing to vote for the continuation of this humiliating class legislation, and continue to place the stigma of disloyalty upon 2,900 teachers in Washington, you should not hesitate to advocate and fight for similar laws throughout the United States, because this legislative monstrosity abridging the privileges of free citizens is the only one of its kind in all America. What would be your vote if you had a sister or brother teaching in the public schools? Suppose the brother were a veteran who possessed the Distinguished Service Cross for bravery in action. Is there a single man or woman in the House who would insult the patriotism of that patriot by compelling him to take the anticommunistic oath?

Even a criminal, under the Constitution, is innocent until proved guilty beyond all reasonable doubt; but in the case at bar we have invoked the severity of the ancients. We place the burden upon the teachers to prove themselves not guilty of teaching or advocating communism by confessing or signing upon the dotted line before their salaries are paid. Ah, what a travesty upon justice! What a slander upon the Constitution as we witness the torture and enslavement of the Bill of Rights! Can you imagine the janitors and charwomen being compelled to make that kind of a confession? Let me admonish you that there is no short cut to patriotism. You either have it or you do not have it. Legislation of this type will utterly fail to reach those whom society really needs to instruct upon the question of communism. If this were not so serious from the standpoint of free and orderly government, these innovations in the communistic field would become high spots on the stage of comedy among students of the Constitution.

Liberty and freedom of speech, guaranteed to every citizen under the Constitution, should have protected these teachers from this blanket indictment of un-Americanism. If this becomes permanent legislation, then history is repeating itself. Intolerance once started in popular governments will restrain the development of freedom and character, and, if carried far enough, become a dangerous foe of our republican form of government. For these basic reasons, if for nothing more, this legislation should be repealed.

Aside from the controlling principles of freedom, justice, and democracy, let us examine the proof in order to ascertain the truth or the falsity of these legislative conclusions. The evidence discloses that the public schools of Washington are all controlled by a board of nine members under an act passed by the Congress in 1906. The board members responsible for the employment of all teachers, officers, clerks, and janitors are appointed by the Supreme Court judges of the District. The evidence further adduced at the hearings shows that not a single shred of material and competent evidence has ever been filed in a proper forum charging a single teacher among the thousands in the District either before or since the passage of the legislation with teaching or advocating communism in the public schools. It is rather a paradox to find that in almost every instance when the question is raised the teachers of the District are lauded and praised for their devotion to duty, their integrity, and their high sense of patriotism to the American form of government. Many citations could be made to prove this assertion. Time prohibits me from quoting many of them, but I shall refer to one which comes from the opposition. On page 60 of the hearings before the Subcommittee on Education of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the Seventy-fourth Congress the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES], who opposes the repeal of this law, is quoted as saying, among other things:

> While I condemn in the most emphatic terms the inefficient and disloyal acts of the board of education of the District of Columbia, I praise in the highest terms the loyal services rendered by the teachers in the public schools of the District of Columbia.

However, the indictment which has been returned through this legislation is against the school teachers of the District and not the school board of which the gentlewoman from Indiana complains. The school board is not on trial. And even if it were, there is no concrete evidence submitted through testimony which attacks the integrity or the patriotism of the members of the board of education, and when I say concrete evidence that must be distinguished from rash conclusions made but not substantiated.

A careful examination of all of the evidence adduced in the various hearings will disclose that not even a prima-facie case was made that a single teacher was openly advocating and teaching communism in the District schools. The worst that can be said is that two or three teachers were smeared with communistic veneer by adverse witnesses in what seemed to be an ex-parte hearing growing out of the teaching of a course placed in the schools known as character education. The record is also uncontradictable that at no time in the history of the oldest member of the school board has there ever been the slightest evidence submitted to the board to prove that any teacher or officer, clerk, or janitor of the local public-school system was guilty of teaching or advocating subversive doctrines.

Yet, notwithstanding this record of fidelity and patriotism, we find the "red rider" attached to the appropriation bill of 1935 being passed with little or no consideration and without a single overture of discussion. It was one of those innocent little legislative riders full of high explosives and dynamite that no one knew anything about. Certainly no one realized the repercussions that would originate therefrom, or it would never have been passed. Will anyone in this House seriously contend that in this legislation and the McCarl certification flowing therefrom there does not lie human tragedy, heartaches, and pains as 2,900 teachers and some 1,100 other employees are directly charged with being untrue to the American philosophy of government without a scintilla of supporting evidence?

My colleagues it was never contemplated that the Congress of the United States should assume any responsibility for the creation of any part of the school curriculum. The traditional American system of conducting public schools has been an administrative, and not a legislative, function. This distinction is as old as government itself; it is far-reaching; and the slightest encroachment by the Government upon this fundamental principle may ultimately lead to political chaos and disorder in the public schools of America. If there is anything wrong with the school system of the District of Columbia, Congress should hold the Board of Education responsible. Changing the personnel of the Board, and not legislation affecting innocent teachers, is the answer. From the standpoint of substantive law, from the viewpoint of the future, and as a protection to a vital American precedent, this whole question is of tremendous importance.

Mr. Chairman, throughout my life, and especially since the war, I have been diligent and militant in my opposition to the ugly and un-American philosophy of communism. It is repugnant to American ideals. It does violence to our religious and moral sentiments. It holds in hollow mockery the traditions and history of a brave and heroic people. My colleagues, I detest the Communistic mentality. I denounce his ungodly commitments. I despise his subversive methods. And yet, with this legislation remaining upon the statute books, we continue to give the communistic cause free advertising and exploitation, and not only that, but we advise the Communists that we are unable to meet their challenge through the arts of education and are compelled to do it through legislation. I shall never grant the Communist an opportunity to boast or comment that my vote was secured because of my fear of him or my fear of the advancement of his unholy, irreverent, and un-American cause.

I have been honored as department commander of the American Legion of Illinois and as national judge advicate of the national organization of the American Legion. No one is more interested in driving communism from our shores than the gentleman from Illinois, but I submit in all sincerity that you cannot do it through ignorance of Communistic principles. You cannot do it by closing the safety valve of free speech through legislation. Let us end this acute controversy once and for all by voting to repeal this legislation and voting down all amendments, thereby demonstrating to the world that Members of Congress are just as tolerant, liberal, and unrestrained in these modern days as the great Thomas Jefferson was when he caused the Bill of Rights to become a part of the Constitution of the United States.

There are some who believe we should amend by permitting the teaching of communism in the schools but eliminating the theory of advocacy. In my opinion that is dodging the issue. This is a compromise which in no way alters the argument I have made. It merely lessens the degree of disloyalty attached to the teachers. It will not keep the Comptroller General from compelling them to certify that they have not advocated communism during the month before their salary is paid. No, my friends, this is a distinction without a difference when applied to the merits of the controversy. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am for the unqualified repeal of this so-called "red rider." [Applause.] It is a travesty, a mockery, and an utter legislative absurdity. It never should have been written into the law, and the best thing we can do is to take it out immediately. It is an insult to the school teachers of America for Congress to say to them that they must submit affidavits that they are not teaching or advocating communism. It would be an insult to us if some higher authority said that before we got our monthly pay we would have to make similar affidavits.

No one loathes and abhors communism more than I, but this character of legislation promotes communism. There is only one way in which to oppose communism, and that is through education, through telling the people back home exactly what communism is and what the purposes and objectives of those advocating communism are. If you do this you need not fear the spread of communism in free America, because communistic principles and doctrines are absolutely the opposite of everything in which we believe. What are the doctrines of the Communists? They teach hatred of God and of all religion and of all religious faiths, Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, and Moslem. They teach the bitterest kind of class hatred, the destruction of private property and inheritance, the use of the Third Internationale at Moscow to stir up conflicts, riots, sabotage, and industrial unrest in all noncommunist countries. They seek to promote a class or civil warfare and to establish a communistic form of Government under the red flag with a world capital at Moscow.

If the Congressmen themselves know what communism is, if the school teachers of America know what communism is, and these two groups of people tell the people the aims and purposes of the Communists we shall have nothing to fear in America from the spread of communism. This is the best way in which to combat it or prevent its spread. We should not combat it through the use of force, violence, or coercion and the laying down of such absurd laws to the school teachers or any other group.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. While communism may be dangerous, ignorance of communism and the facts is even more dangerous.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is correct. In this country we have no need to fear that a handful of Communists can overthrow our Government by force and violence. There are only a million Communists and their sympathizers in America. Let us not be hysterical. If a million Communists by force and violence should seek to overthrow our free institutions they would, to use a Russian phrase, be liquidated overnight by the American Army, the National Guard, the American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Communism presents the most serious question in the world today, because there are millions of Communists in Italy, Germany, Spain, France, and other countries. Thank God we have but very few in our own. The reason we have very few is that we are a free country, that we have the rights of free people, including freedom of speech. So long as the American people have these rights, and so long as labor is treated squarely we need have no fear whatever of communism—unless we become hysterical and put on the statute books laws of this kind backed by coercion, and tell the public school teachers what they should teach.

I would like to have every school teacher in America teach the children just what communism is; but if a single school teacher should attack our free institutions, and our republican form of government guaranteed by the Constitution, he or she ought to be fired overnight. This is the way I would stop the spread of communism in America, and I would put the responsibility on the school authorities.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What the gentleman desires is to have the school teachers teach his version of communism, not their version.

Mr. FISH. Yes; I want them to give only the facts. I am not concerned with anything but the facts; and the school teachers can very easily find out what the facts are.

I feel a little strongly on this subject. I believe we are getting a little bit hysterical.

I may say I am rather ashamed of some of my Republican friends. [Laughter and applause.] When I say "a little bit" I am understating it. [Laughter and applause.]

They passed around the word for those speaking for the party to try to make out that the President of the United States was a Communist and, coming from his district and knowing the President, and disagreeing with him on many, many things, I did not propose to stultify myself, because I know the President of the United States is not a Communist. [Applause.] I know the President of the United States does not want to destroy religion. I know that the President of the United States does not want to haul down the American flag and run up the red flag. If we had wanted to say that the President of the United States is a radical, that he is a near Socialist, that he is trying to socialize industry and change our form of government in many respects, that is a different thing, and we would have been within our rights. But to call him a Communist only promotes communism and encourages the Communists.

What I propose we should do with Communists is to say, first, that the Communist Party should be taken off the ballot in every State of the Union, because it is not an American party. [Applause.] It is a section of the Communist International at Moscow, and takes its orders from Moscow and is not an American party and has no place on the ballot.

Second, I would deport all the alien Communists in the United States who seek to spread class poison and hatred against our free institutions and urge the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence, and give their jobs to loyal American citizens who are now walking the streets. That would be the most effective way to combat communism.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman approve of the attitude or the conduct of the President of the United States in recognizing Russia, in view of the fact every President from Woodrow Wilson down to the present President refused to do so?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows that the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, and I possibly more than anyone else opposed recognition; but the fact that the President recognized Soviet Russia does not make him a Communist, because practically every civilized nation in the world had already recognized Soviet Russia. I thought it was a mistake and a gigantic hoax. I think we have lost out by recognition, but it does not make the President of the United States a Communist.

Mr. Chairman, for the reasons enumerated, I hope the "red rider" will be repealed by unanimous vote of the Members of the House of Representatives, unless an adequate amendment is proposed to permit teachers to tell the truth about communism. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. GASQUE].

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to find myself in discord with so many of my associates here today. However, I know something about the history of the so-called "red rider." I do not think the gentleman from Indiana is as familiar with its history as I am.

It was my good fortune or misfortune to have served as a member of the District Committee for about 8 years. Almost continuously during that time my office, as well as that of Mr. Blanton, was stormed with certain patrons of the public schools here, not by the teachers, not by the superintendents, not by the Board of Education, but by the patrons, who were bitterly complaining that there were teachers in the District of Columbia who were teaching and advocating communism. That was really the beginning and the cause of this "red rider."

I might agree with my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and others that this amendment should never have been adopted, but it has been adopted. It has been written into the law. Let us see from a psychological standpoint what effect repealing this is going to have. The "red rider" provides that the teachers shall make a statement that they have not taught or advocated communism. Repeal would say to the Communists of the country, Our schools are open for your advocacy of communism. Put all the teachers who believe in communism in them and advocate it all you please. What good American citizen wants to have the doctrine of communism advocated to his children in the schools here in the way that the communistic teacher would advocate it; not like the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] would teach it, but like the communistic teacher would teach it?

Mr. Chairman, those people teach it in such a subtle manner the children nor their parents ever know they are getting it across. I may say if the countries of Europe had been more careful about this matter the various European countries would not be flooded with communism and fascism today.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. In the gentleman's experience as a member of the District Committee, has any evidence been submitted to the committee charging any teacher with advocating or teaching communism in the schools of the District of Columbia?

Mr. GASQUE. None, except the personal visits of the parents. But I have had in my office 40 or 50 parents who came to the office suggesting the adoption of the "red rider", or something of like manner, wanting something done to stop the teaching of communism in the public schools.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Did the gentleman do anything to correct the condition?

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Blanton introduced the so-called red rider. I have said I thought that it was a mistake, but as it has been adopted and is a part of the law I am opposed to striking it out.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. No; that was long after.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, what is communism? I am afraid that many of us do not even know, but as I understand it, communism is against God, against the churches, against our form of government, and even against the family unit. While I say it may be all right to teach to the children what it is, what American citizen wants his children to have a teacher who advocates this doctrine in the schools while the child's mind is young and is at that stage when impressions are so easily made?

The advocates for repeal, however, state that they want freedom of instruction in our public schools. Personally, I do not believe the "red rider" in any way prevents teachers from explaining to children in their schools in a general way the facts concerning communism, but to advocate it is another thing. Mr. Prettyman at the time that this "red rider" was passed and who was then corporation counsel, stated as follows:

> To state that communism exists is not to teach it. To state what Communists believe is not to teach communism within the meaning of this statute, provided that the method or manner of statement does not imply approval. Thus I am of the opinion that the mere recitation or study of actual data is not teaching prohibited by this statute.

We have no objection to this being done, provided approval is not "implied" which would mean advocacy.

Let us note some of those who have advocated the repeal of the "red rider": First, Communistic Party of Washington, D. C. (resolution adopted Nov. 17, 1935, and later official communication issued Jan. 13, 1937). Second, so-called American Civil Liberties Union. Most of us know what that union is.

Third. American Federation of Teachers who voted at its convention in August 1936 to appropriate $5,000 immediately for the Spanish "reds"—misnamed Spanish "loyalists"—and which organization of public-school teachers is also shown to have received aid from the Communist-giving Garland fund.

Fourth. The outstanding leaders of the "red" group of college professors, some of whom are actually serving on the national advisory council of the University of Moscow.

Fifth. The Communist-aiding press; that is to say, the sections of the public press which persist in terming the Spanish "reds" "loyalists", and urge the public not to take communism too seriously by doing anything against it but to believe as true the false assertion that Stalin has abandoned violent world revolution and adopted instead a policy of internal development of Russia itself, and which sections of the press have been resorting to persistent distortion about the District of Columbia "red rider" to deceive the public into believing that it forbids mention or discussion of Russia or communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia.

I am convinced that the most insidious and dangerous propaganda that we in America have to combat today is the advocacy of communism. I regret very much that I cannot vote with my friends who advocate the repeal of this "red rider" and say to the world that the District of Columbia public schools are wide open for the teaching and advocacy of communism. Communists, send in your teachers as much as you please. I could not vote that way and call myself a real American citizen, and I admit that I am too dumb to understand why so many of those in this House who I know to be real American citizens and who I feel are perfectly honest in what they have said can advocate striking out all of this "red rider."

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, to date we have had 3 minutes allowed those in opposition to the repeal measure, and I assume during the rest of the general debate there will be very little time given those who oppose outright repeal.

At the outset I want my position very clearly understood. Nobody accuses any of the proponents of this bill of being anything but what they are—real, fine, stalwart Americans—and the gentlewoman from New Jersey and the others who have expressed themselves need have no fear, no matter what the outcome of this bill may be, that anyone would be justified in entertaining any other thought with reference to them.

Furthermore, I want it clearly understood that I stand for the great principle of academic freedom, I stand for the principle of free inquiry, I stand for the principle of free communications, but I do not stand for the principle of one advocating one's own personal views. Academic freedom does not mean the right of any person to advocate dogmatically. Academic freedom means freedom of research, freedom of expression, conveying to the students in the higher institutions of learning the views of all experts, conveying views and opinions impersonally, not for the purpose of trying to convert a student to a teacher's own personal views but trying to give him the benefit of all persons' views, in order that he might form his own personal opinions. The objective of the great principle of academic freedom is not for the teachers to instruct a student what to think but to instruct students along lines so they will be able to think as their minds dictate; in other words, how to think. The line of demarcation between proper use and abuse of the great principle of academic freedom is when the teacher tries to inculcate into the mind of a student what to think as distinguished from how to think. I stand for teaching all schools of science, political and otherwise. I believe it is a good thing to give factual information—to teach history. There is nothing in the "red rider" which prevents this, and yet I am not in favor of the "red rider" in its present form.

If a bill were brought in, such as the newspapers stated the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY] was going to bring in, I would be here supporting that bill. The present situation, unless an amendment which might be offered is adopted, gives me no option except to oppose this bill because the word "advocate" is contained in the measure and will be repealed by its passage.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it not true that under the Prettyman decision you could teach communism in our schools, but subsequent to that the Comptroller General ruled that you could not teach it?

Mr. McCORMACK. Correct in substance. Teaching and advocating, according to Mr. Prettyman's opinion, were synonymous. On a criminal statute I agree with him, but on a noncriminal statute I would be inclined to disagree. I would like to see the word "teach" stricken out, and also the necessity for teachers signing as they do when they receive their salary. You could have accomplished your objective by bringing in a proper bill. That has, unfortunately, not been done.

Since when has my friend in charge of the time on the Republican side arrived at the conclusion that it is un-American to prohibit the advocacy of communism? Let me go a step further——

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Does the gentleman know of one single, individual teacher in the District of Columbia who has ever been charged with advocating communism in our schools?

Mr. McCORMACK. If that is so, why should the teachers—and they are real Americans——

Mr. SHORT. That is exactly why this is altogether unnecessary.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, I will answer the gentleman's question affirmatively. The hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations show that Superintendent Ballou was associated with Chartres and Beard, men who believed in indoctrinating the students' minds.

He is or has been on the same committee with them or associated with them. Some of his associates believe that academic freedom permits indoctrination. They are wrong and they know it or should know it. The so-called intellectual opponents of our form of government operate, indirectly, not openly, because they may be subject to attack; but indirectly they inculcate into the mind of the youth the germ that will prompt the youth to think as they do. They do not teach—they argue their own personal views. That came out of the subcommittee hearings of the Committee on Appropriations, and if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] will read the hearings he will see that what I say is true. Mr. Chairman, I was chairman of a special committee that investigated nazism, communism, and other un-American activities in this country. I do not believe in driving under cover our enemies. Their actions and expressions should be controlled in the interest of our people who overwhelmingly love our country. My committee made two recommendations directed toward communism, one of which was to make it a crime "to willfully and knowingly advocate the overthrow of government by force and violence." Yet, that bill has received hidden and bitter opposition, and what American is opposed to such a bill. I refer to the recommendations of the committee of which I was chairman simply to show that my committee did not feel that driving under cover, or denying the proper exercise of the principle of academic freedom, was the best way to meet this vicious destructive movement of hatred, a movement that has as its ultimate objective the violent overthrow of our Government, and the destruction of personal liberty, so precious and essential to liberty-loving people. I do not believe in driving them under the surface. I believe in keeping them exposed. The advocating of communism is not freedom of speech. It is the abuse of speech—it is a mere license. Anyone who advocates communism, or the overthrow of our Government by force and violence, is doing something that we are justified in legislating against. The advocacy of force and violence is the line of demarcation between freedom of speech and abuse of speech, between a constitutional right and a license, and we always have a right to legislate against license.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Does the gentleman know that the Board of Education brought Dr. Chartres here once a week at $50 a day and expenses?

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentlewoman for her contribution. What does "to advocate" mean? It means to plead. That is not academic freedom. It is one who advocates a principle or opinion or espouses any cause by argument. That is not academic freedom. I recognize the great principle of academic freedom. A radical is just as dangerous to the existence of that principle as the reactionary. Both operate in opposite directions, but they arrive at the same result. Both of them believe that academic freedom is to advocate what they believe is right, their right to indoctrinate. In advocating, when attacked, they demand the protection of this great principle when they are in the minority, but when in the majority, they want to destroy the right of anyone else to possess it whose views or opinions conflict with theirs. Witness Germany of today, where the great principle of academic freedom was born over 200 years ago. Witness Russia and other countries, with their so-called dictatorships of the right or of the left.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. To ask the gentlemah if he has this law in his own city or State; and if he does not, does he not think it would be a good thing to advocate it? Does the gentleman approve of having this law in his own State?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have no objection to a law being passed anywhere prohibiting the advocacy of communism.

Mrs. NORTON. I asked the gentleman a question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Pardon me, but I have answered the question. I do not believe in the signing of a paper for a teacher to receive her salary. Throughout my whole remarks I have confined myself to "advocacy." I believe it is proper to pass a law to prohibit teachers anywhere advocating communism. It is contrary to our institutions. It is in opposition to our very scheme of government, and it is contrary to the great principles of academic freedom.

Mrs. NORTON. How about defining the words "teach and advocate"? Had we been able to define these words this thing would not have happened.

Mr. McCORMACK. The opinion of Mr. Prettyman did not stop teaching the philosophy of communism as other subjects of political science are taught in the schools, did it?

Mrs. NORTON. Absolutely; yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh!

Mrs. NORTON. Absolutely; yes—teaching the facts of communism.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me read from his opinion:

> Thus, I am of opinion that the mere recitation or study of factual data is not the "teaching" prohibited by this statute. But I am also of the view that any shadow of favor or support of communism shown by or reasonably to be drawn from such recitation or study is prohibited.

His opinion did not stop teaching in accordance with the principle of academic freedom.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is not that contrary to the gentleman's former statement?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no; there is nothing to stop teaching now. It is advocacy.

The Encyclopedia of Social Sciences, which gives the history of the great principle of academic freedom and its meaning, states, in part:

> Academic freedom is a prerequisite condition to the proper prosecution, in an organized and adequately endowed manner, of scientific inquiry and communication of its results to the public and to students into the higher stages of their initiation into the intellectual life of their age. In the needs and rights of such students a further reason for maintaining the teacher's freedom is apparent. They are entitled to learn the contemporary situation in each science, the range and diversity of opinion among specialists in it; it is not the pedagogic province of the university to acquaint students merely with facts of common knowledge and with opinions accepted by the general public or the donors of endowments. The same rights of the student, however, demand of the university teacher, in his function of instruction as distinct from investigation and publication, special care to avoid the exclusive or one-sided presentation of his personal views on questions upon which there is no agreement among experts. He is not entitled to take advantage of his position to impose his beliefs dogmatically upon his students; the nature of his office requires that alternative opinions be fairly expounded and that the student be encouraged and trained to reach his own conclusions on such questions through critical reflection and carefully ascertained facts.

To "teach a theory", as the Encyclopaedia further says—

Might mean merely to expound it, or to expound it and also state the arguments of its adherents; or to do both of these and also to indicate the prevailing opinions of experts with regard to it, or to let the teacher's own opinion concerning it be known; or to inculcate it dogmatically or to proselytize in behalf of it. If laws prohibiting the "teaching" of certain theories in State institutions are construed only in the last, i. e., in the strictest, sense, they do not essentially conflict with the principle of freedom of teaching as above set forth. They would leave entire liberty of inquiry, discussion, and undogmatic expression of personal opinion to both teacher and student.

In this country we possess democratic processes of government. There is no disagreement on that. So far as our people are concerned, there is no division of thought as to whether or not our form of government is the best. It is our Government and we are satisfied with it. While it is the right of a teacher to instruct on the various schools of science, political and otherwise, it is not their right, under the guise of academic freedom, to impose their personal views on the student's mind, if their views are that some other form of government is preferable to ours. "Science and the teaching of it are free", but that does not mean that one has not the right to "advocate."

Another writer has well said, showing how both the radical and the reactionary in their efforts unconsciously work together in the destruction of the principle of academic freedom, "What the radical now wants is what the reactionary usually wants." They both now believe that school is no longer a place where students should be exposed to conflicting ideas. Unlike the logical liberal, he believes with the conservative that the school is, on the contrary, a place where "correct" opinions should be inculcated, and he proposes in the future to fight with the conservative not over the right either to be in partial but primarily over the question of what is and what is not "correct" opinion.

The radical no longer holds, as he once did, that the right of free speech, along with the other civil liberties, is both an end in itself and a necessary condition for any continuing health in society. He may insist for the present upon his theoretical right to the civil liberties established by democracy, but that is merely because he is a member of a minority and knows that only by claiming minority rights can he hope to be allowed to continue his various activities. At the same time he is inclined to argue that the very granting of such rights is evidence that the present order lacks faith in itself and he makes no pretense of believing that the new society for which he is fighting will permit similar freedoms to "counterrevolutionary" minorities. The new society will have neither the doubts about itself nor the uneasy conscience characteristic of our form of democracy and it will, therefore, have no reason to tolerate error. In such a society the "free school" will obviously have no more place than the "free press' or the "free church." The state would be "totalitarian" and all the institutions concerned with the spread of ideas would naturally be controlled by a central authority, part of whose functions would be to harmonize them with one another and with the official doctrine of the Government itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

FAKE RACKETEERING ORGANIZATIONS ABOUND IN WASHINGTON

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] referred to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] made the most statesmanlike speech I have heard during this session of the Congress. [Applause.] As we all know, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is eligible for membership in all kinds of patriotic societies. I do not know whether he belongs or not. He is a member of a church.

He knows the foolishness of a great many fake, racketeering organizations that come into Washington. There are dozens of organizations which say they represent churches which do not represent churches. If we are going to put this on the basis of patriotic societies, I belong to the Sons of the American Revolution. I could be a D. A. R. [laughter], if I were a lady.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO BELONG TO A PATRIOTIC SOCIETY TO BE A PATRIOT

I do not think that is anything against me or anything for me. I do not think it has anything to do with the subject; you don't have to join a club or society that professes moral uplift or patriotism to be decent or patriotic.

This amendment provides that a person should not advocate "un-American" doctrines. During this campaign I seem to remember having heard that the Democratic Party, headed by Mr. Roosevelt, was "un-American." People said that Democracy was un-American. Do you know what is liable to happen if we get this un-American stuff in here? The Republicans might get in power and they might not let us talk any more. [Laughter.]

Now, in the name of common sense, what is "un-American"? Pray tell me, what is un-American? Well, perhaps the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota is un-American. We may be un-American. Even the Republican Party may be. It is a rigamarole of nonsense.

THE "RED RIDER" SHOULD BE WIPED OFF

Let us do as the gentleman from New York (Mr. O'CONNER) said, let us wipe this off the statute books and get down to the issues. Let us wipe it off; let us be grown men; let us not sit around and say: "Well, our people back home are going to think we are Communists."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is not this the first time the gentleman ever agreed with anything said by the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR? [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Not only that, but it is the first time that I ever agreed with HAM FISH. [Applause and laughter.]

O, my colleagues, let us be sensible. Let us repeal this thing and forget all this nonsense about "advocating" or "teaching" communism. Nobody in our schools is advocating communism. Our teachers are just as patriotic as we are.

Just imagine! Going out and getting our little girls and boys to overthrow the Government. Why! It is nonsense, it is foolishness. Let us be intelligent and repeal this law. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we are making a mountain out of a molehill. I came on the floor to defend my vote this afternoon, because I have listened very carefully to the remarks that were being made about this particular bill.

In the first place, I do not believe the law should ever have been placed upon the statute books, but the fact of the matter is it is there. It is now the law of the District. It is the law of the land. When we vote to repeal it, are we going to give our consent to the advocating of communism in this country, if some teacher chooses to do it? That is the question. Are we going to advocate communism? If there is any teacher in the District schools or in the schools of the United States who are advocating communism, they ought to be expelled from the school at once. If there is any teacher who is honorably, honestly, and conscientiously trying to teach things that are American and uphold the Constitution, they do not need to fear this law; it will not hurt them nor injure their character nor their standing as a teacher.

I am going to quote from the former corporation counsel, Mr. Prettyman, in regard to this law:

Clearly any teaching of communism which has for its purpose or its intended effect the nurture, the training, or the indoctrination of the pupils in communistic thought is forbidden by this statute.

And again I quote from the same opinion:

But I am of the opinion that the mere informing of pupils concerning the history, existence, or theories of the communistic governments or parties is not prohibited. Obviously Congress did not mean to prohibit comment or instruction which is adverse to communism—that is, teaching against it.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I do not yield until I finish my statement. After I have finished, if I have the time, I will be glad to yield.

As I said before, if a man is honest he can get up and say anything about communism he wants to, as long as he does not advocate it. If we repeal this law, what will happen? Those who are advocating communism, in my judgment, will be permitted to go into the schools and advocate communism and teach destruction and the overthrow of this Government.

I took an oath and obligation to support the Constitution of the United States. I am not in any way going to compromise with anybody my rights to try to uphold the Constitution. I am not going to permit, if it is within my power, anybody in this country to advocate communism. I am against it in every conceivable way. If I should vote to do away with this law the people of this country right away will say to me, "You are going to permit people to advocate communism." It is not a fact. The only thing I can do is to vote against this bill to substantiate my thoughts, as far as my own mind is concerned. If you people think you can permit the teaching of communism in the schools, and by the elimination of this law you will do away with the advocating of communism, I do not believe you will accomplish that end.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. No; I am sorry. I said before I could not yield to anybody until I finished making my statement, and I do not intend to do it.

Statements are being made by men of note, educated people in this country, who are not in any sense desirous of having a law like this on the statute books, and they oppose its removal. I would not vote to put a law like that on the books, but I am not going to vote to take it out now since it is there. It injures no one but an advocate of communism. I am not going to sanction communism or the advocating of it in this country with any vote of mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to get some definite information. As I understand the provisions of this law, it would prohibit a teacher in the schools of the District of Columbia saying he or she is opposed to communism. I would like the chairman of the subcommittee to answer that question. That is entirely the opposite to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has said.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. As I understand from information given our committee, they could not even mention communism.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I understood. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said they could teach against it but not for it.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is not true. As a matter of fact, it is totally ignored in the schools of Washington now.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. Furthermore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] said that teachers had nothing to fear from this "red rider." I want to say that many teachers did appear before our subcommittee and voiced their distinct protest, because it intimidated and cramped them in their teaching of factual data on communism.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very much troubled about this piece of legislation. I am in agreement with preceeding speakers who have said that it never should have been placed upon the statute books in the first instance; but I am wondering, if Congress were to repeal this legislation, if it might not be construed by the people of the District that Washington school teachers are at liberty to go ahead and teach communism in the city schools if they so desire. That is the crux of the whole thing so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. There was no evidence as to that before the committee, and we took 285 pages of testimony. It seems passing strange that if that be the situation in the District of Columbia it does not exist in a great many cities of the Nation and even in the gentleman's own city.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield additional time to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. What I am afraid of, Mr. Chairman, is that if we repeal this "red rider" it will be construed as authorization from Congress to go ahead and teach communism if it is so desired.

Mr. SCHULTE. Not any more than it would be in any other part of the country.

Mr. KNUTSON. Congress, of course, cannot legislate on such matters for any other part of the country. We are here concerned only with the District of Columbia, and it would seem to me that the Washington schools should be a model for the schools of the country.

I do not know whether communism is taught or advocated in any of the public schools in the country, but it is a matter of common knowledge that in a number of our colleges the doctrine is openly advocated, and that is something that our people should put a stop to.

In my opinion the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] should include fascism because both doctrines are subversive and destructive to individualism, the home, and the church. It has been stated in the debate held upon the proposal to repeal the "red rider" that there are not to exceed 50,000 Communists in this country. Mr. Chairman, if that be true I will say without hesitation or qualification that there are 50,000 too many Communists in the United States.

Communism and fascism have no place in a democracy. Both theories of government are predicated upon absolutism and the submergence of the individual. After all, our country was developed through the efforts of the individual, and while there are many who profess to sneer at "rugged individualism" the fact nevertheless remains that individualism is necessary to the perpetuity of our Government, which rests upon the freedom and the well-being of our people.

I shall vote for the McCormack amendment with a clear conscience, knowing that in doing so I am voting to preserve our glorious form of government, which has in years past given an asylum to millions of oppressed from other and less favored lands. The advocacy of any political doctrine in our public schools is un-American and wherever indulged in should be suppressed. I can well imagine the howl that would go up from the radicals if we permitted instructors in our schools to indoctrinate the youth with the principles of the Democratic or Republican Parties. What the McCormack amendment proposes is to prohibit the advocacy of a political doctrine in the public schoolrooms of Washington. There can be only one stand to take upon that proposal.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this is the most extraordinary situation I have ever seen in the American Congress. This "red rider" is unquestionably the most unwelcome stray dog that the people of Washington ever found on their doorsteps. [Applause and laughter.] They unanimously want to kick it out, and we are asked by some gentlemen here not to do the kicking.

This "red rider" expresses all that remains in this country of religious and racial intolerance and the spirit of inquisition. It is an insult not only to the teachers of the city of Washington but of the Nation. They unanimously condemn it. The press of the Nation is almost unanimous in its condemnation of it. This Congress can vindicate itself as the representative voice of democracy and the American people only by voting to repeal it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is incredible that the Board of Education in the city of Washington, made up of leading citizens of the Capital of the Nation, and appointed by its supreme court, would either foster or tolerate the teaching of communism in the public schools. If they were doing so, it is incredible that the very conservative newspapers of the city of Washington would be backing the school board and demanding the unconditional repeal by Congress of the so-called "red rider." These papers claim in so many words—and as a sample I quote from a Washington Post editorial of April 18 last—that with the passage of the repeal bill, "the principles of Americanism will be restored for local education." When it is known that the nearly 3,000 school teachers of the District of Columbia, in order to draw their pay, must take an oath every 2 weeks that they have not taught or advocated communism in the schools, it is enough to make a man pinch himself to see if he is awake and in the United States. Such a requirement is a reflection on the Congress rather than on the school teachers.

The "red rider" stands condemned not only by most of the newspapers of Washington but of the country, and not only by the educators of Washington but of the country. You will be told by others who have had more time and opportunity than I to study this question in detail and amass data on it, as to the identity and extent of the opposition to the "red rider" and the support of the pending bill to repeal it.

Mr. Chairman, if the time has come in this country that the great teaching profession of the schools and colleges is so inoculated with communism that it must be muzzled, that we must pass suppressive legislation—and that is just what such legislation means—it is high time we took stock of the state of the Union and ascertain, if possible, as the black crow said, "what causes that."

In my brief time I shall leave the curriculum of the District of Columbia to others and consider this question from a different angle. Assured that the "reds" will be properly taken care of, I want to make some observation about "red baiters." It may not be true in every case that you can scratch a "red baiter" and find a reactionary. But it is true that you can scratch a "red baiter" and rarely find one who has made any notable contribution in behalf of the submerged millions of America, or the amelioration of the conditions which make good citizens see red.

A few years ago the country was shocked by the disclosures made by the Federal Trade Commission that certain powerful interests were subsidizing the schools and colleges of America, the teachers and professors, and infiltrating the school studies with corporate propaganda. Where then was the voice of the "red baiter"? Apparently it is all right to invade the schools and churches of the country and hire the teachers and preachers to poison the minds of both young and old with propaganda to perpetuate special privilege in America, but it is all wrong to let them know that such a dangerous thing as communism even exists in the world.

I hold no brief for the polar despotism that rules Russia. It is so alien to the thought, the traditions, the atmosphere of America, that I cannot visualize its transplantation in this country. The American people, rooted in individualism, in liberty of thought and action, in the art of self-government, are as far from the conditions which produced the communism of Russia as the east is from the west. Communism as applied by the "red baiters" in this country would seem to need redefinition. Some Members give a very liberal range to the term. The District of Columbia rent-regulation bill was denounced on the floor as communistic. A political convention in Arizona condemned the "communistic regimentation" of the people by the President, naming him. These definitions, and there are many such, take in a lot of territory. Nearly all the major legislative measures of this administration are frequently characterized as communistic and fascistic. The term would seem to include every one who does not believe that this Government ought to be administered mainly for the benefit of the greatest aggregation of private interests that ever flourished on the face of the earth.

Mr. Chairman, I appeared before the District Subcommittee on Education in behalf of the repeal bill and expressed some views offhand which I shall insert as part of my remarks, in which I stated that my cure for most of the so-called radicalism in this country would be jobs. I also related some incidents which had fallen under my observation indicating that free speech might be a better remedy than putting on the lid. In support of this view I was delighted to run across the same thought the other day in a posthumous publication of the writings of the greatest common-sense philosopher and statesman of our time. I want to quote a paragraph from the McNaught Syndicate of hitherto unpublished writings of Will Rogers. I quote:

> When thousands of police from the White House to Claremore were fighting the "reds" to keep them from marching, the mayor of San Francisco helped 'em form in line, had his men show them where the city hall was, fixed a stand for 'em to speak on, thanked 'em for coming to see him, and a good time was had by all, except the women who were unable to get arrested.
> But ain't it funny, only one man in public office in America that had sense of humor enough to kid 'em along.

I don't know when this item was written, but it sounds as if it had been written about the time a certain man in the White House permitted the Federal troops to be called out to eject the first bonus army from Washington, resulting in what has been referred to as the Battle of Pennsylvania Avenue. Subsequently, another bonus army invaded Washington, but with another type of man in the White House. He gave them jobs. It dispersed the army. The privates accepted the jobs, the generals registered a dying wail in the Washington papers, and the second bonus army faded from the scene. The wife of the President visited the veterans and talked to them in their camp. There is food for serious thought in these two vastly different methods of handling identical situations.

Mr. Chairman, if there is a "red" peril in this country, the very last way to eradicate it would be by laws suppressing free speech. Every other remedy ought to be exhausted before we "Heil Hitler." A good many years ago a thought occurred to me which gave me some reassurance and helps me to preserve some sort of balance under stress. It was this, that a majority of the American people never go crazy about the same thing at the same time. Some may go "red", others may go "red rider", but the great body of the people go along the even tenor of their way. Congress will reflect the national common sense by repealing this excrescence on local legislation, but which has national implications. The District of Columbia got along without it for 135 years. The States of the Union, every one of them, have gotten along without it, all the colleges and universities of the Nation get along without it. It ought to be repealed.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN A. MARTIN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF COLORADO, BEFORE THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I have just had a 20-minute debate before the Committee on Rules, and I am a little hot yet. I was invited to make a brief statement for this bill, but do not think I can make any contribution to this question excepting for a couple of observations.

I suppose this inquiry revolves more or less around the general right of free speech, and the best thing I ever heard on that is something which has remained on my mind for years, and I think it influenced the man who told me. It was an incident related to me by a friend from out in my home town, a man who might be mildly termed a rabid reactionary, who went out to Seattle, and he happened to stray down on the water front, in the soapbox section in which they set out boxes for the orators. I had been in the section myself so that I could get the locus of the incident in my mind. He paused before a fellow on a soap box who was raising hell with the existing order of things. A big officer was standing calmly by, and after my friend listened to this tirade a moment he rushed up to the officer and said, "Officer, you are not going to stand here and permit that to go on, are you?" And the officer looked down at him and said, "Get a box, me boy, get a box."

We hear a lot about the philosophy of the British system at Hyde Park, in London. If a man wants to tear the Government down, they let him take a soap box and get on it and get it off his chest. Seattle appears to have modeled after it, and I rather like the idea. It doesn't hurt the air.

Another friend told me something which gave me a little kick. He has sort of a hobby listening to those people and he said that he noticed that as long as they just raised the devil with the existing order of things the crowd stayed with them and hung on every word but when they commenced to talk of their own plans of salvation, the crowd began fading away, and when they ended up they were talking to the empty street.

I got a letter a couple of years ago from a great organization of which I am proud to be a member. I was connected with the commission of that organization which had jurisdiction over Americanism, and a headquarters official wrote me a letter about the program which had been gotten up by a leader of the organization, which he was proposing to have adopted, against subversive teachings and activities.

I think we should all agree that any program which would be calculated to offset really subversive activities to overthrow or change the Government by force should be given hearty support. I wrote back to him and I recalled to his mind a different sort of propaganda, subversive propaganda which had been recently disclosed in this country, where teachers and educators were on the pay rolls of certain great special interests, and it was even in the schoolbooks. [Laughter.] And they were inculcating in the minds of the youth of the land the thought that God made these interests also and "saw that they were good." Now, I said, to my mind that kind of teaching will be more dangerous in the long run, it will prove to be more subversive, than the character of propaganda at which your program is aimed, and I said if you double them up and put both programs together, I will go along with you; but I observe that the more enthusiasm a man has for the suppression of one of the so-called subversive programs the less interest he has in the other program. If it is wrong to teach one kind of thing, it is all right to teach the other.

I think this country has greater problems to grapple with than trying to make it an offense for a school teacher to teach historical facts about Russia or any other country. When the people stand for what they are getting here at home, we are not in much danger from imported stuff.

Out in Iowa we had the spectacle of the mobbing of a district judge. They almost lynched him. Those men were not Communists; they did not know anything about communism, they did not care anything about it; you could not keep those men awake 5 minutes talking communism. They were American farmers. Also, we had in Missouri another outbreak of farmers who sought to restrain by force the legal selling of a farm and the eviction of the tenant, and they defied the Federal judge of the State of Missouri and challenged him to come to that town. Now, those incidents may be deplorable—my sympathies went to those farmers in both cases—I considered those outbreaks regrettable; but in my judgment the real thing to worry about is, as the Black Crow said, "What causes that?" That underlying cause of those outbreaks among the very best American type of farmers in the United States?

This organization that I mentioned, by the way, did not accept my proposition. This organization the other day published a report on its activities along these lines, and it wound up with the conclusion that the cure for communism and radical propaganda in the United States was education. Well, it has an important place; but in my judgment there is another cure that would be more effective than education, and that would be jobs; that would be my cure for much of this so-called communism—it would be jobs. I have had a lot of contact with the common herd; I was born among them, I was raised among them, I speak their language, and I am still one of them; and it is my judgment that 9 out of 10 of all the radicals throughout this country are people who have not got jobs. If you could pick up the first 10 and give them jobs, you would corrupt 9 Communists. The tenth might be incurable. [Laughter.]

So, if we could address ourselves to the eradication of the cause of radicalism in this country, the effect I think very largely would disappear. I think I have used up all of my time. However, you cannot discuss a big subject like this in a few minutes.

I got some amusement out of the controversy over in the House as to how this particular legislation, the so-called "red rider", was enacted.

Mr. SCHULTE. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask a question? I just inferred or I believe you insinuated that about 90 percent of the unemployed are radicals; is that right?

Mr. MARTIN. No; I said that 90 percent of the radicalism in this country was due to the economic conditions and distress, unemployment among both farmers and workers, and the masses of the people generally. No; I did not say that.

Mr. SCHULTE. I did not think there was any radicalism in the United States.

Mr. MARTIN. You did not?

Mr. SCHULTE. No; I did not.

Mr. MARTIN. Well, I might show you some of my mail once in a while. [Laughter.] Yes; I think there is a little radicalism in the United States. Let me tell you——

Mr. KENNEDY. How long will it take?

Mr. MARTIN. Just a minute—suppose we just cut the rest of it. There has been a lot of criticism about this so-called "red rider" getting through Congress. One Member on the floor was charging two members of the District subcommittee with having put this thing over. You know, when the District of Columbia is called on the calendar the great majority of us break for the door, as we have more important things to do than play town council for Washington, so we rush out and do it. So this Member was charging that these two members of the subcommittee took advantage of the situation and framed this up and that they had a bit of conversation between themselves and one of these members mumbled in a low tone to the other and the other mumbled in a low tone to the Speaker, and the amendment was adopted.

Now, the truth of the matter was this: Those two gentlemen were not framing up anything. They were speaking in a low tone because they were afraid if they spoke in the usual congressional tone of voice they would wake up the other three Members. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a yellow pamphlet, distributed throughout this city, advocating the repeal of the so-called "red rider." In this yellow pamphlet various arguments are advanced for repeal, and it is charged that it is un-American, and various other charges are made against it. The pamphlet, Mr. Chairman, is signed in this manner:

Issued by: City Committee, Communist Party of Washington. Read the Daily Worker.

Mr. Chairman, here is one organization out working for the repeal of this "red rider", which does not conceal its identity. We all know the purposes of the Communist organization.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include this pamphlet in an extension of my remarks.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman know that this was propaganda by the Communist Party, or is it propaganda put out the other way?

Mr. FADDIS. I must presume that it is genuine. It is signed by the City Committee of the Communist Party of Washington.

Then on the bottom follows a sentence as follows:

I want more information about the Communist Party.
Name ---------- Address ----------
Mail to post-office box 1817.

Evidently this organization has a mailing address and someone to attend to its business.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Would it make any difference if it had been printed on white paper?

Mr. FADDIS. It seems as though the color better suits the party that printed it. [Applause.]

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. GASQUE. Do they not also volunteer to give further facts as to why this "red rider" should be repealed?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; they offer to furnish further information regarding communism, and seem anxious to do so.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Has the gentleman received letters from fraternal and religious organizations of all denominations in this country for the repeal of the "red rider"? Not one, has the gentleman?

Mr. FADDIS. No; I have not. The principal source of propaganda in favor of repeal of the "red rider" has come from un-American sources.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. No such communications came before the committee, and I may say as to the pamphlet the gentleman holds in his hand that while I know nothing about it, we are in receipt of any number of requests for the repeal of the so-called "red rider" from the decent, respectable people of this District who sign their names and do not hide under the cloak of anonymity.

Mr. FADDIS. That may be, but for my part I believe if there is any time in the curriculum of our public schools for any additional teaching, the time would be much better devoted to giving the students of this Nation a thorough course about our Constitution and the incidents and proceedings leading to its adoption. If this were done, there would be more information among our citizens about this great document for the American people. Let us be rid of any suspicion of the teachings of subversive doctrines from any land and teach American principles of government.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Was the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to insert the pamphlet to which he referred in his remarks acted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has reserved the right to object.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the other day I asked permission to include in an extension of my remarks a speech made by a Democrat, Mr. Robert Jackson, Assistant Attorney General. It was objected to on the ground that it was improper matter. I want to know if it is proper to insert communistic matter but improper to put in Democratic matter? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a request to insert extraneous matter in remarks should be made in the House and not in Committee. The gentleman can submit his request when the Committee goes back into the House.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, we are all agreed that the factual teaching of communism is not objectionable. But if you were a teacher in the District schools, with the ruling of the Comptroller General before you in reference to this matter, would you take a chance on teaching anything about communism? When your pupils saw this big spot on the map known as Russia and asked you what form of government is there, would you tell them communism, or would you say anything about it? If you had a pupil in one of these schools who is dumb enough not to want to know what kind of government exists in Russia or anywhere else, what would you think of that child?

We are all agreed that to advocate communism is a bad thing. We do not want the teachers to advocate communism. We do not want them to advocate embezzlement. We do not want them to advocate stealing chickens. We do not want them to advocate smuggling. But we do not put it in the law. [Applause.]

To put that in the law is an imputation against the intelligence, honesty, and patriotism of our teachers, in whom we have placed the future hopes of our democracy, and I speak as a former teacher and as a son of a teacher, knowing something about their problems. Control of matters of instruction is not a subject of law in a democracy. They are and ought to be a matter of administration by the board of education and the supervisors. That is the condition in your district and mine. No "red riders" are tolerated there. Let us not use one vote on District of Columbia matters to lure the support of nut groups and piffle patriots in our own districts. There has been too much of that in the past.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in requesting this time is to combine my protest with others against this un-American and unfair restriction upon free education in America as represented by the particular jurisdiction we hold over the District. I see no more purpose in this law than I do in demanding of every Member of Congress that he take some religious oath, or an oath not to mention the word "communism", and God help some of us. It would take the words out of the mouth of a good many of us.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact if we leave this "red rider" on the statute books, the Members of Congress place their patriotism on a higher plane than the school teachers of the District?

Mr. KVALE. Yes. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I also yield the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] 1 minute.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I get a minute from each side, so that makes us even. I happen to represent the younger Members that came in the first of this year. I did not know that everyone was going to be with us when I requested time away back yonder. I hope there will never be a time in America when anything as un-American and as undemocratic as this will get on the statute books again. I hope it will never have to be acted on again in America.

Mr. Chairman, there are a few things that are beyond the reach of legislative activity. They are economic and civic in their nature and any attempt to make laws against them is so foolish and unavailing that it leaves us sitting high and dry with the world laughing at us. This happens to be one of those.

There is just one place in the United States that communism can exist, and that is in the slack of Uncle Sam's breeches. Let him take up the slack, and good-bye communism.

Mr. Chairman, we want to make this as nearly unanimous as we can, and it seems to be going that way. The far extremes on either side have indicated a favorable trend toward this; therefore, I will not say anything further except whenever an opportunity like this comes up no one raised in democratic America should have any doubt as to how to vote.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LUECKE].

Mr. LUECKE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is a most vicious piece of legislation. It is not a blow at communism, but, rather, it is an act to curb democracy. It has the opposite effect. The danger in that sort of legislation is that, like everything else, it will grow, one way or the other, and in the end we will have amendments attached to it prohibiting free speech and free assemblage and free press.

If the proponents of this legislation are sincere in their efforts to curb communism, why do they not wipe out the breeding grounds? Communism or any other "ism" springs from discontent and injustices. The way to wipe out communism is to wipe out the slums of our Nation, be they in the city or in the rural districts. The fact that a great many of our people are unemployed and not able to provide themselves with the means of keeping body and soul together is a potential breeding ground for subversive thought and action. When a person has reached the end and there is no hope in the present social order it is only natural that he should seek other means to preserve himself. And, like a man who is drowning, he will grab at anything to save himself.

If the proponents of this type of legislation are sincere in their efforts to save democracy—and I suppose they are—why do they not study the causes of antisocial thought? Let them go into the slums. Let them go into the sweatshops, where the entire family must work from daylight to dark to earn enough to exist. Let them go into mills where the workers do not earn more than five or six dollars a week. Let them go into the rural districts, where the farmer is hard-pressed to keep his farm from being sold out from under him. Let them go down to the South and visit with the sharecropper who does not know what it is to hold a dollar in his hand. Let them go into the company-owned towns and hear the tales of the loyal, hard-working folk who work year after year and never are out of debt. There is where communism is bred and nurtured.

When the farmers of the West went into a court and dragged a judge off his bench, were they prompted by the teaching of communism? Of course not. And yet that was revolution, that was rebellion. I do not remember what State that happened in, but a thousand "red riders" would not have prevented that regretful incident. And since those farmers have been taken care of and their situation relieved such incidents are not happening any more.

The worker and the farmer do not ask for much. But they do ask for a living. Give the average man a fair wage and a job which he knows that he can depend on and there will never be any need for any anxiety as to the stability of our democracy. And the same applies to the farmer. They are easily satisfied, all too easily, perhaps.

The so-called "red rider" is an insult to the teaching profession. It so happens that I have had many contacts with the teachers in my State, and I can say that they are 100 percent for democracy. To suggest that they or that some of their profession stand ready to overthrow our Government is libel to that splendid body of citizenry. In all my dealings with them I do not know of one person that I can say held radical views. Oh, here and there you will find a divergence of thought. But that is only natural.

You cannot regulate schools of thought by legislation. What happens when such steps are taken is to arouse curiosity on the part of the students and teaching body, and then the trouble begins. That is when ideas spread, when they are suppressed. The way to freedom, to democracy, is to be free. You cannot perpetuate democracy in an undemocratic way.

In my district live a small colony of Communists. At least, that is what they are called. They have lived there for many years. And here is the queer thing about it: They are growing smaller in number year after year. And why? Because they are tolerated and forgotten.

Some time ago they came to the authorities and asked for permission to hold a meeting in the open. They were granted the permission. The meeting was held, and about 75 people attended.

Now, what would have happened had they been run out of town? They would have gotten thousands of dollars' worth of advertising. They would have resisted and been thrown into jail, perhaps; and, by the way, that is just what they wanted. When they were permitted to go ahead, they were disappointed. The meeting came to an end and so did their publicity. The day after it was forgotten. But that would not have happened under any other way in handling the situation. Let them get it out of their systems and then they will feel better.

This "red rider" has given the Communists a million dollars' worth of advertising—and all because some overzealous patriot slipped in an amendment which he thought was going to save the Nation.

England is the most secure nation on the face of the earth today. And why? They have their Hyde Park over there, where speech is truly free. It is the safety valve which lets off pent-up steam. And that is the virtue of free speech. It gives everyone a right to be heard; to be recognized. And that being true, it makes him a better citizen. Again, I repeat, the way to perpetuate freedom is to be free. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, De mortuis nil nisi bonum—Of the dead nothing but good. Politically the author of this "red rider" is dead and I say "thank God."

May I say to the new Members of this Congress you probably do not know that the "red rider" was brought in here when there were only a half dozen Members present, and they did not know what was going on? It was passed in that way. That is the way it went through the House and through the Senate. Last year we who were opposed to this tried our level best to repeal it, but by every parliamentary practice known the author prevented it from coming on to the floor of this House for consideration. Some of those who are today for repeal helped him at that time.

There have been two Members on the floor of the House today who have stated they did not want this "red rider" in the first place, but now that it is on the statute books they are for it. I have been a teacher for years. Do you know that the National Education Association has gone on record unanimously against this? I challenge the Member from Massachusetts, and also the Member from Pennsylvania, to go back home and urge this same law upon their teachers.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. When the gentleman challenges a Member he ought to yield.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, let us see where everyone stands on this thing and how they vote. I trust we may have a record vote on this matter so the issue cannot be dodged.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes of my time to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I am sure I shall not take up all the time allotted me because I do not believe it will be necessary. I simply want briefly to call the attention of the Members of the House to the history of this legislation. It was brought before the House in a very irregular manner in that it was not submitted to the proper committee.

Under the rules of the House we have a Committee on the District of Columbia which is charged with administering the legislative affairs of the District. This so-called "red rider" was never submitted to that committee, as far as I can ascertain from the record. It was attached as a rider to a conference report to a District appropriation bill; it was not debated at all, and like many of these items, very few, if any, of the Members considered the serious effect it would have on the school system of the District of Columbia. If this was a matter for legislation, it should have been submitted in bill form and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and through that committee presented to the House for action in an orderly way under the rules of the House governing such legislation.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. GASQUE] has stated here today that he was a member of the District Committee for about 8 years, and that during that time he was stormed with bitter complaints that there were teachers in the District of Columbia teaching and advocating communism. I asked the gentleman if he did anything to correct this condition. Of course, the RECORD will show he replied as follows:

> Mr. Blanton introduced the so-called "red rider." I have said I thought that it was a mistake; but as it has been adopted and is part of the law, I am opposed to striking it out.

In considering this legislation the subcommittee on education of the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I have had the honor of being chairman, not only considered an outright repeal bill, but if you will refer to the hearings of the subcommittee conducted on February 25, March 2, and March 9, 1936, you will find in those hearings that the committee considered also a bill to modify the so-called "red rider" and to change it in a way that has been suggested and, I have no doubt, will be again suggested today by an amendment offered when my bill reaches the amendment stage. In other words, two bills were under consideration during the hearings, both having been introduced by a former Member from the State of New York—one designed to modify the so-called "red rider" as just described and one providing for the outright repeal, the same as the one we are considering today.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SCHULTE. The gentleman is referring to an amendment which may be offered in the committee this afternoon. In the event this amendment is accepted, striking out the word "teaching", is it not true that the teachers will be forced to sign an affidavit stating they have not advocated communism?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do not so understand. I believe there is a provision in the proposed amendment to the effect that there shall be no requirement of a teacher to report that he or she has not violated the law or that he or she has not taught or advocated communism in the schools of the District.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I shall be pleased to yield to my colleague the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The "red rider" having originated in the Senate and not in the House, I should like to inquire whether the bill which passed the Senate last week and which came over to the House today repealing the "red rider" is identical with the provisions of the bill introduced by the gentleman now occupying the floor?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The Senate has passed a bill identical with the bill we are considering today, and it was passed by a unanimous vote of that body.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. Would it be agreeable to those who desire this measure repealed to amend it so that the teachers would not have to make these reports, so we would not be left in the ridiculous position of sanctioning the teaching of all kinds of isms in our schools? That is foolish.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. As I have previously stated, the subcommittee had before it two bills; one provided for the modification of the so-called "red rider" and the other provided for its outright repeal.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SCOTT. Would it not be possible once more, however, for the Comptroller General to override the idea Congress has in mind, even when it expresses itself by such legislation and require such affidavits to be made?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. Would the gentleman from Florida or the gentleman from Massachusetts or any other gentleman in this Chamber object to the lifting of a voice here advocating Farmer-Labor doctrines, perhaps, or Republican doctrines, or Progressive doctrines from the State of Wisconsin, or any of the others?

Mr. GREEN. They are all American.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I will leave that to the gentlemen from Florida and Massachusetts to answer.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. May I suggest to the gentleman that the question raised by the gentleman from Florida might properly be eliminated by administration methods in the school board.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am a new Member here, but, perhaps, there are others like me who are open-minded on this matter. While we believe in repealing anything that is in anyway un-American, however, I am open-minded about the matter of repeal and should like to ask the gentleman this question for information. I read in the public press that the gentleman was in favor, as I understood it, of an amendment to the bill which we have before us today, the amendment in effect not allowing advocacy, but still allowing teaching. This is what I should be in favor of.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. My answer to the gentleman's question is, it is true that I did state to the press that I was considering several amendments in the hope that I might be able to adopt one amendment which would be satisfactory to all sides. However, after consulting with many persons in favor of, and many persons opposed to, the repeal I came to the conclusion that no such amendment, in my opinion, could be offered to properly cover the situation. In giving this matter serious consideration and honestly striving to reach a satisfactory compromise, I continuously found myself back to my original opinion that this legislation is improperly upon the statute books, and, it being admittedly wrong legislation, the only and correct cure is to remove it in its entirety.

I might state here that in considering an amendment, it is altogether possible that any attempt to write into the law the prohibition of the teaching and/or advocacy of communism specifically, might indicate sanctioning of other equally objectionable teachings.

There is a matter of principle involved, which is paramount to all other considerations, and I do not believe that you can compromise principle under any conditions.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman think the best way to clear it up is just to repeal the provision and leave it to the discretion of the school board and trust the school board here like other school boards all over the country?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I think so because the school authorities are in the best position to properly administer the affairs of the schools of the District—and they are unanimously for the outright repeal of this rider. Also, I might say that all three of the District Commissioners are in favor of the outright repeal of this rider.

I further think the repeal is best because there never was any need for the enactment of the so-called "red rider." If we need such a provision in the District of Columbia laws, we need it in the city of Baltimore, we need it in the city of New York, we need it in every other city of this Union. I say that we cannot consistently favor this "red rider" for the District of Columbia, applying to 2,900 teachers, and not favor it for the rest of the country.

It might be well here to point out to the Members that the teachers in the District of Columbia affected by this legislation are required to take the following oath upon entering their duties as teachers:

> I (then fill in the name) do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God.

I can see no sensible reason for requiring the school teachers to go beyond the obligation of this oath any more than it would be logical to require Members of Congress or other Government employees to take some additional specific or special oath. It can be readily seen that under this oath of office anyone advocating communism or any other "isms" which would tend to give thought to or encourage the overthrowing of our Government would be certainly violating the Constitution and thereby violating this oath of office. Such a violation would call for the person or persons guilty to be dealt with as severely under this oath as under any special legislation such as the so-called "red rider." Therefore, is not the so-called "red rider" entirely unnecessary and superfluous, and does it not discriminate unfairly against a specific group of American citizens, namely, the school teachers of the District of Columbia? In a few words, there is no need or excuse for such legislation as the so-called "red rider", and it should be absolutely eliminated.

At no time during the 2 years or more discussion of this matter, and nowhere in all the 283 pages of printed testimony before the committee, has anyone made a single allegation, or even insinuated, that anyone connected with the school-teaching system of the District of Columbia could be even suspected of being a Communist or of having communistic tendencies. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that it is little short of silly for the Members of Congress to be on record, under these known conditions, as approving and passing such unfair and iniquitous legislation, aimed solely at such a fine body of citizens as make up the teachers and the authorities associated with the schools of the District of Columbia.

I am somewhat amazed at the attitude of some of my fellow Members on the floor here today that they agree that this legislation should never have been enacted, but due to the fact that it is on the books, even though it is unfair and unnecessary, they are hesitant about voting for its repeal, fearing they may be misunderstood as favoring communism. I cannot see the logic of this contention. I believe it is the conscientious duty of every Member of this House, if he believes the so-called "red rider" is wrong, to vote for its repeal—thereby correcting an admittedly wrongful condition.

While this legislation, technically speaking, is local in character, yet the principle could and might affect each district represented by the membership of this House.

We have heard discussed in this Chamber over and over again matters of personal liberty, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and academic freedom. I should like to call the attention of the Members of this House to the following excerpts from sayings of some of our forefathers—which seem to me to be particularly pertinent to my appeal for elimination of the legislation in question:

"We are bound to maintain public liberty * * * If we fail in this, our disaster will be signal and will furnish an argument stronger than has yet been found, in support of those opinions which maintain that government can rest safely on nothing but power and coercion."—Daniel Webster on the matter of liberty.

"They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety."—Benjamin Franklin.

"Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it."—Thomas Jefferson.

"It is error alone which needs support of government. Truth can stand by itself."—Thomas Jefferson.

"He that would make his own liberty secure, must guard even his enemy from oppression, for if he violates this duty he establishes a precedent which will reach himself."—Thomas Paine.

"If rulers succeed in silencing every voice but that which approves them; if nothing reaches the people but what will lend support to men in power—farewell to liberty. The form of a free government may remain, but the life, the soul, the substance is fled."—William Ellery Channing.

"Let us always remember that he does not really believe his own opinions who dares not give free scope to his opponent. Persecution is really want of faith in our creed."—Wendell Phillips.

"If there is any principle of the Constitution that more imperatively calls for attachment than any other, it is the principle of free thought—not free thought for those who agree with us but freedom for the thought that we hate." Mr. Justice Holmes, in his dissenting opinion in the Rosika Schwimmer case. This was the case of a well-known pacifist seeking citizenship in the United States.

The worst thing you can do with a notion with which you do not agree is to try to suppress it by force—that only makes it dangerous. If a doctrine is sound, it ought to be heard freely so that it can be spread and approved. If it is unsound, it ought to be heard so that it can be refuted and discredited.

I urge that my remarks, which have been prompted by a sincere, thorough, and extensive study of the legislation in question, be carefully considered by each and every one of my colleagues—that each and everyone read the committee's report made on my bill, H. R. 148, and also the hearings before the Subcommittee on Education, which I have already referred to, and, finally, that this so-called "red rider" be repealed by the passage of my bill.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso appearing in the fourteenth paragraph, under the subheading "Miscellaneous", under the heading "Public Schools", in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, approved June 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 356), and reading as follows: "Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism", is hereby repealed.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mrs. NORTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, this little byplay over my request for additional time is fairly typical of the whole attitude toward this issue. It is all much ado about nothing, and has been such for 2 years to my knowledge.

A lot has been said on both sides today and before. We ought to end it finally and forever right now. The only way to end it is to wipe it off the statute books. [Applause.]

We should wipe it off—take a sponge and wipe out this blot on the Federal statute books.

I am a graduate of the public schools, of which I am very proud. I think they are the greatest single institution in the United States of America. [Applause.]

I taught in the public schools, but I never thought that I would live to see the day when this rider could be put on the Federal statute books. I am satisfied that it could never be put on any State statute book.

Now, much has been said about advocating communism. What does "advocating" mean? Who is going to say when you do "advocate" and when you do not "advocate" when you talk about a subject? Who is going to draw the line between when you talk on a favorite subject and when you "jam" it?

There are a lot of people in this country who have very little to do, and they think up making trouble for other people. [Laughter.] They devise means of interfering with the liberty of speech, with the liberty of action of the people of America. They are irresponsible to everybody. For instance, they want everybody jailed for at least 5 years who do not raise their hats when the American flag goes by down the avenue. They would require that every Member of Congress, in order to qualify, first recite the first two stanzas of The Star-Spangled Banner.

Such bills have been actually proposed by people who have very little to do and have no real conception of what our Government stands for.

They claim to be "patriots." They shout "Down with communism", whatever that may mean. Why, I am as much against what I think "communism" is as any of these "patriots."

The Communists have fought me in my district. I hate every principle they stand for, but I would not muzzle them so they could not peacefully announce their principles. And until they actually commit an overt act to "overthrow the Government", whatever that means, I would not raise one hand to still them. I would let them go on as they are allowed to do in Hyde Park. [Applause.] I would let them go on as they do in our Union Square in New York City, when some 10,000 get together and let the steam off their chests, and then one Irish cop disperses them. [Applause and laughter.]

If there ever was an example of "patriotism by compulsion", this little "red rider" is. You are not going to make patriots by putting them in front of a firing squad or threatening to burn them at the stake.

Another great habit of those people having nothing to do is to advocate a provision that if a man does not become an American citizen within a certain time after he is in this country he should be deported. Everybody with sense knows what would happen if a Congress lost its senses long enough to pass such a law. Rather than be deported, the alien would hold up his right hand, place it on the Bible, swear in English and his native tongue that he would be loyal to this country—not to become an American citizen but not to be deported. What an American citizen!

Mr. Chairman, we have more serious things to do in this Congress than to be debating all these ideas of these groups of people throughout the country, whether you call them patriotic societies or other organizations, who have so little to do that they conjure up these proposals—how to make better American citizens, how to teach our children, or what not to teach them, and so forth.

Well, the children of this country have been taught pretty well in the public schools for 150 years, and no man or woman here can conceive of a teacher, man or woman, standing up in a public school and "advocating" communism as I interpret the word advocating, as, for instance, saying, "Now, Johnny, you should become a Communist; you should not be an American. This form of government of yours is all wrong. You should get your papa to give you a nice bomb and go down and blow up the Capitol and the White House. Then you would be a Communist." Short of that I do not know what advocating communism is. Of course a number of these organizations that are changing the names of mountains, changing the calendar, and advocating the official recognition by Congress of The Star-Spangled Banner are organizations having paid secretaries and other paid personnel in their employ. Whether some are rackets, I do not know.

Why, I was such an un-American person some years ago that I fought one of the amendments that was in the Constitution of the United States. I did not agree with it. I was once arraigned at the bar of this House to be impeached because I said I would violate the eighteenth amendment. [Laughter and applause.] Only that we had a Speaker in the chair with a great deal of common sense, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Longworth, something might have happened to me.

Let us be serious. This "red rider" was a great mistake. It was a great mistake to put it on the books in the first place. No part of it should have been put on; no part of it should be left on. This talk about stultifying ourselves or the psychology of a repeal is all nonsense. Does anyone think our people back home would interpret our actions here today, if we vote to take the rider off the statute books, as endorsing communism? What man here thinks that his people will believe for 1 minute that he is in favor of communism?

Mr. Chairman, this is a great country if we would only let it alone. [Laughter and applause.] Every night when I kneel down alongside my bed I utter that prayer. When this "red rider" was stuck into an appropriation bill, somebody did not let the country alone. Let us wipe the slate clean today; let us get rid of compulsory patriotism. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: On page 1, line 11, after the word "communism", strike out "is hereby repealed" and insert in lieu thereof "is hereby amended to read as follows: 'Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person advocating communism or other un-American doctrine, or treating any such doctrine with favor or support, but no official or teacher shall be required to make any special declaration of nonviolation hereof as a condition for payment of salary.'"

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MAVERICK. I shall leave that to the Chairman.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the author of the amendment tell us what is an un-American doctrine.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas reserve the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. MAVERICK. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the test of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is whether it would have been germane to the so-called "red rider" amendment. If it would have been germane to that amendment, it is germane to this bill. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts simply deletes from the so-called "red rider" the inhibition against teaching but retains the advocacy of such doctrine, and the Chair thinks it would have been germane to the original amendment, and, therefore, is germane to the pending bill. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment, as I stated frankly when I spoke before, is to eliminate the necessity of teachers signing any paper as a condition precedent to obtaining their salary as exists now, and to remove any doubt at all as to what the meaning of "teaching" might be. Some future corporation counsel might draw a distinction between the words "teach" and "advocate" in a noncriminal statute, and those words in a criminal statute, where they both mean the same. This amendment will clarify the whole situation.

Mr. BARRY. Is it not a fact that if this "red rider" had never been advocated, if a teacher had advocated communism and charges of advocating communism were preferred against her, which were later on found to be true, could she not have been removed?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not prepared to answer that.

Mr. BARRY. If that is true, why is there any necessity for the "red rider"?

Mr. McCORMACK. The "red rider" went through by unanimous consent. Most of the Members who have spoken had the opportunity to object. The word "advocate" is entirely different from the word "teach." To advocate, in my opinion, constitutes a violation of the great principle of economic freedom. I think we all agree as to the objective desired. We all agree that we want to permit the facts to be taught—the truth. I know I do. I do not want to have a veil of blindness thrown around our children. We are all in agreement with reference to that. I have previously stated my understanding of what the principle of academic freedom stands for and I will not now repeat. This amendment accomplishes the entire purpose desired. If we adopt this amendment everyone has accomplished what they have in mind. A teacher can teach without fear, and the teacher will not have to sign an affidavit before she can obtain her salary.

I listened to the gentleman who preceded me. The satire was very nice. But these patriotic societies play an important part in our life. Our churches play an important part in our life. I do not like to see any kind of a church or any kind of a religion, directly or indirectly, criticized and condemned.

I do not want to see any patriotic society directly or indirectly condemned. My good friend from New York comes from an organization city, but there are many Members of this House who do not come from organization cities. It is easy to talk one way on some subjects when one comes from an organization city, but it is sometimes different when one does not come from an organization city. We are also warranted in examining the pending bill from a practical angle. This amendment which I have offered accomplishes the purpose which everyone apparently has in mind, and at the same time does not give communism a legislative blessing. It remedies the present situation with reference to the teacher. In no way is it a violation of the great principle of academic freedom. It prohibits the advocacy of communism, and I would rather go before the people of my district any day saying that I voted for an amendment which would prohibit the advocacy of communism in our schools than to say I voted for the repeal of a bill which opens up the whole situation and could permit of the advocacy of communism in our schools. The committee went too far in reporting outright repeal. My amendment constitutes a proper solution of this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that the placing of this amendment on this question of "advocating" is an insult to the school teachers of the country by implication. You know, we appropriate millions and millions of dollars throughout the various schools of the country by the matching system. If you were to carry this rider by prohibiting "advocating", we must be fair in all appropriation bills in the future which appropriate money to the various schools of the country, and we must put in the same rider and say to the teachers of the country in every State of the Union, "You are prohibited from advocating communism", thereby implying that they are not true American citizens. I say it is an insult to the teachers of the country to pass this amendment. In the long run you will have to put the amendment on all future school appropriations in the various States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

"RED RIDER" ONLY ONE OF KIND IN WORLD

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I think it is time for us to cool off and talk about this in a sensible way. Let us agree that we live in a democracy, where one can express himself either as a conservative or as a radical or as a liberal.

Let us discuss the schools of the District of Columbia. I have my daughter in those schools, and I would not let her go to a school that I did not think was a good school. I have investigated the schools and they are all right. Concerning the "red rider", I had the Congressional Library and the National Educational Association and the Association of University Professors to investigate; they found that in the history of the entire world no such law as in the District of Columbia has ever been enacted. This is the most barbaric law that was ever instituted in the mind of man.

CONGRESSMEN HONORABLE—TEACHERS, TOO

Let us take ourselves. We are Congressmen, and we take an oath of allegiance to support the Constitution. A school teacher takes the oath of allegiance just exactly as we do. We are honorable men. But the school teachers are honorable men and women. Yet we as Congressmen set ourselves above them and say, "You have to take more oaths than we do." "You must take an oath every 2 weeks or every month." "We are patriotic, and we are going to watch you because your patriotism is doubtful." In other words, we take one oath of allegiance for 2 years and they have to take somewhere between 24 and 50 of them for their 2 years. There is no reason for that.

KING GEORGE INSTEAD OF OUR GEORGE, A HESSIAN GENERAL INSTEAD OF LAFAYETTE

Now let us look at the history of the United States. We find oaths do not alter the course of history at all. If we had lost the Revolution you would have a picture up there of King George III instead of Washington, and we would have a Hessian general over there instead of Lafayette. If we go to the Civil War we will see there were whole bodies of men, fathers and grandfathers of most of us who are southern Democrats, who fought against the United States Government for 4½ years. I am not ashamed of it at all. I am proud of it. [Applause.]

DEMOCRACY CANNOT BE SAVED BY USING FASCIST AND COMMUNIST METHODS

Mr. Chairman, if you can prohibit the teaching of communism you can prohibit the teaching of Catholicism. Then you can prohibit the teaching of anything, you can prohibit knowledge. Fascism and communism puts knowledge in a strait jacket. If you restrict knowledge of one kind you can restrict knowledge of another kind. [Applause.] We are a democracy. When we adopt a principle like this we are adopting the principles of communism and fascism. We should not adopt the principles of communism and fascism to show that we are a democracy. Democracy means freedom of speech, free religion, free education, and academic liberty. Let us vote to repeal this law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the McCormack amendment is very good middle ground for those of us who understand this proposition one way and also those who look upon it the other way.

I think our committee members are very sincere in their conviction that this should be wiped off the books, but I am thinking of our constituents back home. My constituents—have no doubt about it—are against communism, fascism, and nazi-ism in the main and so am I. We have a few Communists in all districts, it is true; but I do not grant to them the right to take American taxpayers' money and use it to pay school teachers in the Capital of the United States to advocate communism.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I cannot. I could not get any time from either side except half a minute from the Republicans, and I have only 5 minutes. I am sorry. I appreciate the time offered by my colleague [Mr. SHORT].

I do not believe we have the right to take, and as an American citizen I do not subscribe to the principle of using, the taxpayers' money to pay teachers in the District of Columbia to teach the overthrow of our Government—and that is in effect the result of the advocacy of communism.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts prevents the advocacy of communism by the public-school teachers of the District. Do you want them to advocate communism in the public schools of the District? Remember, you and I are, in a way, the trustees of the District schools. If you do, then vote down the McCormack amendment. If you want your teachers in your district to realize that Congress is for Americanism rather than the other "isms", then give them this protection and prevent their advocating the teaching of communism. If they want to advocate communism, they should resign forthwith.

Is the communistic form of government friendly to the American republican form of government? According to the pamphlet read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS], I do not believe it is. I believe if you pass the bill without the McCormack amendment there will be the greatest rejoicing tonight in Moscow that they have had in many, many years.

We can relieve our official life of this embarrassment by accepting the McCormack amendment.

If you reject the McCormack amendment, someone may come in and advocate the teaching of nazi-ism to run the good American Jews out of this country. I am opposed to it. The American Jew is an American the same as I am, the same as you are. How about fascism?

They may undertake to teach it in the schools if you encourage them to advocate communism. Take the middle ground by voting for the McCormack amendment. Let them teach if they desire, but when they advocate, take them off the pay roll. I oppose bitterly the teaching of communism in our schools. I believe that is the kind of vote I can cast and still face the American citizens in my district.

Yes, churches of all denominations, fraternal orders—those to which I belong and those to which I may not be eligible—not a single one of either group have requested me to advocate the teaching of communism in the District schools. To the contrary, they are lined up to a man in favor of the McCormack amendment and against communism and the overthrow of our democratic form of government. They are on guard as good Americans, and so am I.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. With the indulgence of the Committee, the Chair will divide the time between the Members who have indicated a desire to be heard on amendments.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think I can ascribe to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] a sincere desire to accomplish the thing he had in mind; and I think that a lot of the Members of the House are in favor of the gentleman's amendment as a way of getting around the implication at home that they may be fostering communism and voting to allow it in the schools. I call attention, however, to certain further provisions of the amendment. It reads in part:

That the person advocating communism or other un-American doctrines or treating any such doctrine with favor or support.

I think the gentleman has a whole lot more in the amendment than he intended putting in.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for a statement, I may say that another amendment will be offered to correct that.

Mr. SCOTT. Time after time on the floor of this House a Member proposes an amendment and from the opposite side comes the criticism, "That is an un-American doctrine." Are you going to prevent the teachers from saying anything about that?

Or treating any such doctrine with favor or support.

Who is going to determine the doctrine? Who is going to interpret their good faith?

I think this confusion in the attempt to compromise the situation indicates its dangers. What we want to do is to take the teachers from under this gratuitous insult that they have been indoctrinating communism in the schools by their teaching or advocating methods, if such exists, and that the thing we want to do is to take this onus away from them.

So I ask the Members of the House in all fairness to stop the whole thing once and for all. Let us not have another situation come up here with attempts to do away with the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I repeat what I said. I know that he is absolutely in good faith, and I ascribe no ulterior motive to him.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. If it is an insult to the teachers of the District to pass a law prohibiting the teaching of communism, then it is an insult to every American to pass a law prohibiting crime.

Mr. SCOTT. No; because the teachers have not been indoctrinating crimes. There is no evidence or proof of the fact that the American public-school teacher has been indoctrinating or teaching crime. If I were a teacher, I would consider it a gratuitous insult to myself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and against the repeal of the "red rider." I base that upon the supposition that we are legislating here concerning the effect of certain teachings upon very immature minds.

I hope you will pardon a reference to a personal experience. When I was 16 years old I thought I would get smart and elevate myself above the rank and file of my fellow scholars; so I read Herbert Spencer's Synthetic Philosophy and Herbert Spencer's First Principles. I read with a great deal of interest Thomas Paine's Age of Reason as well as a lot of Robert Ingersoll. I should have been spanked, because for years afterward I viewed my Christian religion in the light of the philosophy of Herbert Spencer, Thomas Paine, and Robert Ingersoll. It was not until I reached maturity that I completely overcame those unfortunate influences.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote against this bill to repeal the "red rider", because I want to save the youth of our Nation, at least those in the District of Columbia, from the experience I have had in this respect. Their immature minds are too easily impressed by the novel and unusual; they do not have the mental competence or equilibrium to enable them to treat communism as purely an academic question.

There was a great man, Clemenceau, one of the leading statesmen of our generation who, being chided in his later life because he had been a radical in his youth and in his older life a conservative, made this statement:

My friend, any man who at 20 is not a Socialist has no heart. Any man who at 40 is still a Socialist has no head.

Mr. Chairman, the teachers of the District, if they had cared to, could have entered into the spirit of this legislative enactment, and would have been saved the embarrassment and humiliation which has been occasioned because of the publicity given to this matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BELL to the amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: After the word "communism", strike out "or other un-American doctrine."

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I might say the amendment just offered by the gentleman is one I heartily concur in, and I intend to vote for it because it strikes out the words in my amendment which will permit of ambiguity and confine my amendment to the thing we are trying to get at, communism, which is the subject matter of the "red rider." Therefore, I accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, may I say that the words "or other un-American doctrine" would lead to controversy; and it is for the purpose of clarifying the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts that I offer this amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. If either one of these amendments should become part of the bill, would it then be known as the "pink rider"?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KVALE and Mr. MAVERICK) there were—ayes 135, noes 65.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McCORMACK) there were—ayes 130, noes 90.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mrs. NORTON and Mr. McCORMACK.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 130, noes 92.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODRUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 148) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 11, after the word "communism", strike out "is hereby repealed" and insert in lieu thereof "is hereby amended to read as follows: 'Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person advocating communism or other un-American doctrine, or treating any such doctrine with favor or support, but no official or teacher shall be required to make any special declaration of nonviolation hereof as a condition for payment of salary.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 116, not voting 83, as follows:

Mr. LANZETTA and Mr. THOMASON of Texas changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The question of ordering the yeas and nays was taken; and 46 Members having risen, not a sufficient number, the yeas and nays were refused.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. McCORMACK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 3587 entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 5 to the foregoing bill, and agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 9 with an amendment.

CLOSED BANKS IN LIQUIDATION

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, on February 3, in the debate on a bill which was pending at that time, I made certain statements concerning the amount of dividends paid to depositors in closed banks in liquidation. Since then I have received from the Comptroller of the Currency valuable information concerning that, and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter received from the Comptroller of the Currency and attached to it the schedule giving the detailed information concerning the liquidation of closed banks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, February 6, 1937.

Hon. JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WOLCOTT: My attention has been called to your recommendations in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 3, page 988, in which you say: "In many instances as little as 2 percent in dividends have been paid to the depositors in these banks after 4 years of liquidation. We approach the same situation in respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation."

Knowing how careful you are with reference to facts, I am sure you would be pleased to have an accurate record with reference to percentages paid depositors in closed banks, and I am enclosing herewith an especially compiled report for your information, and perhaps you would like to insert it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

You will notice that in 394 finally closed receiverships the depositors were paid 100 cents on the dollar and over. The instances in which more than 100 cents were paid included interest; and in addition 57 of the active receiverships have paid depositors 100 cents on the dollar and over, making a total of 451. In 580 instances the depositors have received 75 to 99.9 percent, and in 825 cases the depositors have received 50 to 74.9 percent, and in 591 cases 25 to 49.9 percent, and in 508 less than 25 percent.

You will notice that out of a total of 2,955 receivership trusts 80 percent paid more than 25 percent.

You will be interested also in knowing that 474 insolvent national banks have been liquidated and finally closed from March 16, 1933 (banking holiday) to October 31, 1936, date of the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency. In these banks there has been paid $150,998,483, or 76.1 percent of the total liabilities, and the expenses of these liquidations has been 7.5 percent. In other words, out of every dollar collected by our receivers 92.5 percent has been returned to the depositors.

I am sending you under separate cover text of the Seventy-fourth Annual Report of the Comptroller of the Currency, and figures for the last paragraph of this letter will be found on page 5.

Cordially yours,

J. F. T. O'CONNOR,
Comptroller.

JUVENILE COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia", and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire how much longer we are going to run this afternoon?

Mrs. NORTON. As far as I know there is no controversy on this bill, and we can dispose of it in a very few moments.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. It is expected that possibly the deficiency appropriation bill may come here any minute from the Senate. It is a very important piece of legislation to provide funds for the workers. This bill will take a little time, and by the time it is completed we hope the deficiency appropriation bill will be here.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why is it necessary to act on this appropriation bill tonight?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The money ran out the 1st of this month, and this is the 8th of this month, and there is no money with which to pay people on relief or those who are working.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How are they being paid now?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. They are not being paid, as I understand it. It is a serious situation, and time is of the essence in the matter. The gentlewoman from New Jersey could use a little time now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think the majority party, the organization, ought to be severely censured for waiting until this late hour. They should have had this bill passed 2 weeks ago.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. This is not the body that should be censured.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What bill is this the lady from New Jersey desires to bring up?

Mrs. NORTON. It is H. R. 4276, a bill to amend an act to create a juvenile court in the District of Columbia. It has been discussed at great length in the committee and comes in with the unanimous report from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'MALLEY. From the size of the copy that the gentlewoman holds in her hand it appears to be a bill of several pages, and there is a rather large report attached to it. It seems to me that any bill which has any effect upon the courts is a controversial issue, and it should not be brought in at this late hour. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. NICHOLS. I wish the gentleman would withhold that. This is a bill simply extending the juvenile court law which is in force in a majority of the States in the United States. Let me advise the gentleman what he is doing if he objects to this. In the District of Columbia today they have probably the most antiquated procedure of juvenile-court procedure in the United States. Before a boy 6 years old could be brought into the court he must be charged as a criminal.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We were held here on roll calls this afternoon on a bill that was small potatoes, so far as I am concerned, and it is now 6 o'clock. If this is so important, why cannot it be brought up 2 weeks from today so that we would have at least an hour in which to discuss it. We are told that we are being held here now because there is another bill that we are supposed to pass tonight. If the gentleman's committee is so sure the bill will pass without discussion or opposition, it may as well go over for 2 weeks, because 2 weeks will not make very much difference.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I understand this bill is almost identical with the law that we have in effect in the State of Wisconsin, and I hope that the gentleman will not object.

(Several Members called for the regular order.)

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. I object if the regular order is demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MICHENER. I object.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia", and for other purposes. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to that.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4276.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 123, nces 73.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-one Members present; a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4276, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the Members are kept here so late tonight. For that they should not blame me. This is supposed to have been District day, and as we all know the District Committee had to give over 3 hours for the consideration of an appropriation bill, so that we had very little of the day left. The District Committee has only 2 days every month and not always that. We have a great many important bills to bring before the House. I do not think that our committee should be blamed for this feeling which has come into the House this afternoon, and as chairman of the committee I protest against any such blame being laid at our door.

This is a bill that has been before the House, I think, back and forth, they tell me, since 1914. It is a fact that the District of Columbia is one of the very few places in the Union that has an unfair and archaic type of juvenile law. We are trying to amend the law in the interest of the youth of the country. I sincerely hope the Members will consider the bill on its merits. I hope you will agree with the committee, which brought in a unanimous report in favor of the bill, that it is very vitally needed in this District. I shall probably have something further to say on the bill later on, but at this time I wish to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], who conducted the hearings on the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing contained in this bill which is complicated. There is nothing contained in the bill which is revolutionary. As a matter of fact, the bill is almost exactly the basic bill for juvenile courts now in force in a majority of the States of the United States.

I want to give you a brief outline of what the juvenile court law now is in the District of Columbia. In the first place, the jurisdiction of the court is limited to minors under 16 years of age. Above that age it goes beyond the jurisdiction of the juvenile court. Before a boy or girl even of the tender years 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, or 10, or any age below 16, can be brought into juvenile court, under our existing law they must be charged with crime. They must be charged on complaint, just the same as any criminal would be, and before they can be heard in the juvenile court they must enter their plea of guilty or not guilty. A charge is laid against them. This bill simply changes the procedure of the juvenile court from a criminal procedure to one in chancery. It also enlarges the jurisdiction of the court to children up to 18 years of age. We bring them in not on information and complaint, charged with crime, but they are brought into the jurisdiction of the court for the purpose of doing that thing for them which is best to be done to correct the thing that is making the child delinquent. Under our present system, if there is a delinquent child over 16 years of age, the juvenile court must hold them for action of a grand jury, and before they can come in, either for the protection of the court or for the redress of the court, they must be charged by indictment from a grand jury. This bill puts them under chancery proceeding if they are minors up to 18 years of age.

This bill makes the hearings at which these children are tried, private hearings. That does not mean that everyone is excluded from the court with the exception of the child, but it does mean that the morbid curiosity seekers, the hangers-on of the usual type that you will find around courtrooms seeking a thrill are barred while this child of tender years is being talked to by the court or while the child's parents are presenting their case, or the child's case, to the court. Of course, counsel for the child is permitted, and all of the child's immediate family or relatives or those interested in or charged with the care of the child are permitted there also.

The right to a trial by jury by a juvenile court under this bill is prohibited unless a jury is demanded by either a child or its parents or the court itself. In that respect, this bill differs from the basic juvenile court bills, because they provide that a child shall not have a jury at any time, because they feel they should rob this court hearing of every aspect of a criminal trial. However, because this is a Federal jurisdiction and because the framers of the bill were afraid that unless a jury trial were provided for upon demand, the bill might be held unconstitutional, the right to a trial by jury upon demand is provided for.

I want to read to the members of the Committee the States of the Union where they have laws today almost like the law proposed here:

Arizona, California, Colorado, Delaware, Iowa, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, Alabama, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Tennessee.

I venture the assertion there is not a single State in the United States today that has a law even coming close to the law that we now have on the books of the District of Columbia, whereby we bring children into our juvenile court only after being charged with crime.

If there are any questions which members of the committee would like to ask about this bill, I should be happy to reply to them now, if possible.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Gladly.

Mr. SEGER. The States mentioned in the list the gentleman named differ as to the age limits?

Mr. NICHOLS. They differ as to age limits. In the last States named they differ as to the age limit for the jurisdiction of the court. Some of them run as high as 21 years and some of them stop at 16 years. This bill provides 18 years.

If there are no further questions, Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY].

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I have taken the liberty to make a short statement relative to the proposed change in the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia.

While director of the department of public welfare of the State of Ohio, I took upon myself the sad task of sitting for a few hours before the electrocution with the men who had been condemned to death. I never saw an electrocution, but I wanted to learn something from these men which would help me to help youngsters from getting on to a path of crime which would lead to a sad end similar to that of these prisoners.

I did not do this for maudlin curiosity, but I did it to get the thoughts of a man who had but a short time to live and who had wasted many of his years in crime. I bring this to the attention of the House because so many of these prisoners intimated that a faulty juvenile-court system had placed upon them unusually heavy penalties for rather minor crimes in their youth. As boys they developed a resentful attitude. They realized that incarceration at this early age marked them as criminals. They could no longer associate with their companions. They could really no longer go back to school but had to resort to a life of crime, which finally led to this sad end.

My native State of Ohio has greatly improved her juvenile court program. The success of Ohio's program makes me anxious to have the seat of our National Government also have a fine juvenile program and, in fact, set an example for the rest of the country and the world to follow.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. NORTON. How much time does the gentleman from Michigan want?

Mr. MICHENER. One hour.

Mrs. NORTON. Will not the gentleman take 15 minutes?

Mr. MICHENER. No; I will ask for my own time in opposition.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, for the last 10 years I have been engaged in conducting a school and home for orphan boys in the State of California. This institution is conducted for the purpose of making a place where kids who do not have any other place to live can come and make their home, gain their education and certain experience in the way of learning to farm, to print, and in learning certain trades, as well as receiving training in citizenship. We all live there as a little community; and the 60 boys who live there, up until just the time I left to come down here and take my place in this body, have been my boys, and I have experienced with them every kind of activity of life.

Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in order to say that out of my own experience I can testify that there is only one proper way in which to deal with young persons if you really want to give them a decent start in life. This way is to deal with them on the assumption that they are at heart good and that they basically desire to be the kind of citizens that our country wants them to be.

Under those circumstances I have had experience with people who disagreed with me, and who have said, "Is it not frequently necessary to severely punish a boy?" I have replied, and proved it by my own experience, that the best thing you can do is to give him a feeling that there is somebody in the world who really understands and believes in him, somebody in the world who can be depended upon to understand why he does what he does and impute to him the best of motives. We all know, if we know anything, the difference between ordinary court procedure and juvenile-court procedure from this point of view. We know of some of the splendid results that have been gained from juvenile-court procedure. We know it is based upon the attempt to get the child offender or the youthful offender to have confidence in the judge before whom he is brought. It is based upon the effort of that judge to gain the confidence of the boy or girl and to guide him or her into a better way without exposing them to the experience of being treated as a criminal and possibly thrown into associations which will fix irrevocably in them a feeling that somehow or other society is against them or somehow or other this punishment that has been meted out to them has wiped out the past.

The thing we need is the very kind of thing, it seems to me, which this bill provides; and out of my own experience and in the name of American boyhood I appeal to you to vote in favor of this measure. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I am going to discuss at this time American Aviation Problems and Progress, similar to an address I delivered over the radio on February 4, 1937.

Members of Congress know that they can save time through air travel; that they can come from their homes to Washington in a fraction of the time required by other means; that when there are brief recesses during the sessions of Congress they can make flying trips to their districts which would be impossible without the airplane. They know also from experience that air transportation enables them to do necessary traveling with the minimum absence from their desks.

By way of introduction, I want to emphasize briefly the beneficial effect of air-transport timesaving to the Nation as a whole.

Go back in history to the early days of the Nation. Members of the Congress had to leave home weeks before the beginning of a session in order to be on hand for the first stroke of the gavel, and then might be delayed by bad weather and impassable roads so that they would be late. The committee entrusted with the mission of informing the President of his election had a practical purpose. Means of communication and transportation were slow and uncertain, and it was necessary to send a delegation with official notification.

As the years went on transportation and communication facilities improved. Good roads were built, railroads were established, mail delivery was bettered, telegraph and telephone service came into being. Each step forward in transportation and communication saved time, did away with inconvenience, and made possible fresh progress in virtually all fields of human endeavor.

The latest step forward in transportation and communication has come as a result of the development of the airplane. Air transportation stands ready to save time for everyone who travels, uses the mails, or has occasion to send packages which may go appropriately by air express. The cost is somewhat more than for other transportation mediums, of course, but there are many who find it advantageous to pay this extra cost and reap the benefits of the timesaving.

How many? On the scheduled air lines, 1,150,000 passengers last year. Air mail came to over 17,000,000 pounds in 1936; and air express totaled about 8,000,000 pounds. In addition to this volume of traffic on the scheduled air lines there was a great deal of activity by miscellaneous commercial and private flyers. These aircraft operators carried over a million passengers and made countless special flights with films, photographs, newspapers, and a variety of articles that had to be moved from one place to another in a hurry.

All of this air transportation brought about advantages in the use of time, and the advantages were not only for those who actually used air transportation. The business man, saving his time by using air travel, was able to render a better service to his customers; the Congressman who flew when he traveled had additional time to devote to his duties as a lawmaker. I have been a user of such service since American Airlines operates through my city and State. The timesaving of air travel releases human energy for other important activities just as surely as the invention of an important machine releases manpower for other tasks.

There is no danger that we will overemphasize the importance of aviation, and there is every danger that we will underemphasize. No prophet is needed to foresee that many new and higher levels of achievement will be reached. We need only reflect upon what has happened recently and what is going on at this very minute.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. May I ask the gentleman his opinion of the feasibility and desirability of trans-Atlantic air-mail service?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman for his interruption, and I will discuss that at this point.

For more than a year we have had scheduled service with air mail across the Pacific to Manila, and since October the operation has included passenger service. Plans are well advanced for a transoceanic service between the United States and Europe. Germany already has successfully operated over that ocean stretch with lighter-than-air craft, but the United States will be among the leaders in establishment of scheduled airplane service.

Postmaster General James A. Farley has announced extension of trans-Pacific air-mail service beyond Manila to the China mainland, the first flight from San Francisco being tentatively set for March 24. Inauguration of air-mail service direct from North America to China, together with announced schedule of the Hindenburg from Europe to this country will close the last gap which prevented circumnavigation of the world by air mail. Congress can well afford to appropriate additional funds for air-mail development. The money will be spent wisely.

On the domestic air lines, speed has been increased year after year; comfort and safety have kept pace. The next level for long distance will be 25,000 feet above sea level, a step which automatically will increase speed through lessened air resistance and put the aircraft above most of the weather disturbances which interfere with flight nearer the ground.

Present airline craft are capable of flying 3 miles a minute or more and they are fitted with every comfort and luxury known to transportation that fits into the scale. Naturally, an air liner cannot carry a swimming pool, like an ocean liner—not yet anyway—but the berths in a sleeper plane are as comfortable as any Pullman berth, the club-type airplanes for day service rank with any club railroad car ever built. To my mind, air transportation is not only the quickest, but also the most convenient and comfortable method of traveling.

I want to go on record as saying it is a safe method of travel. You doubtless have in mind the tragic series of accidents which beset the air lines in December and early January. To those persons most keenly interested in aviation and its future, the news of each accident was a personal tragedy.

But when we look at the record dispassionately, and bearing in mind that no transportation medium is free from accidents, we find much encouragement. In 1936, which was far from outstanding, the passenger-miles flown per passenger fatality were approximately 10,000,000, as computed by the Bureau of Air Commerce. In other words, you, as an airline passenger, have a reasonable expectancy of being able to fly at least 10,000,000 miles before your number would be called.

The safety level, as gaged by this index, is twice as high as it was in 1930, 1931, and 1932, and about equal to 1934. The years 1933 and 1935 were more than twice as good as 1936. I might mention also that on British Empire routes the passenger-miles flown per passenger fatality for a number of years have been two to three million. The lowest figure ever reported for American air lines was better than 4,000,000—the highest nearly 25,000,000.

This is not to say that we can rest on our laurels. On the contrary, the air lines and the Bureau of Air Commerce are making every effort to improve safety. The air lines and others held a meeting with the Bureau here February 4, 5, and 6 to consider safety from every angle and develop means of increasing it. The Bureau of Air Commerce in the past few years has, to the limits of its funds, pursued a program of modernizing and improving the air navigation aids on the Federal Airways System, and has more extensive plans for the future.

Under the work-relief program of this administration, approximately $75,000,000 has been spent in substantial achievement in the construction of airports throughout the Nation. Of the nearly 1,500 undertaken, more than 300 have been completed, a large number of these being important air-mail terminals, of which there are 196.

It is to be regretted that the Nation's Capital is not supplied with adequate airport facilities. Representatives and Senators who are members of the airport commission will render outstanding service by presenting to Congress a definite program which I trust will bring to Washington in the near future a truly great commercial airport.

A word about private flying. The rapidly mounting interest in flying is indicated by the increase in student licenses issued from 12,917 on January 1, 1935, to 25,314 on January 1, 1936, and 32,080 on January 1 of this year. These students cannot all become professional pilots, because there are not opportunities for them, and many of them have no idea of flying professionally.

This interest will be further stimulated by improvements in private-owner types which will make it simpler and more convenient for the average person to fly. The industry is improving these airplanes, and the Bureau of Air Commerce has a program with that objective in view.

Aviation is moving ahead so rapidly that many of the manufacturers are swamped with orders. One major manufacturer last summer actually had a shortage of trained workers; it simply could not hire enough skilled men to meet its needs. A major part of the business of many manufacturers consists of contracts with the Army and Navy. There is a direct link between the civil aeronautics industry and those agencies of the Federal Government concerned with national defense, but it is by no means the only way in which civil aeronautics is important to national defense.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman discuss the importance of our airports from the angle of national defense?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will do that right now.

In time of war the scheduled air transport system would be vitally necessary as a merchant marine of the air. Speedy transportation would be tremendously more important in wartime than in peacetime. The private flyers, men who know how to use the controls of an airplane and how to set a course cross country and fly it, would constitute a reservoir from which the military services could draw men with preliminary training and put them through intensive courses in tactics.

The next war will be fought in the air. And that means that if a hostile force approaches our shores we will not only have to defend our harbors, but also our inland railroad terminals, electric power plants, factories, and warehouses. In fact, it will be at such points that an enemy would strike first with long-range bombers flying either from enemy territory or from aircraft carriers on the high seas.

In the present session of Congress appropriation measures for both the Navy and Army will come before us, and, although I favor a strong Navy and Army, yet I am hopeful that the major portion of our preparedness program in the immediate future will be concerned with increasing our air forces.

The number of fighting planes owned by our Federal Government is absolutely inadequate for defense, and we suffer in comparison with other nations. I believe at the present time we have only about 1,700 fighting planes in comparison with 6,000 for Russia, 3,000 for Italy, 4,000 for France, 4,500 for Great Britain, 2,700 for Germany, and 2,100 for Japan.

The situation is a grave one and, although I am certain we all join in the prayerful hope that the United States shall not become involved in a future war, yet we must realize that the center of our national defense has been shifted from the land and sea into the air. With this fact in mind prompt preparedness at that point should be our concern. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia", and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and move that the House disagree to Senate amendment to the House amendment to Senate amendment no. 9, and ask a further conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, may I make a statement to the House? We have been in conference with certain Members of the Senate and we have about come to an agreement. We believe within 15 or 20 minutes after we go over to the Senate we can come back with a complete report. It is very important that the bill be passed tonight, because there is not money on hand to meet the pay roll of the W. P. A. right now.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Do I understand that some sort of agreement has been reached with Senator LA FOLLETTE and Senator WHEELER with reference to the matter we discussed here today?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely. Does the gentleman want to know what it is?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I would like to know that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They agreed to the House amendment, with the proviso that it shall not take effect until 30 days after the act is approved.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Messrs. BUCHANAN, TAYLOR of Colorado, WOODRUM, TABER, and BACON.

RECESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 15 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when the juvenile court bill was called up a little while ago I objected to a unanimous-consent request, and I want to state why I made that objection.

This is a bill establishing a court in the District of Columbia. It has been before the Congress for 14 years, as stated by the chairman of the committee, and it contains 26 pages. It provides for the creation of a juvenile court in the District of Columbia, and it also provides for the appointment of a judge and numerous officers, assistants, commissioners, and other persons to administer the law. The bill also provides how they shall administer a juvenile court in the District of Columbia. Possibly I shall not be opposed to the bill, but it does seem to me that after the House has been in session from 12 o'clock noon until 6:30 at night the House should not be asked to pass a bill of this importance without reading, without consideration, and without any knowledge whatever about what it contains.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman that we do not intend to pass the bill tonight or do anything more about it. It will be the unfinished business on the next District day.

Mr. MICHENER. If we have accomplished that, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is not going to be called up any more tonight.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman from Michigan will have 2 weeks to consider the bill.

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the House numbered 9 to the bill (H. R. 3587) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, and Mr. HALE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 6:48 p. m.) the House stood in recess for 15 minutes.

AFTER THE RECESS

At 7 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN].

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 9 to the bill (H. R. 3587) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes."

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—1937

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill H. R. 3587, the first deficiency appropriation bill, 1937, and call it up for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 and amendments thereto to the bill (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree thereto with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by Senate amendment numbered 9 and the amendment of the House thereto and the amendment of the Senate to such House amendment insert the following: "or of the appropriation in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936 shall be used to pay the compensation of any person, not taken from relief rolls, detailed or loaned for service in connection with any investigation or inquiry undertaken by any committee of either House of Congress under special resolution thereof. This proviso shall not take effect until 30 days after the date of the enactment of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. P. BUCHANAN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
C. A. WOODRUM,
JOHN TABER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
CARTER GLASS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for brief recognition.

If the gentlemen will recall, the original provision in the deficiency appropriation bill which the House inserted was a provision which made it unlawful for any investigating committee to take the administrative personnel from relief and use them for investigation purposes, but did not prevent the calling of people who were on the relief rolls; that is, if the investigating committee could use them as clerks, all well and good. It prohibited the use of administrative personnel and paying for it out of relief money. That went to the Senate. The Senate struck that out and inserted a provision applying to all Government departments, not limiting it to relief as the House had done, but providing that the investigating committee should have the right to draft personnel from any department, provided it filed a list with the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House, according to which body was having the investigation made, setting out the type of personnel and the salaries. That came back to the House at noon today. We amended that by striking out that part of it and providing they could use no departmental personnel after June 30 of this fiscal year.

The effect of this provision which we have agreed upon after conferences and making concessions on both sides, is that this report goes back to the original House provision which merely continues the inhibition on relief money, providing they cannot use administrative personnel paid from relief funds for these committee investigations, but gives them 30 days' grace in which to readjust their committee situations.

Mr. RANKIN. And this merely confines it to funds provided in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. Relief funds in this bill and in the previous relief act, but we will reach the other question when the next bill comes.

Mr. CONNERY. It further does not go out to every department. They could use the Federal Trade Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission, administrative employees, just as they have done.

Mr. WOODRUM. So far as this bill is concerned, but that other matter is surely coming up.

Mr. CONNERY. And in addition to that, they have 30 days for the administrative personnel on this?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. As I understood the reading of the amendment the word "hereafter", that was in line 12 of the original provision of the House, is eliminated. Has that any significance at all?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is eliminated because we gave them 30 days.

Mr. BOILEAU. It has no other significance at all?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is all.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is a conference report from the last emergency conference on the first emergency appropriation bill in this Congress.

For the last 4 years we have had nothing but emergency bills. Always, appropriated funds in the Treasury have been exhausted when we have gotten around to acting upon a bill. Just so long as this administration lasts, the emergency will last, and we will have nothing but emergency legislation.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN]. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD the privileged resolution which I offered this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives all facts which he may possess or which may be available in the Labor Department and which will show or tend to show:

(a) The number of strikebreakers, nonresidents of Flint, who have been brought into or who are now in that city for the purpose of either (1) breaking up picket lines, or (2) ejecting sit-down strikers from Fisher body plant no. 1, Fisher body plant no. 2, Chevrolet plant no. 4, or any other industrial plant in said city.

(b) That General Motors Corporation, or any other corporation, firm, or individual has, directly or indirectly, employed, brought into, or caused to come to Flint any person or persons for the purpose of (1) ousting sit-down strikers from its property, or (2) breaking up picket lines, or (3) by show of force or violence preventing any person from picketing or soliciting membership in any union.

(c) If information is furnished showing that any nonresidents of Michigan, or any person or persons who reside in Michigan outside the city of Flint other than members of the National Guard or regularly appointed peace officers, have been brought or have come into Flint for the purpose of ejecting sit-down strikers who have held possession of General Motors Corporation property, or breaking up picket lines, then, in addition, facts showing the sources from which any such person or persons have derived any compensation received by them.

(d) The total number of "company" guards or "company" police employed or on duty in Fisher Body Co. plant no. 1, Fisher Body Co. plant no. 2, and Chevrolet plant no. 4 prior to the time the same were occupied by the sit-down strikers.

(e) Like information as to the number at the present time now on duty in, or employed in guarding, said three plants.

(f) The number of such "company" guards or "company" police who are (1) residents of the city of Flint, Mich., (2) nonresidents of said city, (3) residents of the State of Michigan, (4) nonresidents of said State.

(g) In what manner such "company" guards or police are armed.

(h) A recapitulation of the vote cast at the last election held under the auspices of, or supervised by, the Automobile Labor Board, appointed by the President of the United States, in the motor industry in Michigan, showing the number of votes cast by members of unions, the number belonging to each union, the number of votes cast by nonunion employees, each proposition voted upon, and the number for and against each proposition.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, "Thou only art holy." We thank Thee for the steps that lead to the altar of prayer. We are never lost to Thy power and mercy. Thou walkest upon the sea and in the night, upon the shore and in the twilight. We praise Thee that Thou dost pity us, knowing our frame and remembering that we are dust. As love subdues the rebellious passions in human nature, may we be kept in affiliation with Thee by having the spirit of loving sacrifice. Make it Thy right, O God, to instill in our minds and hearts wise and noble purposes. Let Thy light be our light, Thy service our joy, Thy peace our inheritance. Heavenly Father, touch our lips today that they may utter no unkind word; and touch our hearts that they may feel no wrong desires, and Thine shall be the praise forever. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 56. An act for the relief of William Frank Lipps;

S. 211. An act for the relief of James J. Jordan;

S. 508. An act to authorize the award of the Purple Heart decoration to Maj. Charles H. Sprague; and

S. 766. An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the radio direction finder station, North Truro, Mass., on December 27, 1934.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. LA FOLLETTE a member on the part of the Senate of the Joint Committee on Government Organization, provided for in Public Resolution No. 4, approved February 3, 1937, vice Mr. NORRIS, resigned.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the authority conferred upon him, the Chair desires to inform the House that he did last night sign the enrolled bill of the House (H. R. 3587) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

DEBENTURES OF FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I file a privileged report (Rept. No. 208) for printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 113

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Joint Resolution 127, a joint resolution to extend for a period of 2 years the guaranty by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administration. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one-half hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE REAL ESTATE BONDHOLDERS' REORGANIZATIONS

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I submit a privileged report (Rept. No. 209) for printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 78

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations of the Seventy-fourth Congress is authorized as a committee, by subcommittee, or otherwise, to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 412 of the Seventy-third Congress, and supplemented by House Resolution 39, House Resolution 79, and House Resolution 354 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and shall have the same power and authority conferred upon it by the aforementioned resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to incorporate therein a radio speech I made last evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR OFFICE, GENEVA, SWITZERLAND

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Labor.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 104

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor is hereby directed to transmit to the House of Representatives as soon as possible the names of those persons assigned to the International Labor Office at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1936 for special tasks or temporary duty to further the cooperation of the United States with the International Labor Office in drafting and administering labor law and in research, and the cost of their transportation, housing, subsistence, and incidental expenses, and the appropriation from which such expenses were paid and the authority therefor.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the adverse report of the committee, the letter attached thereto, and the accompanying sheet showing the figures asked for by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 104), requesting the Secretary of Labor to furnish the House of Representatives the names of those persons assigned to the International Labor Office at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1936, for special tasks or temporary duty to further the cooperation of the United States with the International Labor Office in drafting and administering labor law and in research, and the cost of their transportation, housing, subsistence, and incidental expeses, and the appropriation from which such expenses were paid and the authority therefor, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The following letter from the Honorable Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, is submitted for the information of the House:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, February 6, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONNERY: I have your letter of February 4 enclosing a copy of the proposed resolution of Mr. GIFFORD relative to the assignment of persons by this Department to the International Labor Office at Geneva.

This Department has no objection at all to favorable action on the part of your committee on this resolution. The fact is that during the year 1936 there was only one person assigned to the International Labor Office at Geneva. This person was Miss Margaret Sawyer, who assisted the International Labor Office in the preparation of materials required by this Department. There was no expense connected with her trip to Geneva. She bore all transportation, housing, and subsistence costs herself.

As you no doubt know, the Department of Labor maintains an office in Geneva, which is in charge of Mr. Carter Goodrich, United States Labor Commissioner. He was appointed in September 1936 as a successor to Mr. William G. Rice, Jr., who has returned to his professorship at the Law School of the University of Wisconsin. The staff of the United States Department of Labor assigned to Geneva, together with their salaries and the expenditures of this Department for transportation, housing, subsistence, and incidental expenses is shown on the attached sheet.

Very cordially,

FRANCES PERKINS, Secretary.

Carter Goodrich, United States Labor Commissioner	$6,500.00
W. Ellison Chalmers, Assistant United States Labor Commissioner	3,800.00
Harriet Hopkinson, stenographer	1,440.00
Francois Chalut, messenger	528.00
Eugenie Goy, janitress	72.00
	12,340.00
Housing	3,650.00
Travel and subsistence	2,869.92
Rent (office)	848.57
Incidentals	1,024.94

NOTE: These expenditures were charged to appropriation no. 66891, "S. & E. International Labor Organization, Geneva, Switzerland, Department of Labor, 1936."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Labor. The committee felt that this resolution should be reported adversely because all of the information sought by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is incorporated in the report of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CORRECTION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In the matter of correcting the RECORD, as I understand it, unless it is a matter that involves the Journal or would adversely affect another Member, these minor corrections can be made by the Member going to the desk in front of the Speaker and taking it up with the reporters.

The SPEAKER. Answering the gentleman from New York, the rule is that upon insignificant or minor matters such corrections may be made at the request of the Member by submitting it to the reporter at the desk; but if it involves any substantial matter that might bring into controversy some other Member or some other controversial question, the Member must rise and ask for such correction from the floor.

FOREIGN-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 96, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as amended.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield for that purpose?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 96, with Mr. MEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think debate has come to be a useless thing insofar as this bill is concerned. The subject has been well covered. As I understand it, the bill has the unanimous support of all the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, and I believe it is safe to predict it will have the almost unanimous support of the Democratic Members of this House, which means the bill will pass by a large majority.

I am limited to a very few minutes, and at the outset of my brief remarks I want to say that I am very much in sympathy with the principle of reciprocal-trade agreements and I expect to vote for this bill, but at the same time I should like to insert for the purposes of the RECORD some figures which I think have a bearing upon perhaps the greatest industry in my district and in my part of the great Southwest, and I refer to the livestock business. I wish it distinctly understood at this time that I do not come here to criticize the work of reciprocal-trade agreements as a whole or of the President of the United States and the Secretary of State in the promulgation of the various trade agreements, but I do undertake to say from a study of the figures relating to the cattle industry of this country that the cattlemen have not had the fair and just consideration to which they are entitled. I realize we were in the midst of a terrible depression and facing a great emergency. Our foreign trade had to be increased. Our products had to find a market and our unemployed given work. I come to submit these figures from the Department of State, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Commerce, which I have copied from official records in order that I may indulge the hope that when this bill is reenacted into law, as I am sure it will be, and new treaties are negotiated or present treaties renewed, there may be full, fair, and open hearings held in connection with the livestock industry of this country to the end that they be not discriminated against.

Mr. Chairman, I come from El Paso, Tex., on the Mexican border, and I represent a cattle district more than 350 miles long, which I regard as the finest ranch country in this Nation. My district is known as the home of the Highland Herefords, and it is not necessary for me to recount to the Members of the House the struggles and reverses of the cowmen all over the country during the last few years. They have had to fight the drought. They were poorly financed. They had low prices, heavy expenses, and many of them bankrupt. They were bucking a hard game, but with that courage, tenacity, and optimism characteristic of their class they figured that with just half a chance they would come out of it all right. Their condition is now much better but there is still room for improvement. But I am not going to let the record go unchallenged that their business has been vastly benefited by reason of the existing reciprocal trade agreement entered into with Canada, and which, of course, under the favored-nation clause also applies to Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to cite figures I have taken from the official records in various Government departments in Washington, which show that in January 1935 the monthly average price on beef cattle in Chicago was 9.97 cents. In January 1936, when this trade agreement went into effect, the price was 10.65 for beef cattle; yet, due to the dumping that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] talked about and the great influx of Canadian and Mexican cattle into the stock markets of this country, the market that was 10.65 at the time the agreement took effect dropped in June to 7.84. The record will also show that for the entire calendar year 1936 the average market price of beef cattle dropped from 10.93 in the year 1935 to an average of only 9.17 in the calendar year 1936, making a difference of 1.76 cents. The official records in Washington also show that the imports of cattle weighing more than 700 pounds in the calendar year 1935 from Canada and Mexico amounted to 68,552 in number, of a value of $3,755,100. I hope the Members will particularly note these figures, because during last year under the Canadian agreement the imports jumped from 68,552 imported cattle from Canada and Mexico weighing over 700 pounds to a total of 165,409. Whereas the value of the cattle imported in 1935 was only $3,755,100, the value of imports during last year jumped to $7,545,825, which meant more than twice as many cattle with twice as much value. I am confining my figures to cattle weighing over 700 pounds that were rushed on our markets and came in direct competition with our own producers.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEARIN. Of course, when the gentleman from Texas refers to cattle of more than twice as much value will he not admit that the market price in the United States the second year of the agreement was substantially better than it was the year before?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. No. The market for last year was 1.76 less, on the average, than it was during the year 1935, which, in my judgment, conclusively proves that the imports of Mexican and Canadian value were great, in spite of the drought and in spite of adverse conditions that hammered down the market to that very low point in the summer of 1936, as mentioned by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. Those Mexican and Canadian cattle were dumped on our markets in competition with that of our own cattlemen and necessarily lowered the market from what it would have been without all these foreign cattle. Any cattle imported ought to be brought in on a monthly or weekly basis of some sort, and in bringing in great trainloads of cattle to St. Paul or Chicago, Los Angeles, Portland, Kansas City, or Fort Worth it results in a great reduction in the normal price of American beef cattle. The imports ought to be staggered. The cowman in my country who ships a trainload of cattle to market has a right to expect that he will receive the fair price shown by market quotations at the time he ships. He cannot meet the competition and will be forced to accept a sacrifice price if on the day his cattle arrive at market there are several trains of foreign cattle. There is naturally a big break in the market. That is not fair to our American cattlemen and ought to be stopped.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman be so good as to put in his remarks the total loss sustained by the American cattle growers as a result of the treaty the gentleman is referring to?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I do not know that I can do that, but these figures speak for themselves, and in addition to the great increase of imports from Canada and Mexico during the last year, which necessarily had the effect of reducing the price of these cattle, let me quote you the figures which I have taken from the Department of Commerce relative to the imports of canned beef from Uruguay, Argentina, Paraguay, and Brazil.

In 1934 we imported 46,673,095 pounds of canned beef of the value of $3,015,675.

In 1935 we imported 76,262,342 pounds of canned beef from those countries, with a value of $5,564,665, but last year, and since the Canadian agreement went into effect, the imports of canned beef alone jumped to 87,763,815 pounds, which would be equivalent to about 600,000 head of cattle, and with a value of $8,384,100. There is a large and growing increase in these imports each year.

On top of all this and in spite of the protest of the American Live Stock Association, in spite of the protest of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, in spite of the protest of every cattle organization in the South and West that ought to know what they are talking about, because they are sincere, patriotic men who know when their business suffers, it is now proposed to ratify a convention or treaty with Argentina by which cattle from the foot-and-mouth disease infected area of Argentina will come into this country in addition to the trouble they have already had in connection with increased imports and lowered prices. I was glad to see from the RECORD, on page 1019, where the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] asked the chairman of this great committee [Mr. DOUGHTON] if there was to be any relaxation of the present sanitary regulations, and the latter replied, "Oh, certainly not; certainly not."

I know something about the foot-and-mouth epidemic of a few years ago, which was directly traceable to infection from Argentina and which brought about the present regulations. The cattle industry owes Dr. John R. Mohler, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, a debt they can never pay for the splendid work he did in this connection. In the last foot-and-mouth epidemic 22 States were affected, resulting in the loss of 172,222 head of cattle of a value of $5,865,720. In my own State of Texas 8,473 cattle had to be slaughtered, which had an appraised value of more than $300,000. That treaty ought not to be ratified and our cattlemen subjected to the hazard of another epidemic and the importation of still more meat that will come into competition with our own products.

I am not a free-trader. I am not for a high protective tariff. I think the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act did more to destroy our foreign trade and bring about our recent terrible depression than any legislation ever passed by this body. We must have a market for our surplus products. We must buy from the other fellow before he can buy from us. We must provide employment for our people before they can buy from our farmers and ranchers. The principle underlying these agreements is absolutely sound. There is no question about business being better, and the reciprocal-trade policy of this administration has contributed much to that end, and I give same my unqualified support. Our manufacturers, and especially those selling machinery, automobiles, refrigerators, radios, and so forth, have done a big business under this particular agreement. This helped our industries and put many men back to work. An examination of the schedules under the Canadian agreement will show that nearly every line of business except the livestock industry profited by it. On the whole, I think this agreement, like perhaps all of them, was a good thing for the country. Something of the kind had to be done if we were to recover our lost markets.

My complaint, if it may be called that, is that the cattlemen did not have the consideration to which they were entitled. In short, they were out-traded. There is no finer or fairer class of people in the Nation. They have endured much. They are big-hearted and generous, but I do not want to see them discriminated against in order to help some other industry. They are not out of the woods yet, although their prices are better than they were a few years ago. Many of them owe much money and there are many hazards and hardships connected with their business. They do not want the best of it—they just want an even break.
